Mr. Powers. I want to ask the gentleman two or three questions, so that I may be better able to vote intelligently on the bill.

Mr. Powers. How many years does it show they were paying this extra duty of 15 per cent?

Answer. Four years.
Mr. Powers. And these men paid the duty?

Answer. Yes, sir.
Mr. Powers. The duty was added to the cost?

Answer. I can not tell you that.
Mr. Powers. And they used the steel and manufactured it, and we poor fellows paid the price, and so did the people all over the country?

He was again interrupted by his Republican friend, and Mr. Powers in reply said:

I do not know if the gentleman gets my idea. If the importer adds the price of duty to the article, the consumer has to pay that additional price, and so the consumer pays the duty, and not the importer.

Then, another Republican Member exclaimed:

That is good Democratic doctrine.

Now, here is the point of my reference. Mr. Powers, not the least disconcerted, instantly replied:

It is a pretty fair doctrine. I say that the consumer pays the additional duty if he can not buy it at a less rate in the market.

He was known at that time on both sides of the House as a "standpatter," Mr. Speaker; but I say he had a keen sense of justice, and with both heart and head decided matters, particularly when they reached down to the fireside of the masses and home building in this country.

He was as loyal to his party and to party creed in a purely partisan contest as any man, I think, in Congress, but fostered his own judgment and individuality.

If you will recur to the hearings of the Banking and Currency Committee you will discover, though rich in years and a sick man, that he was almost regularly present and took an active and inquisitive part in the grave and great consideration that his mature judgment and experience.

was given the currency question by that committee during the last past session of Congress.

He was an indulgent husband. It was always a sunny day and starry night to him when his wife and children adorned his presence here in Washington. I have seen him meet them with tenderness and pride. I have seen him pained to part with the little ones as they returned to school. These scenes were noticeable, beautiful, and refining.

It is well that he lived. He fought life's battle well.

LLEWELLYN POWERS was most useful to home, to State, and to the Republic.

Mr. Speaker, his motto must have been, as ours should be, "Country, God, and truth."

Mr. COLE. Mr. Speaker, I am grateful indeed for the opportunity of paying tribute to the memory of Governor Powers. It was my good fortune to serve with him on the Territories Committee, and I early formed a high opinion of his ability and character. His consideration for the rights of new Members soon won for him a permanent place in their esteem.

Governor Powers was a product of the State of Maine; and is truly typical of the manhood of that great Commonwealth.

Maine's contribution to the grandeur of this Republic is universally recognized. Her citizens have ever fought for the triumph of right. Her statesmen had championed with commanding power the cause of human freedom. The patriotism of her people is an imposing fact in the Nation's history. the judgment of her sister States, Maine stands for manhoodpure, noble, and exalted.

Governor Powers in both private and public life has been true to the best traditions of his native State.

Nature bequeathed to him rare endowments of heart and mind. These were his sole reliance in life's contest. Fortunate is he so richly endowed of resources so royal. He carved out his own career unassisted. He conquered by his courage, and through years of toil succeeded. Emerson says:

Sculpture in its truest sense is history; and the sculptor chisels character from marble. Every trait recorded by the artist is first seen in real life.

The master hand of an unseen Sculptor carves character in the human form and face. With strict fidelity, true to each trait the lines are drawn. We have noted the potency of that truth in him whose memory we honor. The very form and expression of his face, deep furrowed with thought and care, displays great strength and character. Resistance to circumstance, true measure of man's worth, is recorded there. The austere virtues by Bryant to purest gold compared were fadelessly empressed. Resolution was written there by an invincible will. Deep engraven was his determination to achieve high purposes. mark of dishonor marred its rugged grandeur. There is no line typifying failure.

High intelligence, strict integrity, and imposing personality are qualities which the public seldom fail to recognize. He was chosen chief executive of the State of Maine. His name stands undimmed in that galaxy of magnificent men. He came with exceptional equipment to the discharge of duty as a national lawmaker. Laurels gathered in other fields of endeavor are of little note in this House. Here is found equality of merit. Demonstrated capacity to do is the only rule of recognition. The pretender is denied preferment. This unyielding rule proved no bar to his progress. He had measured every upward step in life by that same standard. All his time and talent were devoted to his work. He comprehended the broader questions of national policy, but neglected not the trying details of lesser concerns. He was faithful in all things; negligent in none. He was sound in judgment, safe in council, fearless in action. The character of his services in the House of Representatives has won for him the respect and admiration of his fellow-Members, and entitles him to enduring remembrance as a faithful and capable public servant. His life is a splendid illustration of the possibilities of young American manhood. Under our system of free institutions there are no heights of human achievement to which he may not aspire.

So near is grandeur to our dust, So near is God to man, When Duty whispers low, "Thou must," The youth replies, "I can!"

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, Llewellyn Powers was my friend. We were associated in legislative work upon the Committee on the Territories, and in his service upon that committee he impressed upon its legislation the stamp of He was born in Maine in 1836, and he loved the soil of his native State. His name will always have a place among Maine's most distinguished men, and to be among Maine's distinguished men is high honor.

He was county attorney, collector of customs, member of the Maine legislature, speaker of the Maine house of representatives, governor, and Representative in Congress.

With him faculty went with opportunity, and he was what the world calls a successful man—successful in business, successful in politics.

Whatever his hand found to do, he did it with his might, but at last his health failed, and one day he bade me good-by, stood for a moment watching reflectively the business of a busy session, which I think he had a premonition he was quitting forever, then went away out of it all.

The House of Representatives, to which he first came in 1876, and then again in 1901 to serve until his death, with its shifting membership, its varying types, its ambitions, and its failures, is not only representative politically and socially of our civilization, but it is a stage, typical of human life, across which some pass quickly, upon which some few linger, but from which most depart having accomplished little of what they hoped for.

Here, as elsewhere, some showy talent frequently succeeds, while sober diligence seldom receives its due reward.

There are waits between acts; administrations come and go; new messages arrive from new Presidents; but the curtain is never finally rung down, and "when you and I behind the veil have passed," others will crowd upon our footsteps.

Every man arrives here more or less a legislative experiment, and any dream that he may have had about his work holding his name forever above "the flood of years" suffers a change.

His identity becomes merged with that of many others in connection with some policy which may or may not survive to become a part of history on which the ayes and noes were called.

Down on the Avenue a blear-eyed old man on sunshiny days sits in front of his secondhand book store, smoking his pipe, and waiting while the feculent dust of the street blows in, and we go by on our way to the Capitol on the hill to help to make more history to be sold at secondhand.

And some men have made great noise and vociferation here on the hill; some have even become famous, but the dust of the street will after a time blow over their works sold at second-hand, just as it has blown over the works of thousands who have gone before them.

But the curtain is never finally rung down here. When it is, there will be an end of popular government.

Out of the stress and rush and rivalry of this scene LLEWELLYN POWERS went the way of all flesh—prince, peasant, harlequin, and sage—beckened by a hooded figure in the wings.

He had finished his work. Whether he was satisfied with it or not depends upon his ideals.

Few men are satisfied with what they accomplish. George Frederick Watts spoke of his paintings as "only studies for the picture that might have been."

Bacon says:

endeavor.

"If a man meditate much upon the universal frame of nature, the earth with men upon it—the divineness of the soul excepted—will not seem much other than an ant hill, where some ants carry corn and some carry their young, and all go to and fro, a little heap of dust."

and fro, a little heap of dust."

Bacon's exception—"the divineness of the soul"—is the only element that makes the ant heap explainable.

If the reason of life is that life shall reproduce itself, run its short course, and then die, then life is a tragedy, and the greater the intelligence the greater the tragedy.

The acquisition of knowledge, the development of character under discipline of circumstance only serve to educate a keener consciousness of the stinginess of happiness and the opulence of misery.

But the soul idea gives purpose to existence and dignity to effort.

"No philosophy will ever satisfy men which can not throw a plank across the grave."

If the hope of continued, conscious existence after death ever fades out of humanity, then the light will have gone out of the world; the deepest inspiration to right living will have gone out of human conduct, and human existence will have become a meaningless tragedy.

With that hope we are on a journey toward superlative issues.

With that hope we are as much in eternity now as we ever shall be, and every day is a part of the evolution of a personality being trained for a higher destiny.

That hope transforms Bacon's ant heap and glorifies human Mr. Bryce, in his American Commonwealth, says:

"Sometimes, standing in the midst of a great American Commonwealth, one is startled by the thought of what might befall this huge yet delicate fabric of laws and commerce and social institutions were the foundations it has rested on to crumble away. Suppose that all these men ceased to believe there was any power above them, any future before them, anything in heaven or earth but what their senses told them of."

LLEWELLYN Powers performed his duty to his State and to the Nation loyally and honestly. He was courageous, manly, loyal in his friendships, strong in his likes, strong in his dislikes, and never a waverer. He had keen zest in the pursuit of his business, the practice of his profession, and the performance of his political and official duties.

He died a manly, upright man who had used the talents given him to the best of his ability.

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me most fitting that when the scenes of strife and confusion which usually fill this Chamber have been succeeded by the Sabbath quiet we should put aside the ordinary activities and thoughts of the world and spend a little time in meditating upon the virtues and conduct of those of our colleagues who have penetrated the great beyond.

The great Giver of Life has so ordered things that after the allotted years that man spends in the activities and strife of this world he should pass on to another state of existence, where, no doubt, he will find new conditions and new opportunities for the exercise of all those powers which his schooling in this world has developed. Our fellow-laborer, Lewellyn Powers, after a life of great activity and usefulness in business and the public service, has made this change. We can not penetrate the veil and discover what his present condition may be. It only remains for us to think of and talk over his useful life and derive such lessons and strength from it as we may.

When I entered the Fifty-ninth Congress, I at once came into close relationship with Llewellyn Powers as a member of the Committee on Banking and Currency, of which he also was an old and active member. I should say that the strongest elements in his character were his absolute independence, his self-reliance, his boldness and fearlessness in defending those things that he conceived to be right and for the highest interests of his country, and attacking fiercely those things that he judged wrong or ill advised.

But the legislative warfare of Mr. Powers was never personal; it never had any bitterness in it. While he respected the opinions of his fellows, while he freely yielded to them the same right of individual judgment and action which he claimed for himself, he did his own thinking; he made up his mind without much reference to the opinions of his fellows. After careful research and investigation, after informing himself as thoroughly as circumstances would permit, and having made up his mind upon any matter, he was like adamant; he could not be moved nor swerved from his purpose to be loyal to his own convictions by personal considerations, selfish suggestions, or any ulterior motive whatever. For these characteristics in his life I admired LLEWELLYN Powers while he was among us; I revere his memory now that he has passed from us, and I am glad of this opportunity to testify to my appreciation of his strength as a legislator, to his strict honesty, and his unfailing courtesy to all his brother Members of this House.

The people of his district evidently knew of his sterling characteristics, appreciated his honesty and unselfish devotion to their interests, and his character as a man at their full value, and kept him here many years as their Representative. His service in this House has honored them as well as himself, and in his death the House has lost one of its most conscientious, industrious, and able Members, his district a Representative of the first order, and his country a statesman and patriot.

Mr. Powers was not what would be called a religious man. His mind was of that practical turn which was interested in and busied itself with all the business and material activities of life; but he had a simple, child-like trust, and I have no doubt that as he went down into the dark valley he could say in truth with the great poet of humanity,

I know not where His islands lift Their fronded palms in air; I only know I can not drift Beyond His love and care.

If it be given to those who have entered the great beyond to have memory of the deeds done in the body and to know of the results of the life they led here, surely satisfaction must fill the heart of our brother in the realms above when he thinks of the useful and stainless life which he led in this world. Let us emulate his virtues; and while recognizing that like all humanity he had his frailties and failings, we can not do better than to follow in his footsteps in our service in this Chamber, and strive as he strove, with singleness of heart, to uphold that which is right, to fight with courage and persistence against that which is wrong in legislation, and to do our part in bringing the country which we all love up to a full realization of its highest ideals.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. Speaker, Llewellyn Powers was the scion of a martial race. Beneath the gentleness of his mien, the modesty of his manner, there was easily discernible the stalwart strength and the unfaltering courage that under other circumstances would have made a warrior.

The elements So mix'd in him, that Nature might stand up And say to all the world, "This was a man!"

And the elements were so mixed as not only to make a model man, but a typical legislator. He came of a family of lawyers, too. It was not necessary to read his biography to know that LLEWELLYN POWERS was not only a jurist, but that he possessed fundamentally a judicial mind, clear, lucid, strong, practical. It was natural that such a man should become a lawmaker. It was fortunate for his people that he was so long intrusted with the great responsibilities which he discharged with such signal fidelity.

At this time we can look back over the career of this remarkable man with peculiar pleasure and peculiar reverence. He possessed that rare quality that Gibbon has aptly portrayed in Antoninus Pius—equanimity. It is necessary in a lawmaker, it is essential to a successful executive. This man did not seek the limelight. He was in no sense spectacular. Appreciating and deserving the confidence of the people, he sought their sober approval rather than their hilarious applause. He was not deterred by popular clamor. He was not intoxicated by fulsome praise. These qualities made him a great governor.

The phenomenal, the unprecedented majority which he received when a candidate for that high office indicated the confidence of his people, their unalterable faith in a man whom they had known so long and whom they had tried in so many, so varied, and responsible positions. And from my knowledge of the legislator and the man, it is with peculiar pleasure that I can contemplate him as the chief executive of a great Commonwealth. Fearless, possessing that serene courage that is not even conscious of danger, is not even conscious of its own fearlessness, any more than a saintly woman thinks of her sinlessness or virtue, it was a matter of course; firm as adamant, yet without stubbornness, modest, willing to hear, possessing that humility that always accompanies deep thought and great learning.

A good listener, conscious of his own fallibility, careful, considerate, patient in research, he at last reached his own conclusion; and when convinced of the rectitude and the wisdom of his action, no consideration of interest or fear could move him. There was a clamor in his own State, as there is clamor in every State when we stand upon the precipitous brink of war, and he turned a deaf ear to his critics, and then secured the end for which they loudly protested by the voluntary sacrifice of his private fortune.

He came into this House rich in honor and in experience. Without seeking the position, he discharged its duties with patience, with diligence, and with marked ability.

Back again to the practice of the great profession that he loved and honored he displayed his signal disinterestedness, his earnest desire to serve his people and do their bidding. Having been a Member of Congress, he became again a member of the state legislature. It is a simple incident, but it is a strong light upon character. I know nothing that indicates to my mind more conclusively the self-abnegating patriotism of Thomas Jefferson than his willingness, his continual willingness, whenever the exigencies of the occasion or his sense of duty demanded, to lay aside the so-called "high honors" that encircle the brow of a man who has been chosen by his constituency to represent them in this Chamber, and to return to what by many are considered the smaller duties and the modest emoluments of a member of the state legislature.

He did it because he believed it was best for his State; and it is a pity, Mr. Speaker, it is to be regretted that more men rich in experience, in honor, beyond even the suspicion of personal ambition, do not return to their state legislatures and give to those bodies the benefit of splendid talents and long experience. Were it done, this atrophying of the authority and the power of the States, this failure of the state governments to exercise all the power and the authority that was conferred upon them by the Constitution, to preserve intact and in full their autonomy and their equilibrium in this constellation of States called the "Federal Government," would not be so manifest or so universally lamented.

In the state legislature, as in the Federal Congress, the modest work of Illewellyn Powers was soon recognized. He was made speaker and, as I have said, governor.

There is another characteristic of this man which will be long remembered, and remembered most pleasantly, not by those who simply hear his name on the tongue of rumor, or from the trump of fame, but those who are near to him. His humanity is a precious heritage to friends and to kindred. He was a great combination of head and heart. Humanity marked every consideration. He was strong, but he was not stern or cruel. It was a strange mixture of strength and gentleness. He felt for the fallen.

He sought to lift the burden from the bowed back of toil, to alleviate pain, and even the criminal he spared, so far as his duty to the State and the safety of society would permit.

Mr. Powers abhorred capital punishment. He hesitated to take human life wherever it was found. He possessed that same humanity, that feeling for a brother's wrong as though that brother were his own, although they were only members of the same great family, and the brother was a stranger, bound to him by no bond of blood or creed or interest. At a time when this Nation was divided against itself, when "hate raged to flesh its fangs in hostile hearts" he won the admiration of his foes.

He was not sectional. He was not narrow. To be sectional and to be narrow is, in a sense, Mr. Speaker, to be cruel. The secret of the liberality of his mind is to be found in the goodness and tenderness of his great heart.

This brave, truthful, serene, modest, heroic man faced the grim destroyer, faced the untold mysteries of the beyond, and embarked upon that sea whose nether shores are eternity, with the same courage, with the same conscientiousness of his rectitude with which he met the duties of the day, and we have every reason to believe that he, upon his awakening, we know not where or how, shall still, void of fear and reproach, adorn a brighter and a higher and a happier sphere.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Speaker, I want to speak only of my personal relationship with Mr. Powers and the development of his character as it revealed itself to me in my committee. He came onto the Committee on Banking and Currency immediately after his entrance into Congress. For about eight years we sat together. I well recall the impression that he first made upon me—that of a rather surly and stubborn man. As time went on I discovered that he was always present at meetings, and often when there were no committee meetings. This brought us into frequent companionship. We had many long conversations, and it developed into a sort of personal relationship. I was not, of course, long in finding out that he was a man of thorough education, indeed, of ripe learning; and that he was not merely a student and scholar, of which he often gave evidence by quotations from the classics, but a business man of wide experience and rare acumen. He told me at one time that he had continued to study the classics long after he had finished his college course, which was evidenced by these frequent recitals.

But LLEWELLYN POWERS was a far better thinker than he was a student. He was a man of logical mind, and a man of such comprehensive mental grasp that he could keep the whole array of facts before him and arrive at conclusions which he could strongly defend. He was a man of intellectual honesty. He never deceived himself by counting an immaterial fact of greater value or force than it ought to have.

He had a highly judicial mind and would have made a great judge. His mind was keen, discriminating, just. He was a man of perfect composure, of balance of mind, and in any discussion, however intense it became, he never seemed to lose the sense of fairness to his fellows; and whenever in the course of discussion he found that some one disclosed a larger view and more thorough study, he had that breadth of view and generosity of consideration to waive his own impressions in favor of what he believed was the more thorough understanding of his opponent.

I learned to think of him as a sweet character; not a single stinging word ever dropped from his tongue, and yet he was always strong, firm, steadfast, and persistent in the conclusions to which he had arrived after study and thoughtful deliberation.

I well remember one instance that was so peculiarly characteristic of his fair-mindedness. Although he had been for years of a certain opinion upon a given question—indeed, persistent in his defense of it, unvarying in the complexion of his view with regard to it, after a restatement of the case, even in the very last session of Congress and upon one of the very last days that he appeared in our committee, he referred to the restatement with a degree of interest that was marked in himfor he never showed that he was moved to any great degree—that he was deeply impressed, and virtually changed his attitude, saying:

I have believed this all my life, but I have come to the conclusion that I have been old-fogyish with regard to it.

And so it was with him always.

He was simple, he was true, he was intellectually honest, he was self-respecting, he was self-reliant. He was deeply and profoundly a patriotic man, as I understand it. As I came to know him thoroughly and comprehended him, I discovered he was as proud of our country as any man I ever knew. He was proud of Maine; he was proud of the many great men Maine had produced; he was proud of the fact that he was one of a family that had made its name respected; he was proud of the county in which he lived, and his little town. Often did he discourse upon the great county of Aroostook and of what it produced. He was not only proud of the family of which he was one of the sons, but he was proud of his own children.

The life of LLEWELLYN POWERS is typical of the best citizenship we have in this country. He was essentially self-made. Always devoted to every public duty, he was equally devoted to his private affairs. There was no detail so small or any consideration so slight in matters of legislation as ever to be brushed aside with indifference; and to him it came to be our invariable habit in our committee to look when discussing a close question and hunting for exact expressions for precise legislative language. This was because he had not only great ability and training, but because we could rely upon his intel-

So that, as time went on, the man that I first looked upon as stubborn became simply a great, strong character, mingled, as has been happily said, with a peculiar simplicity and sweetness. I admired him; I liked him; and I confess to a feeling that I have for few men. I came toward the last years of my association with Llewellyn Powers to hold him in affection. After all, when you say that a man is intellectually honest—and so define character—it is, indeed, all there is of us. Character is a thing that is left in the world to impress the force of a human soul on those who come after us. It is only a possibility that as we pass away from the world it may have been improved, made a little better, a little more advanced, lifted a trifle above the plane it was when the soul entered. But certain it is there was nothing in the career of Llewellyn Powers that his hand ever touched, that his mind ever recast, that was not in a very marked degree improved and embellished by the fact that his mind had come in contact with it. And so I can fittingly recall this beautiful verse:

And when the stream Which overflowed the soul was passed away, A consciousness remained that it had left Deposited upon the silent shore Of memory images and precious thoughts That shall not die, and can not be destroyed.

[Mr. LLOYD addressed the House. See Appendix.]

Mr. SWASEY. Mr. Speaker, I had not intended to occupy any time in this memorial service, for I knew that my colleagues from Maine were more intimately acquainted with the life of Congressman and ex-Governor Powers than I was. Our homes were hundreds of miles apart, and I had no acquaintance with him during his early life, except what I gained through communication with his friends. Thirty-five years ago last January at our state capitol, at the inauguration of Hon. Nelson Dingley as governor of our State, was the first time, as I now remember, that I ever met LLEWELLYN POWERS. For three consecutive years in the legislature of Maine I served with him, and we were assigned to many of the joint and all of the special committees of those legislatures. It was an important period in Maine's legislation. There were great and beneficial reforms inaugurated under Governor Dingley. It was the first time that there had been a suggestion of taxation of public service corporations in our State. Important investigations into the previous financial management of our State were started.

The revision of our state constitution was another of the important measures. Under the wise leadership of Hon. Nelson Dingley, who served so many years with such honor and distinction in this great body, we wrought great changes in our legislation, and in all Mr. Powers took an active leading part. Through the service upon those committees, associated as I was with Governor Powers, I early learned that he was, as has been said here repeatedly, an able lawyer, a man of wide information, a man of honest purpose and of strong convictions. His record is the best testimony that can be presented as to his life work in his home State, and the best evidence of the confidence reposed in him by the people who knew him best. After his service in the legislature and his further more intimate acquaintance with the people of our State, the record of the immense majority by which he was chosen our chief executive is more to his credit, more evidence of the qualities and characteristics that brought him success than any words I can offer.

But, Mr. Speaker, I have been highly pleased, yea, eminently gratified to find that Llewellyn Powers, after he had received all the honor that it was possible for his district and his State to confer upon him in a political sense, received here in this larger field of activity the implicit confidence and the large respect of the Members of this body, as evidenced by these eulogies which, now that he has passed through the valley of the shadow, have been so earnestly, honestly, and eloquently spoken on this occasion.

In behalf of his constituency, in behalf of the sovereign people of Maine who had honored him again and again, I want to thank the Members of this House for their words of comfort to his family and friends, and for the honor to all who have been interested in the great public career of LLEWELYN POWERS.

I want to thank the speakers further for what they have said in honor and remembrance of those whom we have sent from that State, situated as it is in the northeast corner of this great Union. It is unimportant, perhaps, in some respects, compared with other States of the Union, but I am proud to realize that, though small and unimportant, our people have been able to contribute in so large a measure to the growth, development, and glory of the American Republic.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members who desire to do so may have leave within the next twenty days to print remarks on the life, character, and services of the late Representative Powers.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

ADJOURNMENT.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In accordance with the resolutions already agreed to, and as a further mark of respect to our deceased colleague, this House stands adjourned until to-morrow at 12 o'clock noon.

Accordingly (at 1 o'clock and 43 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT presented a joint resolution of the legislature of the State of Washington, in favor of the removal of the duty on grain bags, which was referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Senate joint memorial 4. By Senator Cox.

To the honorable Senate and House of Representatives in Congress assembled:

Whereas the raising of wheat and other grain crops is one of the principal industries of the States along the Pacific coast, and one of the principal sources of their wealth; and

Whereas, owing to the shipping conditions existing upon the Pacific coast, it is necessary that all wheat and other grains should be sacked by the grower in jute bags; and

Whereas the expense of such bags is a very heavy item in the cost of growing, harvesting, and disposing of wheat and grain products, the farmers of Washington alone paying out annually almost $1,500,000 for such bags; and

Whereas there is at the present time a duty imposed upon grain bags which adds materially to the cost of the same to the farmer, greatly increasing the burden upon him and upon the consumer over what it would be if grain bags were admitted free of duty; and

Whereas there is in the United States about one factory engaged in the manufacture of jute bags for grain products, and that is a small concern which can not manufacture a tithe of the grain bags required for handling the crops of the State of Washington alone: Now therefore be it for handling the crops of the State of Washington alone: Now therefore be it Resolved by the senate of the State of Washington (the house concurring). That it would be of inestimable benefit to the farmers of the Pacific Coast States, and particularly of the State of Washington, that the duty upon grain bags be removed; that the removal of the duty upon jute and grain bags would not be of detriment to any established or large industry; and the sole effect of the removal of the duty would be to lessen the already heavy burden upon the farmer in the marketing of his grain, and tend to reduce the cost of wheat and other grains to the producer; and therefore that such duty should be removed at the earliest possible moment.

Resolved further, That a copy of this resolution be forthwith transmitted to the Senators from the State of Washington, and to each Congressman from the State of Washington, also to each member of the Ways and Means Committee of the House of Representatives, for their use in endeavoring to secure the removal of the duty referred to.

Passed by the senate January 13, 1909.

Mr. OWEN presented a concurrent resolution of the legislature of Oklahoma, which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

House concurrent resolution 11. By Turner.

Memorializing Congress to add to Platt National Park, at Sulphur Springs, Okla., the three portions of the Sulphur town site lying south of said park.

Be it resolved by the house of representatives (the senate concurring therein), That

Whereas in the establishment of Platt National Park the United States has separated three different parcels of the Sulphur town site, lying south of the park, from the main part of the town site, so that these properties are taxed for water works, sewers, and lights, from which taxation they receive no benefits: Therefore be it

Resolved, That Congress be respectfully requested, as a matter of simple justice, to add to Platt National Park the three portions of the Sulphur town site lying south of said park, and that copies of this resolution be sent to each member of the Oklahoma delegation in Congress.

House concurrent resolution 5. By Jahn.

House concurrent resolution 5. By Jahn.

Memorializing the Congress of the United States for a national law protecting migratory game birds against extinction.

Whereas there are divers birds and wild fowl or birds—namely, geese, ducks, brant, swans, wild pigeons, doves, plover, snipe, woodcock, cranes, and probably other varieties, commonly known as "game birds" and migratory in their habits—some now nearly exterminated and others, as in the case of the wild pigeon, apparently already totally extinct; and

Whereas the natural migratory habit of these wild fowl (or game birds) makes a proposition to in any manner protect them necessarily an interstate effort; and

Whereas it is neither possible nor feasible for one State to effectually or successfully protect them as in this resolution contemplated: Therefore be it

Resolved by the house of representatives of the second legislature of the State of Oklahoma (the senate concurring herein). That the Congress of the United States be, and hereby is, memorialized and petitioned to pass an act protecting the game herein mentioned against slaughter or molestation of any kind while passing through or over, or through and over, those of the United States in their ordinary and natural route to and from their breeding places during their seasons of hatching and breeding, or in such other manner as they in their wisdom may deem best, in accord with the spirit and intent of this resolution.

PRESIDENTIAL SUCCESSION.

Mr. BACON. I am instructed by the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. R. 102) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States respecting the succession to the Presidency in certain cases, to report it favorably without amendment. As it is short and relates to a matter of general interest, I ask that the joint resolution may be read in order that it may go into the RECORD, where all can see it who desire to examine it.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled (two-thirds of each House concurring therein), That the following amendment to the Constitution of the United States be proposed for ratification by the legislatures in the several States, which when ratified by legislatures in three-fourths of the United States, shall be valid as a part of the Constitution, viz:

"ARTICLE XVI.

"In all cases not provided for by Article II, clause 5, of the Constitu-tion where there is no person entitled to discharge the duties of the office of the President, the same shall devolve upon the Vice-President. The Congress may by law provide for the case where there is no person entitled to hold the office of President or Vice-President, declaring what officer shall then act as President, and such officer shall act accordingly until the disability shall be removed or a President shall be elected."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be placed on the calendar.

Mr. BACON. I ask that the fifth clause of Article II of the Constitution, which shows the present state of the law, may be published in the RECORD, in order that the law as it now stands may appear, and also the necessity for such a law as is proposed to be enacted.

There being no objection, the fifth clause of Article II of the Constitution was ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

In case of the removal of the President from office, or of his death, resignation, or inability to discharge the powers and duties of the said office, the same shall devolve on the Vice-President, and the Congress may by law provide for the case of removal, death, resignation or inability, both of the President and Vice-President, declaring what officer shall then act as President, and such officer shall act accordingly, until the disability be removed, or a President shall be elected.

AMOUNTS DUE UNDER SUPREME COURT DECISIONS.

Mr. LODGE submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 270), which was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to:

which was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to:

*Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby directed to report at his earliest convenience to the Senate, if the following amounts opposite the respective names, or if not these, what amounts, if any, are due under the decisions of the Supreme Court in the cases of Swift & Co. v. REPAIRS OF BATTLE SHIPS.

Mr. CLAY. I submit a resolution and ask for its immediate consideration.

The resolution (S. Res. 272) was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, directed to transmit to the Senate the amount of money spent since May 13, 1908, on repairing the Brooklyn, the San Francisco, the Baltimore, the Alabama, the lowa, the Kearsarge, the Kentucky, the Maine, the Adder, the Bennington, the Grampus, the Moccasin, the Pike, the Paul Jones, the Nicholson, the O'Brien, the Narkeeta, and the Holland, said report to show the sum expended on each of said vessels, when and where said repairs were made; and he is also directed to inform the Senate about what sum is required annually to keep in repair and in good condition a first-class battle ship. He is also directed to forward to the Senate the sum expended for coal during the last fiscal year for the operation of ships, and, as far as practicable, the prices paid for coal and the names of the person or persons or corporations from whom coal was purchased.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present

consideration of the resolution?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I wish to ask the Senator presenting the resolution how many of the ships named, if any, were included in the list of ships given by the general board as obsolete? Does the Senator know?

Mr. CLAY. I do not. I will say to the Senator that during the last session of Congress those ships were mentioned in the naval appropriation bill and we specified the amount that was to be used for the purpose of repairing the ships. The to amount, according to my recollection, was about $7,000,000. think most of those ships during the last six or eight months have been out on the ocean. I doubt if that much money has been spent for their repair. I am not advised in regard to the matter.

I observe that the naval appropriation bill, as it passed the House, carries between $8,000,000 and $9,000,000 for the same purpose in a lump sum.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Naming the ships?

Mr. CLAY. The last naval appropriation act carried between $7,000,000 and $8,000,000 for the purpose of making these repairs, specifying the amount that was to be spent upon each ship. My purpose in introducing the resolution is to ascertain how much of that sum was used in repairing these identical ships last year.

For some reason the naval appropriation bill as it passed the House simply carries a lump sum of between $8,000,000 and $9,000,000, and out of that lump sum the Navy Department is authorized to make repairs. I know we had considerable contention in regard to these repairs during the consideration of the naval appropriation bill at the last session of Congress, and my recollection is that one or two items were cut down between two and three hundred thousand dollars.

My purpose in submitting the resolution is to find out how much was utilized in repairing each of these ships appropriated for during the last session of Congress.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. HALE. I do not know, Mr. President, that there is any objection to the Senator having the resolution passed and getting these facts about repairs. It will be a duplication of what this already been sent in, especially about the larger vessels.

Three years ago Congress put on the naval appropriation bill a very valuable and comprehensive measure, which required the department in every case of a naval ship needing repairs exceeding in amount $200,000 to report beforehand to Congress each vessel and the amount the department believed to be necessary for repairs.

The measure did not stop there, but it went further and provided that no appropriation should be made for repairs for vessels covered by the provision except in detail after the appropriation had been recommended by the department. We are acting under that provision now.

If the Senator will look over the bill as passed by the House, he will find that while small appropriations for small vessels, which are of not much account in the aggregate, are covered by a general clause, the large repairs upon the big ships are menfioned in detail.

The committee in examining the bill have found a clause in it that might be construed as taking the place of the very valuable provision to which I have referred, and have recommended that it be stricken out, so that the department will not be allowed to depart from the rule we laid out by that, I think, very useful provision, which is a part not of a law running with the appropriations, but it is a permanent law.

If the Senator wants the information especially in regard to these particular vessels, there is no objection to it. He will get it, I have no doubt, very quickly.

Mr. CLAY. The Senator remembers that during the last session of Congress the question came up in regard to the amount of repairs for naval vessels. It is my recollection that there was one ship for repairs to which $625,000 was asked, and but three days before we considered that bill an estimate had been made of $250,000. A subsequent estimate came to the Senate while we were considering the bill on the floor, and the Senator from Maine consented that the item for $625,000 should be stricken out and $225,000 inserted in lieu thereof.

Mr. HALE. I remember the case.

Mr. CLAY. It is difficult for me to understand how we spent on the identical ships named in this resolution $7,000,000 for repairs during the last year when most of them were on the ocean away from home.

I am not criticising the Committee on Naval Affairs. As I understand, the Committee on Naval Affairs as yet have not completed the consideration of the naval appropriation bill. was simply referring to the bill as it came to the Senate from the other House. I think the resolution can not do any possible harm and may do some good.

Mr. HALE. No; it will do no harm. The Senator will be less surprised at the extent of the repairs for these big ships when we get the results and estimates that will be made when the fleet, which is circumnavigating the globe, is overhauled and repaired. He will find then what we are all finding out, that the expenses of a big battle ship just begin when we build her and pay for her.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Maine yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. HALE. Certainly.
Mr. BACON. I think the Senator will remember that when the fleet started on the cruise around the world, the suggestion was made that it was going to involve a very large expenditure for repairs which would be required to put them in the condition in which they were when they started.

Mr. HALE. There is no need of anybody predicting. We shall get the estimates. They will come in from the department and will be faithful and truthful. Under the statute to which I have referred the estimates for repairs will have to be in detail for each ship, and appropriations will have to be made in detail after the estimates are submitted. It is one of the things that we have got to consider at all times that a ship is constantly wearing out and has got to be repaired or overhauled from time to time and it can not be helped. I do not object to the Senator's resolution.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

NATIONAL CURRENCY ASSOCIATIONS.

Mr. CLAY. I submit another resolution, and ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The resolution (S. Res. 271) was read as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to transmit to the Senate the names of the national currency associations formed under the act approved May 30, 1908, known as an act to amend the national banking laws, the names and location of the banks composing each association, the principal place of business of each association thus formed, the name and location of each bank belonging to any national currency association applying for an issue of additional circulating notes under the provisions of the act approved May 30, 1908, together with a list of the securities deposited for the redemption of such notes and the total amount of notes issued under this provision of law.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Georgia asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolu-

Mr. ALDRICH. The information called for by the resolution is already in the possession of Congress, and I think the resolu-tion had better go over. I will investigate the matter. The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will lie over.

LOYAL CREEK INDIAN CLAIMS.

Mr. OWEN submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 273). which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs:

which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs:

Whereas by articles 3 and 4 of a treaty between the United States and the Creek tribe of Indians, concluded June 14, 1866, the United States agreed to ascertain the amount of losses sustained by Creek Soldiers who enlisted in the Federal Army, and the loyal refugee Creek Indians and freedmen, who were driven from their homes during the civil war, and to pay the amount found due, with interest at the rate of 5 per cent from the date of the ratification of said treaty; and Whereas the amount of such losses was ascertained, as provided by said treaty, to be $1,836,830.41; and
Whereas by an agreement between the United States and the said Creek Indians, accepted, ratified, and confirmed by Congress and approved by the President on March 1, 1901, it was and is provided and agreed that said claims should be presented to the Senate of the United States for determination; and
Whereas the said claims were submitted to the Fifty-seventh Congress and a partial payment made thereon: Now, therefore be it

*Resolved, That the Committee on Indian Affairs be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to examine and consider said claims and report its conclusions to the Senate.

In making such examination and adjustment the committee will take into consideration any and all payments heretofore made on account of said claims.

Mr. OWEN. In connection with the resolution, I present a

In connection with the resolution, I present a memorial relating to the Loyal Creek claims. I move that it be printed as a document (S. Doc. No. 690) together with the resolution, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

IMPROVEMENT OF POPHAM BEACH, MAINE.

Mr. FRYE submitted the following concurrent resolution (S. C. Res. 83), which was referred to the Committee on Commerce:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause a preliminary examination and survey to be made of Popham Beach, Maine, with a view to the building of a bulkhead or breakwater along said beach for the protection of property of the United States and to prevent the deposit of sand in navigable waters adjacent thereto.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

H. R. 6252. An act to promote the administration of justice in the navy, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary:

BELLEFOURCHE LAND DISTRICT.

The bill (H. R. 26062) authorizing the creation of a land district in the State of South Dakota, to be known as the Bellefourche land district, was read the first time by its title.

Mr. GAMBLE. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be read for the information of the Senate.

The bill was read the second time, at length, as follows:

The bill was read the second time, at length, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That all that part of the State of South Dakota lying within the following-described boundaries, to wit: Commencing at a point where the township line between townships 18 and 19 north intersects the boundary line between the States of South Dakota and Montana; thence east on the said township line to the northeast corner of township 18 north, of range 9 east; thence south along the range line between ranges 9 and 10 to a point where the same intersects the third standard parallel north; thence east on said third standard parallel north to the northeast corner of township 12 north, range 11 east; thence south along the range line between ranges 11 and 12 to where the same intersects the township line between tanges 11 and 12 to where the same intersects the township line between the States of South Dakota and Wyoming; thence north on the boundary line between the States of South Dakota and Wyoming; thence north on the boundary line between the States of South Dakota and Wyoming and Montana to the point of beginning, be, and the same hereby is, constituted a new land district, to be known as the Bellefourche land district; and the United States land office for said district is hereby located at the town of Bellefourche, in Butte County. That the President be, and he hereby is, anthorized to appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, a register and a receiver for said land district, and they shall be subject to the same laws and be entitled to the same compensation as is or may be hereafter provided by law in relation to the existing land offices and officers in said State.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the passent

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. GAMBLE. I move that the bill (S. 7377) authorizing the creation of a land district in the State of South Dakota, to be known as the Bellefourche land district, be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

COMPANIES B, C, AND D, TWENTY-FIFTH INFANTRY.

Mr. FORAKER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 5729.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Ohio moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of a bill the title of which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 5729) to correct the records and authorize the reenlistment of certain noncommissioned officers and enlisted men belonging to Companies B, C, and D, of the Twenty-fifth United States Infantry, who were discharged without honor under Special Orders, No. 266, War Department, November 9, 1906, and the restoration to them of all rights of which they have been deprived on account thereof.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Ohio.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. FORAKER. I inquire whether there is any Senator who desires to speak upon this measure at this time?

Mr. McLAURIN. Mr. President, I do not desire to speak now, but I should like to have the Senator allow the bill to go over until to-morrow. I have an idea that probably I shall say something on it at that time. I do not desire to speak now, but, if I am going to speak at all, I will speak on it to-morrow, unless some other Senator shall take the floor on it at that time.

Mr. FORAKER. The Senator is not prepared to proceed now

Mr. McLAURIN. I prefer not to proceed now.
Mr. FORAKER. But will speak to-morrow, if he cares to speak at all. Under such circumstances, I think the bill may go over until to-morrow. I give notice that I will renew the motion at the conclusion of the routine morning business to-

Mr. CULBERSON. Before the bill goes over-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. FORAKER. Certainly. Mr. CULBERSON. Before the bill goes over, I will ask the Senator if he will agree to this amendment at the end of section 1:

Provided, That said report of the court of inquiry shall be approved by the President.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President, as I am responsible, in a sense, for the bill in its present form, I will say for myself that I would not consent to the amendment suggested by the Senator from Texas.

Mr. CULBERSON. I do not want to call attention to it in the shape of debate, Mr. President, but I will say to the Senator from Rhode Island that the bill in its present form will authorize a court of inquiry to reverse an order of the President of the United States. I wanted the bill so framed, if passed at all, that an executive order of the President as Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy of the United States should not be reversed by a court of inquiry ipso facto.

Mr. ALDRICH. This bill can not become a law unless with the approval of the President of the United States.

Mr. CULBERSON. It can become a law, Mr. President, of course, over the veto of the President. But the President may approve such a bill as this, and yet he would not think that the findings of a court of inquiry ought to reverse the executive order of his predecessor or of himself. That is the point.

Mr. FORAKER. I do not want to take time to discuss that question now, but I will say to the Senator from Texas that if this bill should have the effect he suggests it would be because it is an act of the Congress of the United States approved by the President; in other words, the law of the land; and the law of the land is competent to revoke even an executive order, especially with respect to a matter of this nature, where the Congress, rather than the President, according to the view I entertain, has control of the matter anyway. But in view of what the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. McLaurin] has said, I am willing that the bill may go over until to-morrow, when I shall renew the motion.

Mr. CULBERSON. Let me understand the situation. As I understand, this bill is not the unfinished business—

Mr. FORAKER. No. Mr. CULBERSON. But is simply to be taken up at the conclusion of the routine morning business to-morrow.

Mr. FORAKER. At the conclusion of the routine morning business to-morrow I will renew the motion to proceed to the consideration of this bill. It not being 2 o'clock, we are in the morning hour, and proceeding to the consideration of the bill under the motion does not make it the unfinished business. As understand, at 2 o'clock the unfinished business, of which the Senator from Montana [Mr. CARTER] has charge, will come up.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. FRYE. I regard it as important that there shall be an executive session; and I move that the Senate proceed to consider business in executive session.

The motion was agreed to, there being on a division—ayes 33, noes 18; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After thirty-five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

THE CALENDAR-BILLS PASSED OVER.

Mr. KEAN. This bill and the next, being the bill (S. 7698) to ratify and confirm an act of the legislature of the Territory of Hawaii, authorizing the manufacture and distribution of electric light and power in the district of Wailuku, Territory of Hawaii, I think, have been included in another bill. The Senator from California can tell us.

Mr. FLINT. That is correct.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will go over without prejudice, at the request of the Senator from West Virginia.

LAKE ERIE AND OHIO RIVER SHIP CANAL COMPANY.

The bill (S. 8154) to amend section 19 of the act granting the Lake Erie and Ohio River Ship Canal Company rights to construct, equip, maintain, and operate a canal or canals and appurtenant works between the Ohio River, in the State of Pennsylvania, and Lake Erie, in the State of Ohio, approved June 30, 1906, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

It proposes to amend the section referred to by striking out the words "three years" and inserting the words "six years" in lieu thereof; also by striking out the words "ten years" and inserting the words "thirteen years" in lieu thereof.

Mr. TELLER. I desire to make an inquiry about the bill. I understand it simply extends the time for building the canal?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That is the effect of it as the Chair understands.

Mr. TELLER. It does not change the law except as to the time?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That is as the Chair understands it. The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM T. ROSSELL, JR.

The bill (S. 7486) authorizing the President to reinstate William T. Rossell, jr., and Harry G. Weaver as cadets in the United States Military Academy was announced as the next business in order on the calendar.

Mr. TELLER. Let the bill go over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will go over without prejudice, at the request of the Senator from Colorado.

PAUL SINOCK.

The bill (S. 3164) to correct the military record of Paul Sinock was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, in line 4, before the words "to amend" to strike out "and directed," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to amend the records of the Second Regiment of Louisiana Infantry Volunteers so as to show that Paul Sinock, late a sergeant of Company G of said regiment, was born in Germany, and to issue to him a certificate of honorable discharge as of date of April 18, 1899, showing such highlyless. such birthplace.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KEAN. Ought not the bill to be amended so as to provide that the beneficiary shall receive no pay, bounty, or other emolument?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Jersey proposes an amendment which will be stated.

The Secretary. It is proposed to add at the end of the bill the following:

Provided. That no pay, bounty, or other emolument shall accrue by reason of the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SANTEE RIVER BRIDGE, SOUTH CAROLINA.

The bill (H. R. 23711) to build a bridge across the Santes River, South Carolina, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ANDREW WHITLEY.

The bill (S. 5273) for the relief of Andrew Whitley was announced as the next business in order on the calendar.

Mr. McCREARY. Mr. President, I reported the bill from the Committee on Military Affairs, and I am informed by the Senator from Montana [Mr. Dixon] who introduced the bill that Andrew Whitley is dead. Is that correct?

Mr. DIXON. That is true.

Mr. KEAN. Let the bill be indefinitely postponed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the bill will be indefinitely postponed.

JAMES D. ELLIOTT.

The bill (S. 4984) for the relief of James D. Elliott was announced as the next business in order on the calendar.

Mr. KITTREDGE. Let the bill go over under Rule IX.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will go to the calendar under Rule IX.

Mr. GAMBLE. I was about to suggest that the bill would undoubtedly lead to discussion, and I concur in the suggestion of the junior Senator from South Dakota that it be placed under Rule IX. It is rather late in the session, and undoubtedly the bill can not be considered and disposed of at this session.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will go to the calendar under Rule IX at the request of the Senator from South Dakota.

JOHN M'KINNON, ALIAS JOHN MACK.

The bill (S. 7631) to grant an honorable discharge from the navy to John McKinnon, alias John Mack, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs, with an amendment in line 4, before the word "discharge," to strike out "an honorable" and insert the article "a," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to grant a discharge from the naval service of the United States to John McKinnon, alias John Mack, late seaman on the U. S. S. North Carolina, and the U. S. S. Brooklyn, provided that no bounty, pay, or other emolument shall become due or payable by virtue of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JAMES R. WYRICK.

The bill (H. R. 8050) for the relief of James R. Wyrick was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to appropriate $150, in full liquidation of the amount due James R. Wyrick, being the value of a mule furnished the Army of the United States during the war of the rebellion.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HEIRS OF THOMAS J. MILLER.

The bill (H. R. 13319) for the relief of the heirs of Thomas J. Miller was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of War to ascertain the loss and damage sustained by Thomas J. Miller by the seizure and sinking of his ferryboat on the Columbia River by the armed forces of the United States and appropriates $500 to enable the Secretary of War to adjust and the accounting officers of the Treasury to pay to the heirs of Thomas J. Miller the amount of loss and damage.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FREDERICK DAUBERT.

The bill (H. R. 17344) for the relief of Frederick Daubert was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. ALDRICH. If I did not make a mistake in hearing the bill read, it directs the Secretary of the Interior to pay money now in the Treasury. I do not know by what law the Secretary of the Interior would pay out money in the Treasury.

Mr. LODGE. It must be the Secretary of the Treasury, of course.

Mr. ALDRICH. It reads Secretary of the Interior, does it The Secretary of the Interior is not in charge of the Public Treasury.

Mr. KEAN. I will say to the Senator from Rhode Island that, if I remember this bill rightly, it is a case where money was paid on deposit in the land office.

Mr. ALDRICH. It is in the Treasury, and all money in the Treasury is under the jurisdiction of the Secretary of the Treasury, as I understand.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will again read the bill.

The Secretary read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and empowered to pay to Frederick Daubert $596.31, out of the moneys paid by said Daubert under cash entry No. 195, made at the El Reno, Okla., land office, and to deposit in the Treasury of the United States on account of sales of public lands the sum of $85.19, being the balance paid by said Daubert under said entry.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NAVAL PRISONERS.

The bill (S. 7652) to provide suitable civilian clothing and a cash gratuity to naval prisoners on discharge was announced as the next business in order on the calendar.

Mr. KEAN. Let the bill go over.
The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will go over, without prejudice, at the request of the Senator from New Jersey.

GOVERNMENT OF THE NAVY.

The bill (S. 7651) to amend article 53 of the Articles for the Government of the Navy was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to amend the article referred to so as to read :

ART. 53. No sentence of a court-martial, extending to the loss of life, or to the dismissal of a commissioned or warrant officer or midshipman, shall be carried into execution until confirmed by the President. All other sentences of a general court-martial may be carried into execution on confirmation of the commander of the fleet or officer ordering the

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ALIENS IN THE NAVY OR MARINE CORPS.

The bill (S. 7793) to provide for the naturalization of aliens who served or shall hereafter serve five years in the United States Navy or Marine Corps was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes that any alien of the age of 21 years and upward who has faithfully served or may hereafter so serve five consecutive years in the United States Navy or Marine Corps shall be admitted to become a citizen of the United States upon his petition without any previous declaration of his intention to become such and without proof of residence on shore.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LIGHT-HOUSE WHARF AT HUMBOLDT BAY, CALIFORNIA.

The bill (S. 8260) providing for the erection of a coal shed on the light-house wharf at Humboldt Bay, California, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to construct a coal shed on the light-house wharf at Humboldt Bay, California, at a cost not to exceed $5,600.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LIGHT TOWER AT ALCATRAZ ISLAND, CALIFORNIA.

The bill (S. 8261) providing for the remodeling and reconstruction of the light tower and keeper's dwelling at Alcatraz Island, Bay of San Francisco, California, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

INDIAN CHILDREN IN SCHOOLS.

The bill (S. 8306) to amend the act of March 2, 1895 (28 Stat. L., p. 876), entitled "An act making appropriations for current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1896, and for other purposes," was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to amend the last paragraph of the act, so as to read:

paragraph of the act, so as to read:

That hereafter no Indian child shall be sent from any Indian reservation to a school beyond the State or Territory in which said reservation is situated without the voluntary consent of the father or mother of such child, if either of them are living, and if neither of them are living without the voluntary consent of the next of kin of such child. Such consent shall be made before the agent of the reservation, and he shall send to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs his certificate that such consent has been voluntarily given before such child shall be removed from such reservation. And it shall be unlawful for any Indian agent or other employee of the Government to induce, or seek-to induce, by withholding rations or by other similar means, the parents or next of kin of any Indian to consent to the removal of any Indian child beyond the limits of any reservation: Provided, That the foregoing provisions shall not interfere with the removal of children from the Sac and Fox Reservation in the State of Iowa, under orders of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, by the superintendent in charge of such reservation to the Sac and Fox Indian school near the city of Toledo, Iowa, for educational purposes. tional purposes

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LIEUT, HILARY WILLIAMS.

The bill (H. R. 10416) to correct the naval record of Lieut. Hilary Williams, U. S. Navy, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of the Navy to amend the naval record of Lieut. Hilary Williams, U. S. Navy, by placing his name on the official Navy Register of the Navy Department next after that of Lieut. Charles T. Owens, U. S. Navy, and to receive rank of lieutenant, United States Navy, from January 1, 1904.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LIEUT. COMMANDER KENNETH M'ALPINE.

The bill (H. R. 16927) for the relief of Lieut. Commander Kenneth McAlpine was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It authorizes the President of the United States to appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, Lieut. Commander Kenneth McAlpine, U. S. Navy, a commander in the navy on the active list, subject to examination, to take rank next after Gustav Kaemmerling, as originally borne on the Navy Register from 1886 to 1903.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN CROWLEY.

The bill (H. R. 7807) to place John Crowley on the retired list of the United States Navy was considered as in Committee of the Whole. In consideration of services rendered in the United States Navy during a period of thirty-two years, from April 11, 1865, to June 20, 1897, the bill directs the Secretary of the Navy to place John Crowley on the retired list of the navy with the retired pay of the rating in which he was serving at the time of his last honorable discharge.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CONSIDERATION OF THE CALENDAR.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President, there are quite a number of bills on the calendar, and it seems that this is a good time to dispose of them. I ask unanimous consent that the consideration of unobjected bills on the calendar be proceeded with under Rule

VIII until the calendar is disposed of.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Rhode Island asks unanimous consent that the remaining bills on the calendar, unobjected to, be considered under Rule VIII until the consideration of the calendar is completed. Is there objection? Chair hears none and it is so ordered.

Mr. LODGE. Unobjected bills?
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Unobjected bills.

WILLIAM H. HOUCK.

The bill (H. R. 11460) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of William H. Houck was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That William H. Houck shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a private of Company K, Seventeenth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, on June 18, 1865; and the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to grant to the said William H. Houck an honorable discharge as of that date: Provided, That no pay, bounty, or other emolument shall become due or payable by virtue of the passage of this act.

Mr. BACON. Is there a report accompanying the bill? The VICE-PRESIDENT. There is a report accompanying the bill.

I ask to have it read. Mr. BACON.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Secretary will read the report.

The Secretary read the report (S. Report No. 760) submitted by Mr. Warren, January 14, 1909, as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, which has had under consideration the bill (H. R. 11460) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of William H. Houck, reports it to the Senate favorably, and recommends that it be passed, amended as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert in lieu thereof the following:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert in field thereof the following:

"That William H. Houck shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a private of Company K, Seventeenth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, on June 18, 1865. And the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to grant to the said William H. Houck an honorable discharge as of that date: Provided, That no pay, bounty, or other emolument shall become due or payable by virtue of the passage of this act."

A report on this case made by the War Department to Hon. E. D. CRUMPACKER is filed herewith and made a part of this report. It is shown that this soldier was mustered into the service on June 14, 1861, to serve three years. That he reenlisted February 15, 1864, and served faithfully until April 21, 1865, when he absented himself without leave and remained absent for nineteen days, or until May 10, 1865. He returned to his regiment on the last-named date and continued in the service until June 18, 1865, when he left his command and never thereafter returned. It is shown by affidavits filed with the committee that the soldier did excellent service while with his command, participated in many battles, and suffered many hardships.

Your committee believes that in view of the long and honorable service of the soldier, and in view of the fact that he did not leave his command until the war was practically over and his services were no longer required, his offense should be condoned and that he should receive an honorable discharge.

WAR DEPARTMENT, THE ADJUTANT-GENERAL'S OFFICE, Washington, April 28, 1908.

The Adjutant-General's Office, Washington, April 28, 1998.

Sir: Referring to your letter of yesterday, received to-day, in which you request the military record of William H. Houck as a member of Company K, Seventeenth Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and the Fifteenth Indiana Infantry, I have the honor to advise you as follows:

It is shown by the records that William H. Houck was enrolled June 14, 1861, and was mustered into service on the same day as a private in Company D, Fifteenth Indiana Infantry Volunteers, to serve three years; that he reenlisted February 15, 1864; was transferred to Company K, Seventeenth Indiana Infantry Volunteers; deserted April 21, 1865; returned from desertion May 10, 1865, under the President's proclamation of March 11, 1865, which provided for the pardon of deserters who should return to their commands and serve the remainder of their original terms of enlistment and, in addition thereto, a period equal to the time lost by desertion; again deserted June 18, 1865, never thereafter returning to his command, which remained in service until August 18, 1865.

In connection with an application for removal of the charge of desertion standing against him, this soldier testified in an affidavit dated June 13, 1907, that on June 18, 1865, he became intoxicated at Macon, Ga., and upon his return to the regiment was ordered confined to the guardhouse, but thinking the order oppressive, he left the command. The application for relief in this case has been denied, and now stands denied, on the ground that the soldier's service prior to May 1, 1865, was not faithful, and his own statement shows that he finally deserted while in arrest for a breach of military duty, which fact bars the case from relief under the provisions of the act of Congress approved March 2, 1880, the only law in force governing the subject of removal of charges of desertion.

Very respectfully,

F. C. Ainsworth,

The Adjutant-General.

F. C. AINSWORTH, The Adjutant-General.

Hon. E. D. CRUMPACKER, House of Representatives.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

INDIAN LANDS IN SOUTH DAKOTA AND NORTH DAKOTA.

The bill (S. 7914) to amend sections 7 and 8 of the act of May 29, 1908 (35 Stat. L., p. 460), entitled "An act to authorize the sale and disposition of a portion of the surplus and unallotted lands in the Cheyenne River and Standing Rock Indian reservations, in the States of South Dakota and North Dakota, and making appropriation and provision to carry the same into

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over without prejudice at the request of the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. GAMBLE. Does the Senator from New Jersey insist on his objection?

Mr. KEAN. I do not know anything about the bill, but I see that about $415,000 are involved.

Mr. GAMBLE. Mr. President, I will state the object of the

A year ago I introduced a bill for the opening of about 3,000,000 acres of land in the Cheyenne River and Standing Rock Indian reservations, in the States of North and South Dakota. The bill which I introduced was used as a basis for negotiating an agreement with those Indians; that is, I mean to say, an agreement or contract was informally submitted to them. This informal agreement was conditioned on the part of the Indians by the payment of $2.50 per acre for the school lands in the two States that went to the States of North and South Dakota under the enabling act.

The bill was favorably reported by the Committee on Indian Affairs, and it passed the Senate at $2.50 per acre. It went to the House, but there was a modification made whereby the price of the school lands was reduced to $1.25 per acre. The department is most anxious that the Government shall keep the utmost good faith with the Indians and suggested a change of the statute as it passed a year ago, so as to provide for the payment of $2.50 per acre instead of $1.25 per acre and increasing the amount of the appropriation therefor.

I say this should be done in simple good faith to the Indians and in conformity with their understanding as the bill was framed by the Senate Committee on Indian Affairs and as it passed the Senate. I think in good faith the bill should be passed without amendment.

Mr. TELLER. will get this money. Mr. TELLER. I should like to ask the Senator if the Indians

Mr. TELLER. It was a reservation when the States were admitted?

Mr. GAMBLE. Yes, sir.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Jersey insist on his objection?

Mr. KEAN. I think the bill had better go over.

VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will go over without prejudice at the request of the Senator from New Jersey.

JAMES E. C. COVEL

The bill (S. 4836) to correct the military record of James E. C. Covel was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to remove the charge of dismissal from the service standing against the name of James E. C. Covel, formerly first sergeant in Company H, Sixteenth Regiment Iowa Volunteer Infantry, to amend his record accordingly, and to grant him an honorable discharge.

Mr. KEAN. I suggest as an amendment to add the usual proviso that no pay, bounty, or other emolument shall accrue by reason of the passage of the act.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The Secretary. It is proposed to add at the end of the bill the following proviso: Provided, That no pay, bounty, or other emolument shall accrue or become due or payable by reason of the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

INSPECTION AND GRADING OF GRAIN.

The bill (S. 382) to provide for the inspection and grading of grain entering into interstate commerce, and to secure uniformity in standards and classification of grain, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. LODGE. Let the bill go over.
Mr. KEAN. The bill will create a great deal of discussion. I suggest that it go over.
Mr. LODGE. Let it go over under Rule IX.

Mr. FULTON. I ask the Senator to withhold his objection for just a moment. I do not wish to have the bill considered now, but I should like to have an amendment made inserting Portland, Oreg., among the grain-inspection cities.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Massachusetts asks that the bill go to the calendar under Rule IX.

Mr. FULTON. I understand; but I ask if there is any objection at this time to inserting in section 2, line 11, after the words "Portland, Me.," the words "Portland, Oreg.;" simply making it one of the cities where grain inspection is to be made. Portland is to-day the greatest wheat-shipping point in the United States.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present

consideration of the bill?

Mr. FULTON. After it is amended the bill may then go over. Mr. LODGE. I have no objection in the world to the amendment, but I do not see how the bill can possibly be amended unless it is considered.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair understands that it can

Mr. FULTON. But I ask the Senator to allow the bill to come before the Senate for that purpose alone.

Mr. LODGE. I object, and many other Senators object strongly to the bill. It will give rise to great debate, and I do not think anything can be gained by amending it now.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will go to the calendar under Rule IX, at the request of the Senator from Massachu-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered. The telegram referred to is as follows:

CINCINNATI, OHIO, January 25, 1909.

Hon. J. B. Foraker,

United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

The grain trade of Cincinnati is opposed to enactment of Senate bill 382 reported by the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry relating to federal inspection of grain, introduced by Senator McCUMBER. The proposed action appears to reflect a view that federal inspection of grain in interstate commerce will insure more uniform and reliable work than can be expected from work of commercial exchanges or under state regulations. Otherwise it would have no excuse for being offered. Grain dealers of this country as a class compare favorably with any other class in homorable intent and practices in business operations. They are vitally interested in inspection questions and reliability of inspection work. They act through local, state, and national organizations in efforts at reaching the best attainable conditions promotive of the interests of seller and buyer. The sellers recognize the fact that to have business there must be buyers for their products, and to have buyers there must prevail such practices as will afford confidence and guaranty in matters of compliance with trade understandings and contracts. Grain products are susceptible to changes in condition and quality from meteorological influences and transportation. Grain that may have the apparent or real elements of soundness and of strictly merchantable condition at point of shipment may be so affected by subsequent atmospheric influences during movement to destination with possible delays necessarily beyond the control of the shipper, that arrival conditions are not equal to the original or shipping grading. This is liable to occur in shipments on orders from foreign markets, and when such grain at destination arrives out of order not equal in condition to specifications in the order for shipment, the receiver feels impelled to make complaint, which often implies a charge that there has been lack of proper work of inspection at the shipping point.

The call for federal inspection has arisen from such complaints, which, however, can not carry with them any assurance that federal inspection can accomplish anything of remedy in such matters. The complaint of the foreign receiver affords no reasonable ground for change from inspection, including reasons why the various markets, in the nature of the foreign receiver affords no reasonable ground for change from inspection, including pressons why

INDIAN LANDS.

The bill (S. 7916) to amend an act approved May 8, 1906, entitled "An act to amend section 6 of an act approved February 8, 1887, entitled 'An act to provide for the allotment of lands in severalty to Indians on the various reservations and to extend the protection of the laws of the United States and the Territories over the Indians, and for other purposes," was announced as next in order.

Mr. CLAPP. I ask that the bill be passed over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over, without prejudice, at the request of the Senator from Minnesota.

IMPROVEMENT OF HARBOR AT PORT SANILAC, MICH.

The next business on the calendar was Senate concurrent resolution 66, which was considered and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause a preliminary survey to be made of the harkor at Port Santlac, Santlac County, Mich. with a view to deepening the same to a depth of 20 feet, and to submit a plan and estimate for such improve-

SADDLE MOUNTAIN NATIONAL PARK.

The bill (S. 7372) to set apart certain lands in the State of Oregon as a public park, to be known as the "Saddle Mountain National Park," was announced as next in order.

Mr. TELLER. I ask that the bill be passed over without prejudice so that I may have a chance to look at it.

out prejudice.

Mr. FULTON. I hope the Senator from Colorado will not insist on that. It includes only a very few acres of land, and it is simply for the purpose of preserving the natural beauty of a high mountain peak in the Coast Range in the county where I There can be no possible objection to it. It is not withdrawing a large area at all. I hope the Senator will not insist on the bill going over.

Mr. TELLER. I am opposed to the policy of the United States establishing parks all over the country. I do not intend to vote for any of those if I can avoid it in the short time I am to be here. If this is a matter of local interest and covers a small area, I will withdraw my objection.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands with amendments.

The amendments were, in section 1, page 2, line 4, after the word "and," to insert "the northwest quarter and;" in line 6, after the word "and," to insert "the northeast quarter and;" and in line S, after the word "meridian," to strike out the proviso in the following words:

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate, as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LITTLE COLORADO RIVER BRIDGE.

The bill (S. 7883) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to construct a bridge across the Little Colorado River abutting on the Navajo Indian Reservation, in the Territory of Arizona, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. LODGE. It is only a blunder in the calendar, and I call attention to it; that is all.

Mr. CLAPP. I can explain it. It should be Committee on Indian Affairs. Mr. LODGE. Precisely; it should be Indian Affairs, and it is Military Affairs. It is important that the calendar should be accurate.

Mr. CLAPP. It is a department bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill in the hands of the Secretary is correct, and states that it was reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. CLAPP. There is no objection to the bill, I su Mr. KEAN. We have just passed one similar to it. There is no objection to the bill, I suppose.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CARTER. What is the nature of the unanimous-consent agreement?

Mr. LODGE. Unanimous consent was given to go through the calendar.

Mr. CARTER. I understand that unanimous consent to go through the calendar was given without displacing the unfinished business.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The unanimous consent is that unobjected bills under Rule VIII shall be considered.
Mr. CARTER. That unanimous consent does not involve displacing the unfinished business?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It does not,

PATRICK CONLIN.

The bill (H. R. 7963) for the relief of Patrick Conlin was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides that Patrick Conlin shall hereafter be held and considered to be entitled to all of the rights and benefits that he would be entitled to on account of military service, except pay, bounty, and other emoluments, if he had been continuously in the military service of the United States as a private of Company I, Fifty-seventh Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, from the 27th day of January, 1862, to the 8th day of August, 1865, and had been honorably discharged on the date last named herein.

Mr. WARREN. I wish to call the attention of the Senator who reported the bill to the fact that there should be an amendment at the end of it to provide that no pay or other emolument shall accrue on account of the passage of the bill.

Mr. WARNER. I think that is provided for in the bill. Mr. KEAN. It is provided for in the bill. It is a House bill, but is very badly worded.

Mr. LODGE. That clause ought to be in the bill.

Mr. WARREN. It occurs further up in a different shape.

Mr. KEAN. It is in a different form.

Mr. WARREN. Let the Secretary read the bill again. The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will again read the

The Secretary again read the bill.

Mr. LODGE. I suggest again that in making up the calendar this bill was put down as having been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs, when it was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs. The names of the committees reporting the two bills became transposed.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PROMOTION OF INDUSTRIAL PEACE.

The bill (S. 6272) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish the Foundation for the Promotion of Industrial Peace" was announced as next in order.

Mr. ALDRICH. I must confess that I was not aware that we had a law of this kind in the statutes. There is a provision in the bill which strikes me as an extraordinary one-

That the industrial peace committee herein constituted shall arrange for such meetings and conferences in the city of Washington, D. C., as it may deem advisable, of representatives of labor and capital, for the purpose of discussing industrial problems, with the view of arriving at a better understanding between employers and employees; it shall call such conferences in case of great industrial crises and take such other steps as in its discretion will promote the general purposes of the foundation, subject, however, to such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the trustees.

It proposes to put in the hands of the commission powers which it is doubtful that Congress possesses. I object to the consideration of the bill, for I would be glad to know something about it before it is brought up for action.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over without prejudice, at the request of the Senator from Rhode Island.

NATIONAL ACADEMY OF ARTS AND LETTERS.

The bill (S. 8396) incorporating the National Academy of Arts and Letters was announced as next in order.

LANDS AT FRUITA, COLO.

The bill (S. 1199) to grant certain lands to the town of Fruita, Colo., was considered as in Committee of the Whole.
The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Lands with an amendment to strike out section 2, in the following words:

SEC. 2. That the right to convey water in pipes across the public lands from the aforesaid tract of land to the aforesaid town of Fruita is also hereby granted to that town.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LADING AND UNLADING OF VESSELS.

The bill (S. 5694) to provide for the lading or unlading of vessels at night, to facilitate the entry of vessels, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. FRYE. I ask that the bill may go over, without prejudice.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over, without prejudice, at the request of the Senator from Maine.

JAMES H. OWEN.

The bill (S. 7782) for the relief of James H. Owen was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay $930 to James H. Owen, of Los Angeles, Cal., found and held to be due him by the Secretary of the Interior under contract of May 31, 1906, for the construction of buildings and irrigation works at the Truxtun Canyon Indian School, Arizona.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

L. H. LEWIS.

The bill (H. R. 10986) for the relief of L. H. Lewis was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay to L. H. Lewis $33.65, amount due him for expenses incurred in excess of his traveling allowance as deputy collector of internal revenue for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1906.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

A. A. LEWIS.

The bill (H. R. 10987) for the relief of A. A. Lewis was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay to A. A. Lewis $128.02, amount due him for expenses incurred in excess of his traveling allowance as deputy collector of internal revenue for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1906.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PARSEY O. BURROUGH.

The bill (S. 7859) for the relief of Parsey O. Burrough was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to confer jurisdiction upon the United States circuit court for the eastern district of Pennsylvania to adjudicate the two suits at law commenced in the court of common pleas of Philadelphia which by certiorari were removed to the said circuit court, namely, the suits of Parsey O. Burrough for the recovery of alleged illegally collected taxes, paid under protest, one against the administrator of William H. Barnes, late collector of internal revenue for the first district of Pennsylvania, in which claim is made for the sum of $2,204.49, and the other against the administrator of John H. Diehl, late collector of internal revenue for the second district of Pennsylvania, in which claim is made for the sum of $1,807.09.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

afraid its passage might establish a very dangerous precedent.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will go over without prejudice, at the request of the Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Rhode Island yield to the Senator from Alabama?
Mr. ALDRICH. Certainly.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Mr. President, I ask the Senator from Rhode Island if he has read the report on this bill? It shows that the bill has been considered by the other House and by the Senate on several occasions and unanimously approved by each every time it has been considered. The bill provides for the restoration of a tax that this association was informed by the collector of internal revenue was not due at all, but it was paid; and it was upon three separate rulings of the department that these certificates of deposit were issued. I hope the Sena-tor from Rhode Island will not ask that the bill go over. It has been, as I have stated, fully considered and unanimously con-curred in on every occasion when it has been before either House.

Mr. ALDRICH. Without taking the time of the Senate to debate it now, I should like to examine the bill, because it is important, in my judgment, that a precedent should not be established of relieving a banking institution from the payment of the 10 per cent tax if the notes which it issued could be construed as being circulating notes.

Mr. CLAPP. If the Senator from Rhode Island will pardon me for a moment

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair would suggest that debate on this bill is by unanimous consent.

Mr. CLAPP. I know; but I merely wish to say that Congress passed a law relieving all such institutions as to "pending cases," but the parties having sold the property in this case, the department held that it was not a "pending case" within the law which had been expressly passed for the relief of those associations, and consequently a congressional enactment is required. The bill establishes no precedent. Had the property not been already sold, so that it could not have been called a "pending case," it would have come under the law which Congress did pass to relieve such cases. It is nothing to me personally; but the Senator from Alabama [Mr. Johnston] is interested in the bill.

Mr. ALDRICH. Were certificates of deposit issued in de-nominations so that they could pass as currency?

Mr. CLAPP. They undoubtedly were; but Congress afterwards relieved the associations from that ruling, and this association would have been relieved, except that the property had been seized and sold, and the department held that this was not pending case."

Mr. ALDRICH. I should be glad to examine the case, and I ask that the bill go over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will go over without prejudice, at the request of the Senator from Rhode Island.

CLAIMS OF RELIGIOUS ORDERS IN THE PHILIPPINES.

The bill (S. 8478) to provide for payment of the claims of certain religious orders in the Philippine Islands was considered as in Committee of the Whole. The bill had been reported from as in Committee of the Whole. The bill had been reported from the Committee on the Philippines with amendments, on page 1, line 4, after the words "sum of," to strike out "$80,243" and insert "$80,083.50;" in line 10, after the word "thousand," to strike out "nine" and insert "eight;" on page 2, line 2, after the name "Recoletos," to strike out "$13,024.50" and insert "$12,615;" and in line 4, after the name "Franciscans," to strike out "six thousand six hundred and thirty" and insert "six thousand nine hundred and eighty" so as to make the bill read:

out "six thousand six hundred and thirty" and insert "six thousand nine hundred and eighty," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $80,083.50, to be paid by the Secretary of War to the properly accredited representatives of the following-named four religious orders of the Roman Catholic Church in the Philippine Islands according to the amounts set forth: The Augustinians, $43,822.50; the Dominicans, $16,666; the Recoletos, $12,615; and the Franciscans, $6,980; and that the acceptance by the properly accredited representatives of said respective religious orders of the separate amounts above specified shall be in full satisfaction of all claims for use and occupation of the property of said respective religious orders in said islands, and for damages done thereto by the military forces of the United States prior to the date, to wit, January 24, 1906, of the official report of the "board on church claims," which said board, composed of John A. Hull, lieutenant-colonel, judge-advocate; Alexander O. Brodie, lieutenant-colonel, military secretary; and J. W. Moore, first lieutenant, Second Cavalry, was duly convened, August 1, 1905, at headquarters Philippine Division, in the city of Manila, in said islands, to consider and report upon said claims.

S. W. LANGHORNE AND H. S. HOWELL.

The bill (S. 1177) for the relief of S. W. Langhorne and H. S. Howell was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay to S. W. Langhorne and H. S. Howell, of Helena, Mont., $1,568, that being the amount paid by them for rent of the building used by the United States for a land office at Helena, Mont., from November, 1885, up to and including June, 1900, a period of fifty-six months, at $14 per month, and to pay the further sum of $280 for janitor service for the same period at $5 per month, in all $1,848.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

OWNERS OF TUG JUNO.

The bill (S. 5510) for the relief of the owners of the tug Juno was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay to the owners of the tug Juno $376.50, in full compensation for damages occasioned by collision with the United States Marine-Hospital Service steamer Neptune in Wilmington Creek, Delaware, on June 4, 1907.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time,

OWNERS OF BRITISH STEAMSHIP MAROA.

The bill (S. 8379) for the relief of the owners of the British steamship Maroa was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes that the claim of the owners of the British steamship Maroa for reimbursement for the cost of repairs and for demurrage as the result of a collision with the U. S. S. Rocket on the night of February 2, 1907, in the harbor of Norfolk, Va., be referred to the United States district court, eastern district of Virginia, with jurisdiction to hear and determine the same to judgment; but the petition must be filed within twelve months from the passage of this act.

ROBERT S. DAME.

The bill (H. R. 10606) for the relief of Robert S. Dame was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes that Robert S. Dame shall be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a second lieutenant, Company D, First U. S. Veteran Volunteers, and authorizes the Secretary of War to issue him a certificate of honorable discharge; but no pay, bounty, or other emoluments shall become due or payable by virtue of the passage of this act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LAFAYETTE L. M'KNIGHT.

The bill (H. R. 16015) for the relief of Lafayette L. McKnight was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment to add at the end of the bill:

Provided, That no pay, bounty, or other emolument shall become due or payable by virtue of the passage of this act.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc. That Lafayette L. McKnight, also borne as Lafayette McNight, be held and considered to have served as a private in Captain Brooks's company, Mechanic Fusileers, later designated as the Fifty-sixth Illinois Infantry, from October 20, 1861, to January 28, 1862, and to have been honorably discharged therefrom: Provided, That no pay, bounty, or other emolument shall become due or payable by virtue of the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

OFFICERS OF MEDICAL DEPARTMENT, U. S. ARMY.

The bill (S. 6199) to credit certain officers of the Medical Department, U. S. Army, with services rendered as acting assistant surgeons during the civil war, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes that any officer of the Medical Department, U. S. Army, below the grade of brigadiergeneral, who served creditably as an acting assistant surgeon in the army during the civil war prior to April 9, 1865, and has heretofore been, or may hereafter be, retired on account of wounds or disability incident to the service, or on account of age, or after forty years' service, may, in the discretion of the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, be placed on the retired list of the army with the rank and retired pay of one grade above that actually held by him at the date of his

Mr. KEAN. Mr. President, let us have an explanation of that bill by the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN].
Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, this bill will affect but five

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, this bill will affect but five people. These five served in the civil war and waited their turn to be made regular assistant surgeons, but were serving as acting assistant surgeons, or really more like contract surteedel, it will go to the calendar under Rule IX.

geons, until an opening should be made. Later they were taken into the regular establishment, as were many volunteer officers. The bill proposes to place them on the level with all others who served either as officers or privates during the civil war.

Mr. KEAN. But, Mr. President, does the bill make any distinction between officers who are already on the retired list? It allows these, I notice, to be advanced one grade.

the others retired in the same way?

Mr. WARREN. All the others were retired in the same way; the only difference being that these five were serving during the civil war a part or all of the time as acting assistant or contract surgeons before they entered the regular service, and they served during the balance of the war and continually thereafter until retirement. All the other officers have been given this advancement.

The act approved April 23, 1904, grants advancement or re-tirement to any officer below the grade of brigadier-general who served with credit as an officer or enlisted man during the civil war prior to April 9, 1865. It is held, however, that an officer who served as a contract surgeon or an acting assistant surgeon is not comprehended within the terms of that act. It appears to be plain that the service of these medical officers was, in its essential nature, of the same character as that intended to be rewarded by the act, and in equity its provisions ought to be extended so as to embrace the five officers provided for in this bill.

Mr. McCREARY. I will add, Mr. President, that this action is also recommended by the Assistant Secretary of War.

Mr. WARREN. Oh, yes.
Mr. KEAN. And it only affects five officers?
Mr. McCREARY. I think there are only five.
Mr. WARREN. I am not certain that there are five now living. There were six living when the bill was first introduced, but only five living now.

Mr. KEAN. And they are probably all pretty old by this time?

Mr. WARREN. Yes; all of them. Mr. KEAN. I should think it probable they would be.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NEZ PERCÉ INDIAN RESERVATION LAND.

The bill (H. R. 19095) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to sell isolated tracts of land within the Nez Percé Indian Reservation was considered as in Committee of the Whole, It proposes that the law providing for the sale of any isolated or disconnected tract or parcel of the public domain shall be extended and made applicable to any isolated and unappropriated public lands embraced within the Nez Percé Indian Reservation; but for agricultural lands purchasers under this act shall pay not less than $3.75 per acre, and for lands valuable for stone and timber not less than $5 per acre.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LE BEAU LAND DISTRICT, SOUTH DAKOTA

The bill (S. 8067) authorizing the creation of a land district in the State of South Dakota, to be known as the Le Beau land district, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KITTREDGE. Let that bill go over under Rule IX, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will go to the calendar under Rule IX, at the request of the junior Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. GAMBLE. Mr. President, I presume, under the rule of the Senate, that motion will be insisted upon. This bill, however, is a matter of importance to our State. About 3,000,000 acres are to be opened under existing law, and registration under the administration of the department will be had during the coming fall. It is a matter of the utmost importance to the people in our State that this bill be passed. It has been favorably recommended by the department. After the fullest consideration, the bill was prepared for the creation of this district, the segregation of some of the lands, and the putting them into another district already existing.

The bill has been unanimously reported by the Committee on Public Lands; and if my colleague [Mr. KITTREDGE] has objection to it, would it not be better to permit the bill to be passed over, but retaining its place upon the calendar, so that it might be taken up at some convenient time? I respectfully ask that ELIZABETH G. MARTIN.

The bill (S. 8252) for the relief of Elizabeth G. Martin was considered as in Committee of the Whole. The bill was reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, in line 3, after the words "sum of," to strike out "twenty-five" and insert "five," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the sum of $5,000 for the aid and support of Elizabeth G. Martin, widow of James P. Martin, who lost his life as the result of injuries received on the 6th day of April, 1906, by being run over by an engine of the Isthmian Canal Commission at Paraiso belonging to the United States, being operated on the Panama Railroad at Paraiso, in the Canal Zone, be hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the same to be paid to the said Elizabeth G. Martin by the Secretary of the Treasury immediately upon the approval of this act.

Mr. KEAN. Mr. President, I have no objection to the amendment, but this belongs to a class of claims that I think ought to be paid out of the appropriation for the construction of the canal. I do not think such claims ought to be paid from the Treasury of the United States in this manner. I should like to hear what the chairman of the Committee on Interoceanic Canals has to say on the subject.

Mr. KITTREDGE. I beg pardon of the Senator from New Jersey; I was not listening at the moment.

Mr. KEAN. This is the claim of a person named Martin for the killing of her husband on the Isthmus of Panama by being run over by a railroad train there. She seeks to get redress from the Treasury of the United States, instead of from the Canal Commission.

Mr. KITTREDGE. Mr. President, under the statement made by the Senator from New Jersey, I move that the bill be referred to the Committee on Interoceanic Canals.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President, I do not think that motion should prevail. This is a meritorious bill.

Mr. KEAN. I agree with the Senator that it is a meritorious bill.

Mr. FULTON. Well, it should not be referred to another committee. It would, I think, be doing the claimant a great deal of injustice. It is a case where her husband was killed in a manner grossly negligent, utterly inexcusable, and entirely indefensible. The committee unanimously agreed to a favorable report on the bill. I only regret that the sum was not made larger. I do not think that the bill ought to be rereferred.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion to refer the bill to the Committee on Interoceanic Canals.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, a similar bill was passed at the last session of Congress and the amount carried by it was to be paid out of the Treasury of the United States. The item was finally put on an appropriation bill. I have not recently leaked into the case but was stream have not recently looked into the case, but my attention has been called to it. As the Senator from Oregon [Mr. Fulton] has said, this is a very meritorious bill. I hope there will be no delay in acting upon it and that it will go through to-day.

Mr. KITTREDGE. It is quite true that at the last session of Congress a bill of the character mentioned was passed by this body, but that bill was referred to the Committee on Interoceanic Canals, acted upon favorably by that committee, and passed by the Senate upon its recommendation. I insist that claims of this character should go to the Committee on Interoceanic Canals, that they may have the benefit of such information as the Isthmian Canal Commission may have, and then be acted upon.

I know nothing of this claim. The first I ever heard of it was from the suggestion of the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. Kean]. It seems to me that, in the first instance, this bill ought to have gone to the Committee on Interoceanic Canals and there have been acted upon.

Mr. FULTON obtained the flocr. Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. FULTON. I will yield in a second.

Mr. President, I disagree entirely with the Senator from South Dakota as to the jurisdiction of the respective committees. This is essentially a claim against the United States Govern-It is a claim-

Mr. KEAN. It is a claim against the Isthmian Canal Com-

Mr. FULTON. It is not. It is a claim against the United States Government. The Isthmian Canal Commission is not an incorporated body; it is simply a commission, an agency of this Government; and what that commission does this Government does, just exactly the same as when a private individual is represented by his agent.

demands of this character should go to the Committee on Claims. The Senator might, with equal consistency, contend that the bills that arise under the Navy Department should go to the Committee on Naval Affairs; but they do not. Under the rule and under the judgment of the Senate, determined a year or two ago, all such claims or demands go to the Committee on Claims, because they are claims against the Government—not against a department, not against a commission. Would anyone pretend to say, Mr. President, that under any rule of law a claim could be established by a proceeding against the Isthmian Canal Commission? That is simply a representative body, an agency of this Government.

I should care nothing about this matter, personally, were it not for the fact that I know that to refer this bill to the Committee on Interoceanic Canals would simply mean to defeat it at this session of Congress at least; and, knowing as I do the merits of the bill and the very great hardship the widow of this man has had imposed upon her by this casualty, I will not consent to a reference of the bill so far as my vote is concerned.

Mr. KITTREDGE. Will the Senator from Oregon advise me of the character of the injury and the circumstances under which the injury occurred?

Mr. FULTON. The circumstances were these: The man was an employee on the Canal Zone, an accountant or acting in some capacity of that character. He was crossing a railroad track. A train coming down did not whistle, gave no indication whatever of its approach, and ran over him. The engine did not ring its bell and gave no alarm whatever.

Mr. KITTREDGE. Was the train operated by the railroad company or by the commission?

Mr. FULTON. The commission, I suppose, controls the operation of it. It is owned by the Government.

Mr. KITTREDGE. But, Mr. President, for the information of the Senator from Oregon, let me suggest that the Panama Railroad Company is a New York corporation.

Mr. FULTON. We understand that, but we also understand that the Comment controls and controls and controls and controls.

that the Government controls and operates it.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President-The VICE-PRESIDENT. De

Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. FULTON. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. CARTER. I suggest that this protracted debate is in violation of the unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. KITTREDGE. Let the bill go to the calendar under Rule IX, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will go to the calendar under Rule IX, at the request of the Senator from South Dakota.

JOHN WAGNER.

The bill (H. R. 4119) to pay John Wagner, of Campbell Hall, N. Y., for carrying the mails, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to John Wagner, of Campbell Hall, N. Y., $152.53, for carrying the United States mails to the Wallkill Valley Railway and to the post-office at Campbell Hall, N. Y., from November 3, 1897, to January 7, 1901.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GEORGE H. TRACY.

The bill (H. R. 20171) to correct the military record of George H. Tracy, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. The bill was reported by the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment on page 1, line 12, after the word "revoked," to insert "Provided, That no pay, bounty, or other emolument shall become due or payable by virtue of the passage of this act," so as to make the bill read:

as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That George H. Tracy, late captain Company I, Thirtythird Regiment Missouri Volunteer Infantry, shall be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the service of the United States by Special Orders, No. 24, Department and Army of the Tennessee, dated March 4, 1865, and said orders shall be held in force, and Special Orders of the War Department No. 102, dated March 1, 1865, dishonorably dismissing said Tracy, shall be held revoked: Provided, That no pay, bounty, or other emolument shall become due or payable by virtue of the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

CERTAIN LANDS IN CALIFORNIA.

The bill (S. 8048) to withdraw from settlement and entry certain lands in the State of California was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs that all of the public lands in section 8, township 1 south, range 2 west, and in sections 2, 4, 8, 10, and 12, in township 1 south, range 3 west, San Ber-2, 4, 8, 10, and 12, in township I south, range 5 west, that is nardino base and meridian, in the State of California, be withdrawn from settlement and entry and reserved for the purpose of aiding in the conservation of the waters of the San Bernard dino Valley. But the proposed act shall not defeat any vested right which has attached under any pending entry or location.

Mr. KEAN. I think this is an adverse report. Am I correct?

Mr. FLINT. No. There are two bills. One bill is adversely reported, but the one which has just been read has a favorable report.

Mr. KEAN. I was mistaken. I turned over one page too many on my calendar, and found a similar bill with an adverse report.

Mr. FLINT. That has reference to another bill, reported at the same time as this. The difference between the two bills is that there is a proviso in the bill just read that this bill shall not interfere with any claims now upon these various tracts of land.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

UNIVERSITY OF THE STATE OF IDAHO.

The bill (H. R. 21458) authorizing sales of land within the Coeur d'Alene Indian Reservation to the Northern Idaho Insane Asylum and to the University of Idaho was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with amendments. The first amendment was to strike out all of section 1 in the following words:

That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to sell to the State of Idaho, for the use of the Northern Idaho Insane Asylum, land not to exceed in area four sections, to be selected by the governor of the State, within the limits of the Coeur d'Alene Indian Reservation, upon the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, said State to pay therefor, upon receiving a grant thereof, such price per acre as shall be fixed by the Secretary of the Interior, but which shall not be less than $2.50 per acre. The moneys derived from said sale shall be deposited in the Treasury of the United States for the benefit of the Indians of said reservation.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, line 4, to strike out the words "Sec. 2," so as to read:

Words "Sec. 2," so as to read:

That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to sell to the regents of the University of the State of Idaho, for the use of said university, land not to exceed 640 acres in area, to be selected by the said regents of the said university within the limits of the Coeur d'Alene Indian Reservation, upon the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, said regents to pay therefor, upon receiving a grant thereof, such price as shall be fixed by the Secretary of the Interior, but which shall not be less than $2.50 per acre. The moneys derived from said sale shall be deposited in the Treasury of the United States for the benefit of the Indians of said reservation.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

CANCELLATION OF INDIAN ALLOTMENTS.

The bill (S. 8442) to authorize cancellation of Indian allotments covering unsuitable lands and allotment of lands in lieu thereof, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with an amendment, in line 7, after the word "unappropriated," to insert "unoccupied," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That if any Indian of a tribe whose surplus lands have been or shall be ceded or opened to disposal has received or shall receive an allotment embracing lands unsuitable for allotment purposes, such allotment may be canceled and other unappropriated, unoccupied, and unreserved land of equal area, within the ceded portions of the reservation upon which such Indian belongs, allotted to him upon the same terms and with the same restrictions as the original allotment, and lands described in any such canceled allotment shall be disposed of as other ceded lands of such reservation. The Secretary of the Interior is authorized to prescribe rules and regulations to carry this law into effect.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

APPEALS TO SUPREME COURT IN CERTAIN CASES.

The bill (S. 8245) to authorize appeals to be taken from the judgments of the Court of Claims to the Supreme Court of the United States in certain cases now pending before the Court of Claims, and for other purposes, was announced as the next business in order on the calendar.

Mr. CLAPP. Let the bill be passed over.

Mr. KEAN. Let the bill go to the calendar under Rule IX. Mr. CLAPP. I hope the Senator will not press that request. It is a department bill, and it is one we ought to pass, but there is amendment to be made to it, and we are not prepared to make it at present.

Let it go over. Mr. KEAN.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over, at the request of the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. CARTER. I do not see present the Senator having the bill in charge, and I suggest that it go over, retaining its place. The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will go over without prejudice, at the request of the Senator from Montana.

REGISTERS OF LAND OFFICES.

The bill (S. 6986) for the relief of registers and former registers of the United States land offices was announced as the next business in order on the calendar.

Mr. KEAN. This is rather an important bill, and I think it had better go over. I have been trying to find out how much money is involved in it, and I can not.

Mr. CLAPP. It is impossible to ascertain that with exact-It is to reimburse for fees held up. The report explains the bill very carefully and very fully.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Jersey

Mr. KEAN. Let it go over.
The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will go over without prejudice, at the request of the Senator from New Jersey.

ROCK RIVER (ILLINOIS) BRIDGES.

The bill (S. 8564) to authorize the construction of two bridges across Rock River, State of Illinois, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. CULLOM. I suppose the bill was reported from the Committee on Commerce?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It was.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PENSIONS TO CERTAIN WIDOWS.

The bill (S. 7960) to amend an act entitled "An act to increase the pension of widows, minor children, etc., of deceased soldiers and sailors of the late civil war, the war with Mexico, the various Indian wars, etc., and to grant a pension to certain widows of the deceased soldiers and sailors of the late civil war," was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to amend section 2 of the act referred to, so as to read as fol-

Sec. 2. That if any officer or enlisted man who served ninety days or more in the Army or Navy of the United States during the late civil war and who has been honorably discharged therefrom has died or shall hereafter die, leaving a widow, such widow shall, upon due proof of her husband's death, without proving his death to be the result of his army or navy service, be placed on the pension roll from the date of the filing of her application therefor under this act at the rate of $12 per month during her widowhood: Provided, That said widow shall have married said soldier or sailor prior to the passage and approval of this act, and the benefits of this section shall include those widows whose husbands if living would have a pensionable status under the joint resolutions of February 15, 1895, July 1, 1902, and June 28, 1906.

Mr. KEAN. I should like to have the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCumber] explain the bill—how much money it will take and what the increase is.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I will explain the bill very Senators all understand that on June 27, 1890, we briefly. enacted a law which granted to all widows who were married prior to that date to soldiers of the civil war the sum of $8 per month. It excluded all of those who might be married after that date—June 27, 1890. Those who were married after that date were excluded, I presume on the assumption that a great many ingenious young women, desiring to secure a pension for life, might marry some of the old soldiers and in a very few years get the benefit of the pension.

The law continued in that shape as amended until 1908, when we passed a law granting all widows a pension at the rate of $12 a month, but we limited the application again to that same old date—June 27, 1890. The bill passed the Senate in that condition, it being an amendment to a House bill. In order to get the bill for the increase of the pensions through, it was necessary for the Senate conferees to consent to drop that portion of the bill.

So the bill for the increase left this limitation upon the right of the widows to secure its benefit.

Mr. President, there is no reason on earth to my mind for excluding those widows who were married subsequent to 1890. None of those who married between June 27, 1890, and June 16, 1908, could have married for any consideration other than the usual matrimonial considerations, because none of them could have anticipated a possibility of securing a pension by reason of the marriage. I assume, therefore, that all of those marriages were regular and were proper in all respects.

I find that the average age of the soldier at that time was about 48 years, and I am inclined to think there were not many women in the United States who took advantage of the immature men of 48 years of age and married them against their will. So I can see no reason for limiting the application of this law

Now, as to the marriages since that date, assuming that they were regular and proper, and remembering also that nearly four-fifths of all the marriages have taken place since 1865, after the close of the war, there is just as much reason for granting a pension to a widow who was married after 1890 as to grant one a pension who was married between 1865 and 1890.

With respect to the cost of this bill, it is estimated by the department that there are about 20,000 of such widows who would come in under this proposed law. I do not know how the department arrives at this estimate. I do not know how they can ascertain the facts, and therefore I assume it is but a rough guess as to the number of marriages which have taken place since that time. If there were 20,000, it would probably amount to about $2,000,000 additional per year.

Mr. WARREN. Will the Senator state how much a month it is? Mr. McCUMBER. It would provide them all with $12 a month.

Mr. WARREN. A hundred and forty-four dollars a year.
Mr. McCUMBER. It can be computed very rapidly. I have not computed just exactly what it would be if there are 20,000, but I assume it would be from a million to a million and a half dollars.

The cost of pensions during the last year has decreased be-tween two and two and a half million dollars, notwithstanding the enormous amount that we added a year ago.

Is the explanation sufficient?

Mr. KEAN. It is.

W. H. BLUROCK.

The bill (H. R. 19839) for the relief of W. H. Blurock was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay $185 to W. H. Blurock for property destroyed by fire at Arlington dock, Seattle, Wash., on May 7, 1906.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EASTERN SALT COMPANY.

The bill (H. R. 14361) to reimburse the Eastern Salt Company, of Boston, Mass., for certain excess duty was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay to the East-ern Salt Company, of Boston, Mass., $384.84, the same being the amount of money paid by them as excess duty on certain salt in bulk.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

B. D. CROCKER.

The bill (S. 7861) for the relief of B. D. Crocker was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to credit B. D. Crocker, collector of internal revenue for the district of Washington, and his accounts with the sum of $2,500, being the value of a book of retail liquor dealers' special tax stamps charged to him, destroyed by accidental burning in the building in Tacoma, Wash., in which the collector's office is located.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM MARTINSON.

The bill (S. 2544) for the relief of William Martinson was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, in line 6, after the word "Volunteer," to strike out "Infantry" and insert "Cavalry," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to correct the military record of William Martinson, late of Company G, Twelfth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Cavalry, and grant him an honorable discharge.

The amendment was agreed to.

Let the usual amendment be put on.

Mr. WARNER. Yes; strike out the period at the end of the bill and insert the usual proviso.

The Secretary. At the end of the bill it is proposed to insert: Provided, That no pay, bounty, or other emolument shall become due or payable by virtue of the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DESERT LAND IN NEW MEXICO AND ARIZONA.

The bill (H. R. 26216) to extend the provisions of section 4 of an act entitled "An act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1895, and for other purposes," approved August 18, 1894, to the Territories of New Mexico and Arizona, was announced as the next business in order on the calendar.

Mr. KEAN. I think we ought to have some explanation of the bill.

Mr. HEYBURN. I am loath to ask that this matter shall go over, but it seems to me that sufficient consideration has not been given to it to justify us in passing it at this time. I call attention to the fact that on the calendar it purports to have been reported from the Committee on Territories. The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Lands. That error runs all through the printing of the bill. It purports to come from the Committee on Territories. I will say I do not know where the error crept in. I was a member of the committee that reported the bill, and reserved the right to oppose it on the

Mr. KEAN. Let it go over.
Mr. HEYBURN. I think it had better go over.
The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over without prejudice, at the request of the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. HEYBURN. I would suggest that the correction be made as to the committee from which the bill came.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will state that the proper indorsements are upon the bill as it appears in the hands of the Secretary, it having been reported from the Committee on Public Lands. The bill will be passed over.

pany, Florida Militia, Florida Indian war, $16. The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

THOMAS C. CLARK.

The bill (S. 4426) for the relief of Thomas C. Clark was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, in line 6, after the words "sum of," to strike out "$1,056" and insert "$758.75," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Thomas C. Clark, inspector of construction, quartermaster's department at Seattle, Wash., the sum of $758.75, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to reimburse him for household goods destroyed by a fire which consumed the quartermaster's warehouse at Seattle, Wash., May 7, 1906, which goods were in the custody of the United States Government for transportation.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BURKETT. I should like to have the chairman of the Committee on Claims, who reported this bill, explain it somewhat. Will he state whether this is not doing something that we have not been usually doing? I can not understand the bill just from hearing it read, and from glancing through the re-port hastily it seems to me it is a departure.

Mr. FULTON. I think the Senator is mistaken in saying it has not been customary to pass such bills. It is a character of claim which has been regularly recognized. This party had placed his household effects on the government wharf. He was on his way to Spokane in government employ; by direction of the Government he was moving to that point, and his household goods, arriving at Seattle, were placed on the government wharf, and were there burned. It has been the practice in these cases, where a party is traveling by direction of the Government, taking along only such things as the Government deems proper and necessary in the circumstances, and they are lost en route, to compensate him for them.

Mr. BURKETT. In what department was he employed? Mr. FULTON. I will have to look at the report, because there are several such cases. Perhaps the Senator from Washington [Mr. Piles], who is more familiar with the circumstances, can answer the question.

Mr. PILES. Mr. Clark was inspector of construction at Fort Casey, State of Washington, and he was directed by his superior officers to proceed to Spokane, Wash., in pursuance of other government employment. The Government having ordered him to this point, he had to take his household goods with They were shipped on the steamship Cartwright, a government vessel, from Fort Casey to Seattle, Wash., and while the goods were awaiting transfer from the wharf to the train they were destroyed in a government warehouse.

Mr. FULTON. Will the Mr. PILES. Certainly. Mr. FULTON. I will s Will the Senator from Washington allow me?

ESTATE OF GEORGE W. FLEMING.

The bill (H. R. 6032) to pay to the administratrix of the estate of George W. Fleming for services rendered as letter-box inspector from March 29, 1902, to June 13, 1903, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay to Zora S. Fleming, or to her successor, administratrix of the estate of George W. Fleming, deceased, $1,073.35, for services rendered by said George W. Fleming as letter-box inspector at Adrian, Mich., from March 29, 1902, to June 13, 1903.

CHAPLAIN HENRY SWIFT.

The bill (H. R. 2952) for the relief of Chaplain Henry Swift, Thirteenth Infantry, U. S. Army, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, on page 1, line 5, after the word "of," to strike out "$1,231.98" and insert "$1,003.18," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,003.18, said sum to be a payment in full for all losses of personal property incurred by him by reason of the wreck of the U.S. transport Morgan City in the Inland Sea of Japan on or about September 1, 1899: Provided, That the accounting officers of the Treasury shall require a schedule and affidavit from him, such schedule to be approved by the Secretary of War.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FULTON. There should be another amendment made. After the word "pay," in line 4, I move to insert the words "to Chaplain Henry Swift."

CENTENARY OF THE BIRTH OF ABRAHAM LINCOLN.

The joint resolution (H. J. Res. 247) relating to the celebration of the one hundredth anniversary of the birth of Abraham Lincoln and making the 12th day of February, 1909, a legal holiday, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. CARTER. I ask for action on the substitute which was reported by the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. WETMORE], from the Committee on the Library.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment of the committee

The Secretary. The Committee on the Library propose to strike out all after the resolving clause and to insert:

That the 12th day of February, 1909, the same being the centennial anniversary of the birth of Abraham Lincoln, be, and the same is hereby, made a special legal holiday in the District of Columbia and the Territories: Be it further

Resolved, That it is hereby recommended that the American people at home and abroad, the States and Territories, and the District of Columbia, all municipalities and towns, all organized bodies of citizens, all associations, and all people generally, set apart the centennial of the birth of Abraham Lincoln to do reverent honor to his memory: Be it further associations, and all people generally, set apart the centennial of the birth of Abraham Lincoln to do reverent honor to his memory; Be it further

Resolved, It is hereby recommended that at all places where people gather for public purposes, and in schools, colleges, and all seats of learning, addresses be made in enlogy of Lincoln, and other special and appropriate exercises be held: Be it further

Resolved, That the President be authorized to issue a proclamation, in accordance with the foregoing, inviting governors of States and Territories and mayors of cities to participate in the public recognition of the centennial anniversary of the birth of Abraham Lincoln, recommending that said day be observed as a special holiday; Be it further

Resolved, That with a view to the construction of suitable memorials to commemorate the public services and character of Abraham Lincoln, which memorials may include a great national highway to be called "The Lincoln Way," from Washington to the battlefield of Gettysburg, in the State of Pennsylvania, the sum of $50,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to defray the expenses in making a survey, plans for construction and estimates of cost by engineers of the United States Army, for said highway.

THOMAS J. SHOCKER.

The bill (H. R. 19893) for the relief of Thomas J. Shocker was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides that Thomas J. Shocker shall hereafter be held and considered to be entitled to all of the rights and benefits that he would be entitled to on account of military service, except pay, bounty, and other emoluments, if he had been continuously in the military service of the United States as a private of Company B, Twelfth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Cavalry, from the 12th day of September, 1863, to the 1st day of July, 1865, and had been honorably discharged on the date last named herein.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WARREN C. BEACH.

The bill (S. 4029) to appoint Warren C. Beach a captain in the army and place him on the retired list was announced as next in order.

Mr. KEAN. Let the bill go over. The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over without prejudice at the request of the Senator from New Jersey.

LANDS AT NEAH BAY, WASH.

WALTER F. ROGERS.

The bill (S. 6852) for the relief of Walter F. Rogers, executor of the estate of Sarah Edwards, late owner of lot No. 116, square No. 628, Washington, D. C., with regard to assessment and payment of damages on account of changes of grade due to construction of the Union Station, District of Columbia, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. KEAN. I should like to have the Senator from Montana [Mr. Carter], who reported the bill, explain it. Is this the only case we are going to have for damages done by the opera-tion, and so forth, of the new Union Station, or is it one of a large number of cases?

Mr. CARTER. This is an exceptional case. Mr. Rogers was appointed executor of the estate. He had an understanding with the district attorney that he would be given notice at the time the appraisement was to be made. Such notice was omitted through inadvertence, and the executor was not thus accorded the privilege of proving damages in behalf of the estate.

Mr. KEAN. The bill involves the sum of only $200?

Mr. CARTER. The amount involved is only about $200, Mr. KEAN. All the other cases are settled?

Mr. CARTER. I understand that this is the only case of this kind.

And no others can arise? Mr. KEAN.

Mr. CARTER. I am not prepared to state that, but we have not been advised of any.

Mr. KEAN. I should be loath to assent to any such precedent, if there were many cases.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ADOLPHUS ERWIN WELLS.

The bill (H. R. 10752) to complete the military record of Adolphus Erwin Wells was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment to add at the end of the bill the following proviso:

Provided, That no pay, bounty, or other emolument shall become due or payable by virtue of the passage of this act.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to muster Adolphus Erwin Wells, of North Carolina, as of Company E, Ninth Regiment Tennessee Cavalry, said muster to date from the 16th of June, 1864, and to issue to said Adolphus Erwin Wells an honorable discharge from said service, to date from the mustering out of said regiment: Provided, That no pay, bounty, or other emolument shall become due or payable by virtue of the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

EMPLOYMENT OF CHILD LABOR.

The bill (S. 7657) to amend the act approved May 28, 1908, entitled "An act to regulate the employment of child labor in the District of Columbia," was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with an amendment, in line 10, after the word "not," to strike out the words "less than $2 nor," so as to make the bill read:

Be it-enacted, etc., That section 15 of the act of May 28, 1908, entitled "An act to regulate the employment of child labor in the District of Columbia," be, and the same is hereby, amended by adding at the end of said section 15 the following:

"Any person violating any of the provisions of sections 11, 12, 13, 14, or 15 of this act shall be punished by a fine of not more than $20."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KEAN. I ask that the report of the committee be published in the RECORD. It shows what the act is and in what way it changes the existing law. The bill merely provides for a penalty, and I think it is all right.
The VICE-PRESIDENT. With

Without objection, the report will be printed without reading.

The report, submitted by Mr. Burkett, January 29, 1909, is as follows:

The Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred Senate bill 7657, "to amend the act approved May 28, 1908, entitled 'An act to regulate the employment of child labor in the District of Columbia," report the same back to the Senate with the recommendation that it be amended by striking out the words "less than $2 nor" in line 10, of page 1, and that as amended the bill be passed.

The objects of the bill are set forth in a communication of the president of the Board of Commissioners, which is as follows:

Washington, December 9, 1908.

DEAR SIR: The Commissioners of the District of Columbia have the honor to transmit herewith a draft of "A bill to amend an act approved May 28, 1908, entitled 'An act to regulate the employment of child labor in the District of Columbia,'" and to recommend its early enactment.

The necessity for this amendment is obvious from the fact that there is now no penalty for the violation of the sections named in the proposed legislation.

Very respectfully,

HENRY B. F. MACFARLAND, President Board of Commissioners District of Columbia.

Hon J. H. Gallinger, Chairman Committee on the District of Columbia, United States Senate.

Sections 11, 12, 13, 14, and 15 of this act, to which this proposed amendment applies, are as follows:

"SEC. 11. That no male child under 10 and no girl under 16 years of age shall exercise the trade of bootblacking, or sell or expose or offer for sale any newspapers, magazines, periodicals, or goods, wares, or merchandise of any description whatsoever, upon the streets, roads, or highways, or in any public place within the District of Columbia.

"SEC. 12. That from and after July 1, 1908, no male child under 16 years shall exercise the trade of bootblacking or sell or expose or offer for sale any newspapers, magazines, periodicals, or goods, wares, or merchandise of any description whatsoever upon the streets, roads, or highways, or in any public place within the District of Columbia, unless a permit and badge as hereinafter provided shall have been issued to him by the superintendent of public schools of the District of Columbia, or by a person authorized by him in writing for that purpose upon the application of the parent, guardian, or other person having the custody of the child desiring such a permit and badge, or in case said child has no parent, guardian, or custodian, then on the application of his next friend, being an adult.

"SEC. 13. That such permit and badge shall be issued free of charge to the applicant, but shall not be issued until an age and schooling certificate shall have been issued as provided in this act.

"SEC. 14. Such permit shall state the date and place of birth of the child, he name and address of its parent, guardian, or next friend, as the case may be, and describe the color of hair and eyes, the height and weight, and any distinguishing facial mark of such child, and shall further state that the age and schooling certificate has been duly examined and filed, and that the child named in such permit has appeared before the officer issuing the permit. The badge furnished by the officer issuing the permit and the name of the child. Every such badge on its reverse side, shall be si

EMPLOYMENT AGENCIES.

The bill (H. R. 20247) to amend section 8 of an act entitled "An act to regulate the keeping of employment agencies in the District of Columbia where fees are charged for procuring employment or situations," approved June 19, 1906, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with an amendment, on page 2, line 13, before the word "days," to strike out "thirty" and insert "fifteen," so as to read:

Employment agents or agencies shall be entitled to receive in advance from the applicant for work or employment, either male or female, $1 each, one-half of which is to be returned on demand if such applicant is not secured a fair opportunity of employment within fifteen days after the receipt of said original fee of $1.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

GEORGE W. HEDRICK.

The bill (H. R. 7006) to correct the military record of George W. Hedrick was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides that George W. Hedrick, late of Company B, Seventh West Virginia Volunteers, shall be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the service of the United States as of April 2, 1864; but no pay, bounty, or other emoluments shall become due or payable by virtue of the passage of this act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ALASKA SHORT LINE RAILROAD.

The bill (S. 7781) to extend the time for the construction and beginning construction of the Alaska Short Line Railroad, in Alaska, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KEAN. Let the bill go over.
The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will go over at the request of the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. PILES. Before the bill is put over, in view of the correspondence I have on the subject, I move to procede to its consideration, notwithstanding the objection. I can state what the bill is before the question is disposed of.

Mr. KEAN. Under the unanimous-consent agreement, that motion can not be made at this time.

Mr. PILES. What unanimous-consent agreement?
Mr. KEAN. The unanimous-consent agreement under which the calendar is being considered.

Mr. PILES. Is a motion in order at the present time to take up the bill, notwithstanding the objection?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is not, under the terms of the unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator from Washington can make the motion after the next two bills on the calendar are disposed of.

Mr. KEAN. I trust the Senator will not make any such mo-

IRVINE AGEE.

The bill (S. 3175) to correct the military record of Irvine Agee was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That Irvine Agee shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged as a private in Company D, Third Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Cavalry, on January 20, 1862. And the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to issue to the said Irvine Agee a certificate of honorable discharge as of that date: Provided, That no pay, bounty, or other emolument shall become due or payable by virtue of the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.
The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ROSEBUD INDIAN RESERVATION LANDS.

The bill (S. 7379) to authorize the sale and disposition of a portion of the surplus and unallotted lands in the Rosebud Indian Reservation, in the State of South Dakota, and making appropriation and provision to carry the same into effect, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KITTREDGE. Let the bill go over under Rule IX. The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will go to the calendar

under Rule IX

Mr. GAMBLE. Mr. President, I appreciate that under the rules of the Senate the objection may be insisted upon, but here is a matter of very great interest to the people of my State. The Rosebud Indians have a reservation of nearly 2,000,000 acres. A bill has been introduced and favorably reported upon by the Interior Department, and a unanimous report made from the Committee on Indian Affairs, under which it is proposed to open about one-half of the reservation to settlement. As the conditions are, those Indians have largely been allotted. A few minors are still to be allotted. Under no circumstances could action be taken looking to the opening of the reservation earlier than the coming fall. In the meantime all of the allotments would be made. With this reservation standing unopened to settlement, it is retarding the development and growth of that section of the State.

If my colleague has any proper or reasonable amendments to offer to the bill, I will be very glad to have them offered and considered by the Senate, but I do protest that under the unanimous-consent agreement we entered into a mere objection can throw the bill over under Rule IX.

If it were in order, Mr. President, I would move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill, the objection of the Senafor to the contrary notwithstanding.

RELATIONS BETWEEN CONGRESS AND THE EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENTS.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I wish simply to give a notice. A few days since, I asked that Senate resolution 248, offered by the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON], might lie on the table. I wish to state that after the routine morning business on the 3d instant I shall call up the resolution for the purpose of making a few remarks upon it.

PRESIDENTIAL SUCCESSION.

Mr. BACON. There was one measure, and I do not know but that there may be others, reported by a committee this morning not on the printed calendar. Are they not in order?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. They would be in order, although not upon the printed calendar.

Mr. WARREN. Are the reports printed?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The reports are not printed.

Mr. BACON. I will state to the Senator what the measure is. Mr. WARREN. I have no objection to any particular meas-

Mr. BACON. If there is any objection, of course I shall not

Mr. WARREN. I have no objection to any particular measure, but I assumed from what the Senator said that he wished to take up all the bills reported this morning.

Mr. BACON. I am interested only in one, and that is the joint resolution which came from the Judiciary Committee this morning concerning the presidential succession, one which has heretofore passed the Senate and which is recognized by every-body as a matter of importance. There was no written report, but simply a verbal report.

It is simply to provide against the possibility of a vacancy in the office of President without any provision of law for filling it. If there is any objection to it by any Senator, of course I do not wish to insist upon it, but I never heard any Senator object to it in any way.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair would state that the reports made this morning have gone to the Printer for printing, and they are not at hand at the moment.

ALASKA SHORT LINE RAILROAD.

Mr. PILES. I now ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 7781) to extend the time for the construction and beginning construction of the Alaska Short Line Railroad in Alaska.

Mr. KEAN. Mr. President—
Mr. PILES. I wish to explain to the Senate why I ask for the consideration of the bill at the present time.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from New Jersey?
Mr. PILES. Yes; for a question.

From what committee did the bill come? Mr. KEAN.

Mr. PILES. From the Committee on Territories.

I am a member of that committee, and I re-Mr. KEAN. ceived no notice of any meeting of the committee.

Mr. PILES. That may be true, but the committee was polled. I should like to impress upon the Senate the importance of considering the bill at this time.

Mr. KEAN. It is a bill that I consider ought not to pass. Mr. BURKETT. Mr. President, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nebraska will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. BURKETT. I desire to know if unanimous consent was not given to lay aside the postal savings banks bill for the purpose of considering the calendar under Rule VIII. correct, the only thing in order now is to lay before the Senate the unfinished business

ment.

Mr. BURKETT. I call for the regular order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The agreement was that the consideration of the calendar under Rule VIII should be proceeded with until it was concluded, the unfinished business having been displaced to that extent.

Mr. BURKETT. I call for the regular order. The VICE-PRESIDENT. The unfinished business is properly before the Senate.

POSTAL SAVINGS BANKS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 6484) to establish postal savings banks for depositing savings at interest with the security of the Government for repayment thereof, and for other purposes.

Mr. PILES. I ask the Senator from Montana if he will yield for a moment until I can explain Senate bill 7781. Of course, if the Senate wish to defeat the bill under the circumstances they can do it, but I should like the Senate to know what it is about.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, I have no desire to press the unfinished business this afternoon, for the reason that certain Senators who have amendments to offer are not present and did not anticipate that the bill would come up for consideration during the day.

While on this subject I take occasion again to state to Senators who desire to present amendments that while some latitude will be allowed for the consideration of the Brownsville case, if continuing over from the morning hour to-morrow, I shall feel called upon to press the postal savings banks bill on Wednesday. I believe that we are entitled to the privilege of perfecting the bill according to the best judgment of the Senate, and when so perfected I think we shall be entitled to a vote upon the bill

I fully realize the improbability of the bill becoming a law in the few remaining days of the present Congress, but that apprehension does not relieve the Senate of its duty in the premises. I think the country is entitled to know whether a majority of this body is favorable to this class of legislation or not, and I think the committee of the Senate which may deal with the subject-matter during the next Congress is entitled to the judgment of the Senate upon the various amendments now pending offered by Senators to the bill.

I make these remarks at this time hoping that Senators wishing to offer amendments will be present when the time for the consideration of the bill arrives each day. If not present, I shall consider Senators as waiving their proposed amendments and ask that the consideration of the bill be proceeded with.

For the purpose of accommodating the Senator from Washington [Mr. Piles] and other Senators, I now ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

INSPECTION AND GRADING OF GRAIN.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I wish to make an inquiry about the calendar. I was not here when we started on the calendar. I desire to know what was done with Calendar No. 754, being the bill (S. 382) to provide for the inspection and grading of grain entering into interstate commerce, and to secure uniformity in standards and classification of grain, and for other purposes.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill referred to went to the calendar under Rule IX.

Mr. McCUMBER. Upon the request of what Senator?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That can only be told by reference to the reporter's notes.

Mr. McCUMBER. I do not know who asked that the bill go to the calendar under Rule IX. If I knew what Senator had made that request I would ask permission, instead of going to the calendar under Rule IX, that the bill be passed over, retaining its place on the calendar under Rule VIII.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The record shows that it went to the calendar under Rule IX at the request of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Lorge]

Massachusetts [Mr. Lodge].

Mr. McCUMBER. I should have been glad to have had my attention called to it before the bill was placed under Rule 1X. Mr. FORAKER. The bill was called up and I came in while it was being read.

Mr. WARREN. Allow me to correct the Senator. It was not called up, but came up in regular course.

Mr. FORAKER. I was not in the Chamber when it came up. Mr. WARREN. And the Senator from Iowa [Mr. Dolliver] was not here.

Mr. McCUMBER. I simply want to give notice that to-morrow, when the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Lodge], who made the objection, is here, I will ask that the bill be taken from the calendar under Rule IX and placed upon the calendar under Rule VIII.

ALASKA SHORT LINE RAILBOAD.

Mr. PILES. Mr. President, I should like to have the Senate consider at this time Senate bill 7781, but the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. Kean] tells me he wants to examine it.
Mr. KEAN. I suggest that I should like to examine the bill further.

Mr. PILES. Therefore I will not press the bill now, but I give notice that I shall press it at the earliest date possible.

Mr. BACON. I now have the joint resolution to which reference was made a few moments ago, and, if there is no objection, I should be glad to have it acted upon.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution (S. R. 102) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States respecting the succession to the Presidency in certain cases. It provides that the following amendment to the Constitution of the United States be proposed for ratification by the legislatures in the several States, which when ratified by legislatures in three-fourths of the United States, shall be valid as a part of the Constitution, namely:

ARTICLE XVI.

In all cases not provided for by Article II, clause 5, of the Constitu-tion where there is no person entitled to discharge the duties of the office of the President, the same shall devolve upon the Vice-President. The Congress may by law provide for the case where there is no per-son entitled to hold the office of President or Vice-President, declaring what officer shall then act as President, and such officer shall act accord-ingly until the disability shall be removed or a President shall be elected.

Mr. BACON. I will state, Mr. President, that the joint resolution comes with the unanimous recommendation of the Committee on the Judiciary.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, two-thirds of the Senators present voting in favor thereof.

Mr. KEAN. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 3 o'clock and 45 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, February 2, 1909, at 12 o'clock meridian.

CONFIRMATIONS.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Monday, February 1, 1909.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D. The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

SMOKING OPIUM.

Mr. PAYNE, from the Committee on Ways and Means, reported the bill (H. R. 27427) to prohibit the importation and use of opium for other than medicinal purposes and the bill (S. 8021) to prohibit the importation and use of opium for other than medicinal purposes, which were read a first and second time and, with the accompanying report (H. Rept. No. 2003), referred to the Committee on the Whole House on the state of the Union and ordered printed.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I now move to suspend the rules and discharge the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 27427) to prohibit the importation and use of opium for other than medicinal purposes, and to pass the same, which bill I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That after the 1st day of April, 1909, it shall be unlawful to import into the United States oplum in any form or any preparation or derivative thereof: Provided, That opium and preparations and derivatives thereof, other than smoking opium or opium prepared for smoking, may be imported for medicinal purposes only, under regulations which the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to prescribe, and when so imported shall be subject to the duties which are now or may hereafter be imposed by law.

Sec. 2. That if any person shall fraudulently or knowingly import or bring into the United States, or assist in so doing, any opium or any preparation or derivative thereof contrary to law, or shall receive, conceal, buy, sell, or in any manner facilitate the transportation, concealment, or sale of such opium or preparation or derivative thereof after importation, knowing the same to have been imported contrary to law, such opium or preparation or derivative thereof shall be forfeited and shall be destroyed, and the offender shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $5,000 nor less than $50, or by imprisonment for any time not exceeding two years, or both. Whenever, on trial for a violation of this section, the defendant is shown to have, or to have had, possession shall be deemed sufficient evidence to authorize conviction unless the defendant shall explain the possession to the satisfaction of the jury.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded? Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] is entitled to twenty minutes and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Keifer] to twenty

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, this bill is the bill drafted by the former Secretary of State, Mr. Root, and sent to Members of the House and Senate the latter part of December last, with this exception, the regulations are to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury instead of the Secretary of Agriculture, the Secretary of the Treasury now having charge of all matters pertaining to imports. Also the clause, which appears for the first time, I believe, in any of these bills, preserving the duty on opium which may be imported for medicinal purposes. object of the bill is to prohibit the importation of opium prepared for smoking, or smoking opium. The language goes to the importation of all opium, with a proviso that opium for medicinal purposes may be imported under rules and regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury and subject to the duties provided by law. The second section is redrafted from section 3082 of the Revised Statutes, which provides punishment for knowingly or fraudulently disobeying the laws in reference to the importation of articles in general, applying that section to the importation of opium into the United States. That law was passed in 1799, and was reenacted and amended in 1866 and in 1876, and has been frequently construed by the courts and its meaning fully ascertained and its constitutionality also upheld.

Several days ago a bill was called up by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] prohibiting the importation of opium for smoking purposes. At that time I objected to the consideration of the bill for reasons which I fully stated to the House and which appear in the RECORD of that day. I was somewhat surprised on Saturday afternoon to receive a copy of a letter from the gentleman from Illinois, in which he seemed to totally misconstrue my objection into an objection to prohibit the importation of smoking opium. What I objected to in the law-as I saw it, then presented for the first time to me in the shape in which it was when it was read here from the Clerk's deskthat it did not prohibit and would not stop the use of opium or tend to stop it in the United States.

After making that objection I went to see the Secretary of State to find out the reasons for the bill, and he told me that two years ago last summer the subject had been brought up while the Secretary of State himself was out of town and the Assistant Secretary then, now Secretary of State, had charge of affairs, and it resulted in his negotiating with the different powers of the world for the convocation of a convention at Hongkong on the 1st of January. That was afterwards postponed until the 1st of February because of the death of the Emperor of China, and he told me that most of the powers had come into the conven-That convention meets at Hongkong to-day, and he was particularly anxious that this bill should pass, because the United States had the initiative in calling that convention and it would strengthen the hands of the administration. He also stated something in regard to the effect of the bill which passed the House in reference to the importation of opium in the Philippine Islands, and the good effects which resulted from that bill. although we have police powers in the Philippine Islands, and that act went beyond this in that respect, because we had the

Mr. Speaker, smoking opium is manufactured abroad, exclusively in China. There is a process by which it can be manufactured in this country from medicinal opium, but Chinamen desire opium prepared for smoking in their own country; but rather than not have it at all they would take that prepared in this country, undoubtedly. A suggestion has been made, which was made by the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. GAINES], that this act might be greatly strengthened by putting a tax which would be prohibitive upon the manufacture of smoking opium in this country. That suggestion came, how-ever, too late for its consideration if action was to be had upon

The committee will take up that suggestion in the preparation of the new revenue bill, and I am in hopes that we can report an effective measure that will make it extremely difficult, at least, to manufacture smoking opium in this country. That, in connection with this bill, as gentlemen will readily see, will do very much to cut off the use of smoking opium in this country. We still have the danger of importation through smuggling, because it is a well-known fact that when we had a rate of $12 per pound upon smoking opium there was a good deal of it imported into the United States that did not come through the custom-house. The tax was reduced to $6 a pound in order that we might collect the duty that we have collected upon the full amount. It is true that this bill in its effect will cut off over $900,000 of the revenues of the Government, and it should not be enacted unless it will do some good, but I am heartily in sympathy, and always have been, with any well-directed effort to suppress the opium habit, either in this country or in any other country, and the only objection I ever had to this bill was that it would not affect that traffic in the opium as it appeared to me at first blush and at its first reading the other day in the House. But it seems to me after a conversation with the Secretary of State, who has had this matter under consideration now for over two years, and weighing carefully the facts which he presented, that it will tend in some manner to make it more difficult and therefore to suppress in part the use of smoking opium in the United States; therefore, I am very cheerfully for this bill, which was introduced as soon as I could get a conference with the Secretary of State and get his opinion upon the subject. It is a unanimous report from the Committee on Ways and Means.

A word further, Mr. Speaker. We have reported back the bill of the Senate, which was referred to our committee, because they clearly had no jurisdiction of the subject-matter. It was a matter that related to the raising of the revenues, and under all the decisions it was clearly a matter that must originate in the House of Representatives. We have accompanied that report with a resolution to table that bill, stating our reasons for such action; also requiring that the Clerk shall transmit a copy of the resolution to the Senate. I bring this matter up now, because I shall call up that report immediately after the conclusion of the House upon this bill and ask it to pass that resolution, and I suppose it will not be open to debate at that time.

I reserve the balance of my time, Mr. Speaker. Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Speaker, I did not demand a second upon this motion and bill for the purpose particularly of opposing it. It is very difficult to understand always the purpose and purport of a bill offered for consideration as this one was. therefore demanded a second in order that we might have a full explanation of the character that we have just had of the bill. I hope, Mr. Speaker, that the bill will not have the effect of taking away the $900,000 of revenue only, but that another step will be taken to prohibit the manufacture of opium in this If we take the step proposed by this bill, it may promote the manufacture of opium here and not suppress the smoking habit here.

I now, Mr. Speaker, yield ten minutes of my time to the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. GAINES].

Mr. GAINES of West Virginia. If it is the desire to yield, first, to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann], I am perfectly willing to wait until he gets through.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Keifer] yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann]?

Mr. KEIFER. I am perfectly willing to yield to the gentleman from Illinois first, but I had promised the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. GAINES] ten minutes.

Mr. Speaker, how much time have I left? Mr. PAYNE.

The SPEAKER. Eleven minutes.

Mr. PAYNE. I will yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann].

Mr. KEIFER. I will yield ten minutes to the gentleman. Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I did not demand a second upon the motion because I thought someone opposed to the bill was first entitled to demand a second. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Keifer] says that he is in favor of the bill, and I assume now that at this time everybody in the House is in favor of it. It is a righteous measure.

Mr. Speaker, more than a year ago the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DENBY], the recognized authority in this House upon Chinese matters, and a member of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, brought to my attention, because I had had something to do with the pure-food legislation and had then pending in the House one bill in regard to the transportation of habitforming drugs, the necessity of some legislation which would prohibit the importation and transportation of opium in the United States. In accordance with that suggestion, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DENBY], the State Department, the Agricultural Department, and myself worked upon a bill on that subject which was introduced at the last session of Congress, but which covered a great deal more than the mere importation of opium. At this session of Congress the gentleman frem Michigan again brought up the subject, stating that it was highly desirable for Congress to enact legislation before the commission met in Shanghai-not in Hongkong, as suggested by the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE]-and a bill was prepared by the State Department, introduced by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Denby] and referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. When that bill came up for consideration in the committee it covered, among other things, the manufacture of opium, and the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] now suggests that his committee will take up the question of the manufacture of opium. Why, Mr. Speaker, our committee and everybody understand that when the matter is presented the United States can not determine the question of the manufacture of opium. It is a federal question.

Mr. PAYNE. If the gentleman will allow me to state right there-under the internal-revenue tax law. I did not state that, but I meant to do so.

Mr. MANN. Now, Mr. Speaker, that bill was referred to a subcommittee, of which I had the honor to be the chairman, and we took up the matter with the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DENBY] and the State Department. The bill now pending was prepared by the Secretary of State at the request of myself and the gentleman from Michigan. It came here and was introduced by the latter, referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce as a regulation of commerce, and reported by me into the House. When reported into the House I called the attention of the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] to it, on the ground that he might think it was revenue legislation which belonged to his committee. He made suggestions and objections to the bill, which I proposed to correct with an amendment, not submitted to the gentleman the day it was called up, as I understood him to say, but submitted to the gentleman several days in advance, and laid by the gentleman before his committee, or certain members of it, at least. When the bill was presented to the House the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] objected.

I am proud of the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] more because he now has the manhood to acknowledge that he was wrong then and to now propose the bill himself for the favorable consideration of the House, though I give the credit, where it belongs, for this legislation to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Denby]. I want to say, Mr. Speaker, I do not care what committee the legislation comes from or what committee has considered the bill. I wanted to see this legislation enacted into law, to see the bill pass the House, and I am glad that the Committee on Ways and Means, or one of its members, on Saturday, after receiving a little billet which I have sent out to various Members of the House, promptly and properly introduced a bill almost, if not quite, an exact copy of the bill then pending in the House, and now have the good judgment and the manhood to report it into the House and ask favorable consideration of it.

Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from New York has been active on opium legislation, much to his credit. In 1905 Congress passed the Philippine tariff bill. One of the provisions of that law was that no opium except for medicinal purposes should be imported into the Philippine Islands after the 1st of March last. I have a report from the officials of the Philippine Islands stating that on the 1st of March last there were more than 40,000 people in the Philippine Islands habituated to the use of opium, and because of the prohibition of the importation of smoking opium into those islands since March 1, that the number of 40,000 has now been reduced to less than 5,000. No better example in the world can ever be given of the effect of absolute prohibition in such cases; and I am glad the controversy between committees may be settled by the passage of the bill in the interest of humanity, one great step forward again in the civilization of the world, without regard to petty jealousies in the House of Representatives. [Applause.]

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has eleven minutes re-Mr. KEIFER. I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from West Virginia.

Mr. GAINES of West Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I regret very much that the gentleman from Illinois has to-day seen fit to base his argument, in discussing this matter, on the question of petty jealousies between committees. I assure the membership of this House that that insinuation, that aspersion by the gentleman from Illinois is not correct; that the Ways and Means Committee in the action it has taken has not been actuated by any such motive. I regret also that the gentleman from Illinois saw fit to say in a letter to Members of the House that the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee objected to the passage of the bill prohibiting the importation of opium. The chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, Mr. Speaker, is a storehouse of legislative information, and he is a conspicuous example of legislative integrity and courage. The members of the Ways and Means Committee who objected to the bill brought up by the gentleman from Illinois the other day did so because they believed that it would not accomplish the purpose which he sought; not only that, but because they believed it would tend to accomplish the exact opposite.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question? Mr. GAINES of West Virginia. Yes; for a question? Mr. MANN.

In what respect does the present bill differ? Mr. GAINES of West Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I have not time to go into a comparison of the two bills. That is not the question. I believe that this is a piece of half-baked legisla-The history of the tariff on opium in this country is this, if the House will give me attention: In the McKinley tariff bill the duty on opium was $12 a pound; when the Wilson bill was passed it reduced the tariff on opium to $6 a pound. While that matter was under discussion in the Senate of the United States Senator Sherman said that he would not only oppose the bill, but delay in every possible way its passage if it contained a proposition reducing the duty on opium. He was assured by Mr. Vest that the reason the duty was proposed to be reduced on opium was because the administrative officers on the Pacific coast assured the committee that a duty of $12 a pound made smuggling so profitable that more opium was introduced at that duty than would be introduced at a lower duty; and for that reason, in order to reduce the use of opium and not increase it, the Wilson bill reduced the duty on opium to $6 a pound.

Now, unfortunately, because of the conservatism of the Chinese people, they so much prefer to have their oplum prepared in China that the high rate of duty has not stimulated the manufacture of opium in this country; but it is a notorious fact, known of all men, that those who are addicted to the opium habit will secure the drug in some form, even though not the preferred form, if they are prevented from getting it in the form in which it is preferred. My belief and fear is that this proposition presented to the House of Representatives by the gentleman from Illinois would but stimulate the manufacture and preparation of opium for smoking in this country, and, instead of protecting the morals of the country, the thing that every good American citizen, including the gentleman from Illinois, would most hate to see would occur.

This matter was before the legislative body in the Philippine Islands. They provided there that no person might use opium unless he registered himself as a confirmed opium smoker. We have no such power in this country. It takes plenary power to stamp out such a habit—if it can be suppressed at all—the full police power. Our Federal Government does not have it. It has occurred to me that perhaps if this legislation passed, at a future time a bill could be introduced supplementing it with further legislation, and that we might accomplish the object sought by the gentleman from Illinois by placing a prohibitive internal-revenue tax on the transportation of opium for smoking in this country.

I believe that this bill is not well thought out; and I want now, Mr. Speaker, to register my protest against the habit in this country that is to-day in vogue in this House and among members of other legislative bodies to criticise the motives of those who would give full consideration to a proposition before they vote upon it.

This is a matter that the civilized nations of the world have been considering for a century. It must occur to every man that if a thing which is so desirable to be done as stamping out the smoking of opium could be done by a simple law prohibiting the importation of opium, that remedy would have been thought out and applied long ago.

Mr. MANN. It would have been applied a week ago if there had not been objection to it.

Mr. GAINES of West Virginia. It would have been applied years and years ago if there were anything in so simple a proposition. Is it possible that a man lives, except those engaged in the traffic and those addicted to the habit, who would not stamp it out at any time if he could? The question is, What legislation will accomplish the purpose? I protest against the attitude of the gentleman from Illinois in undertaking to make the House and the country believe that those who would give the legislation better consideration than has been given to it have some motive which he has that to criticise.

It may be it. Speaker, that not having the police power to prevent the inharcure of opium in this country, we may yet prevent the bad results that would have followed upon the legislation that the gentleman from Illinois proposed by imposing a prohibitive internal-revenue tax. After I have opportunity to consult the administrative officers upon the Pacific coast, after I have opportunity to consult the Treasury Department, I hope to introduce a bill to place such a revenue tax upon the preparation of opium for smoking in this country. In the meantime I wish that we could have had a measure introduced, such as that which the Japanese Government introduced to control the opium traffic in the island of Formosa, the most intelligent legislation, according to the report of our Philippine Commis-

For my part, Mr. Speaker, yielding to no man, not even the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann], in my hostility to the practice of opium smoking and in my hostility to the drug habit generally, I shall vote against this legislation in its present condition, and if it passes the House I shall attempt to supplement it in such manner as to prevent the evils that would follow from it if left in the condition in which it now is.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentleman yield for question?

Mr. GAINES of West Virginia. I will.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Does not the gentleman think the last sentence in the last section is dangerous?

Whenever, on trial for a violation of this section, the defendant is shown to have, or to have had, possession of such oplum or preparation or derivative thereof, such possession shall be deemed sufficient evidence to authorize conviction unless the defendant shall explain the possession to the satisfaction of the jury.

I will ask the gentleman if this does not change the wellrecognized rule of criminal evidence as held in United States courts and also in the courts of every State in this Union, that defendant is presumed to be innocent until his guilt is established by competent evidence. Here in the first section of this bill it is provided that opium may be imported into the United States for medical purposes, and may be sold to and be lawfully in the possession of a druggist or a doctor, or a man to whom it is prescribed by a doctor.

Yet the possession of the drug by that individual is made criminal and the prima facie evidence is reversed against him in this bill, and the man lawfully in possession of opium under the first section of the bill would under the second one be presumed to be a criminal. I think it is a dangerous and unjust perversion of the well-known rules of criminal evidence in that respect.

Mr. GAINES of West Virginia. I will answer the gentleman in this way: Sufficient time has not been given to think out this question, either as to the manner in which the act shall be drafted or the substance of its provisions. But my information-curbstone information-is this, that a similar provision in the federal criminal statutes has been held repeatedly to be constitutional.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. My objection is that it repeals the law of criminal evidence heretofore used in all criminal trials in this country and compels a defendant to prove his innocence, when in the courts of all civilized countries that evidence is presumed.

Mr. GAINES of West Virginia. It is an exception to the rule, but I repeat that I understand it has been held constitutional.

But neither that question nor any other in connection with this measure has been given the attention that the subject ought to have by the Congress.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the Record the bill for which I asked unanimous consent for consideration the other day.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GAINES of West Virginia. What was the request?

Mr. PAYNE. The gentleman from Illinois wants to insert in the Record the bill to which he refers. The House will be able to see the difference between the two, or gentlemen can look at the two propositions now and see the difference. no objection to stating what it is.

Mr. MANN. I understand what the difference is. There is no difference in the principle of the bill at all.

The bill referred to by Mr. MANN is as follows:

A bill (H. R. 24863) to prohibit the importation and use of opium for other than medicinal purposes.

Be it enacted, etc., That after the 1st day of April, 1909, it shall be unlawful to import into the United States opium in any form or any preparation or derivative thereof: Provided, That opium and preparations and derivatives thereof other than smoking opium or opium prepared for smoking may be imported for medicinal purposes only under regulations which the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized to establish.

SEC. 2. That if any person shall fraudulently or knowingly import or bring into the United States, or assist in so doing, any opium or any preparation or derivative thereof contrary to law or shall receive, conceal, buy, sell, or in any manner facilitate the transportation, concealment, or sale of such opium or preparation or derivative thereof after importation, knowing the same to have been imported contrary to law, such opium or preparation or derivative thereof shall be forfeited and shall be destroyed, and the offender shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $5,000 nor less than $50, or be imprisoned for any time not exceeding two years, or both. Whenever on trial for a violation of this section the defendant is shown to have or to have had possession of such oplum or preparation or derivative thereof, such possession shall be deemed evidence sufficient to anthorize conviction unless the defendant shall explain the possession to the satisfaction of the jury.

Mr. PAYNE. Oh, well, now the gentleman is getting down to the difference in the principle of the bills. We added to the

And when so imported shall be subject to the duties which are now or may hereafter be imposed by law.

The duties imposed by law on opium for medicinal purposes imported into the United States amounted to $450,000 last year, and that is quite a little addition, as the gentleman will find.

Mr. MANN. I would if I had not had the opinion of the department officers that the other bill did not affect the duties on

Mr. PAYNE. I do not know what department officers construed the bill in that manner.

Mr. MANN. Just such departments as the Attorney-General's department and the Department of the Treasury, and other departments of that kind, which, of course, in the gentleman's estimate, amount to nothing.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, the first opium bill that was shown me by the gentleman from Illinois was shown me the day before he called it up.

Mr. MANN. Oh, I beg the gentleman's pardon. Mr. PAYNE. And I immediately said to the gentleman on reading it, at the first sight, that I found two defects in it. One was that the Secretary of the Treasury should be substituted for the Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman does not wish to make an erroneous statement. I showed it to him several days before I called it up, and sent a copy of the bill to the room of the Ways and Means Committee at his request two days before I called it up.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I again make the affirmation that the gentleman from Illinois is mistaken. The first day that I saw the bill was the day before the gentleman called it up, but that is immaterial. When I did see the bill and read it. I immediately suggested to the gentleman that the Secretary of the Treasury should have charge of these regulations and not the Secretary of Agriculture. I also called attention to the fact that the provisions in the bill eliminated the duty on medicinal opium. I made that suggestion at that time. I told him the bill, of course, belonged to the Committee on Ways and Means, but I would make no objection because it had not been referred to that committee, and as we were meeting every day, I would submit it to the subcommittee.

Mr. MANN. I would like to ask the gentleman from Ohio

if he has any more time.

Mr. PAYNE. How much time does the gentleman want? Mr. MANN. Considering that the gentleman from New York and the gentleman from Ohio had forty minutes, and I was entitled to half of it, I will not ask any further consideration of the gentleman from New York.

Mr. PAYNE. The gentleman from Illinois is always trying to put some one else in the wrong, but I will yield to him.

Mr. MANN. I will let the gentleman finish his sentence. Mr. PAYNE. I told the gentleman from Illinois that I would submit it to the subcommittee in the afternoon. We met at 2 o'clock, and I did submit it to them. I stated to the subcommittee that, as far as I was concerned, I would make no objection, because the bill had not been referred to our committee. I told the subcommittee the objection I had to the bill, and some of them raised further objections. The next day the gentleman from Illinois brought in the bill which appears in the RECORD, and it differs from this bill in the most important particulars

But that is not very essential to this controversy. I should not have brought it up if it had not been for the remarks made by the gentleman from Illinois. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has six minutes.

Mr. PAYNE. I will yield three minutes to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I can see no special object in continuing this controversy concerning the bill between the gentleman from New York and myself; and yet I think it is fair to myself to say something, because the gentleman has unintentionally misrepresented the matter. If it be correct that the gentleman and his committee cared nothing about the jurisdiction of the committee, why in the world did the gentleman on Saturday introduce a bill and have it sent to his committee when it is almost identically the same bill which was reported into the House?

Mr. PAYNE. Does the gentleman want an answer now?

Mr. MANN. If he will yield me more time.

Mr. PAYNE. I introduced it retaining the revenue on medicinal opium.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman introduced it with an amendment which could have been adopted here.

Mr. PAYNE. It is in the bill; the gentleman does not seem to know what he is talking about.

Mr. MANN. I am satisfied with the apology offered by the gentleman from New York in his effort to pass this bill which he objected to a few days ago. [Applause.]

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I have no hesitancy in saying that had I heard the statement of the Secretary of State before the gentleman brought up the bill and presented it to me I should have endeavored then to have it amended so as to preserve the revenue, and would have united with him in the passage of the bill. After I got that information, I introduced a bill before I received the bill of the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. OLLIE M. JAMES. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. Would it be in order at this time to move to appoint a select committee whose duty it shall be to ascertain the difference, if any, between the bill of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] and the bill of the Ways and Means Committee introduced by Mr. Payne? [Laughter.]

passing the bill.

The question was taken; and two-thirds having voted in favor thereof, the rules were suspended, and the bill was passed.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speeter, I now call up the resolution on the Senate bill, reported by the committee, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

House resolution 531.

Resolved, That the bill of the Senate (S. 8021) to prohibit the importation and use of oplum for other than medicinal purposes in effect repeals in part the provision of section 43 of the act of July 24, 1897, the existing tariff act, and in the opinion of this House contravenes the first clause of the seventh section of the first article of the Constitution of the United States, and is an infringement of the privileges of this House, and that the said bill be laid upon the table; that a copy of this resolution be transmitted to the Senate.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill (H. R. 24863) to prohibit the importation and use of opium for other than medicinal purposes be laid upon the table.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

There was no objection.

BANKRUPTCY LAW.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the following order, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Order No. 20.

House Order No. 20.

Ordered, That on Saturday, February 6, it shall be in order to consider in the House the bill (H. R. 21929) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States," approved July 1, 1898, as amended by an act approved February 5, 1903; and upon consideration of said bill it shall at once be in order to offer an amendment, in the nature of a substitute, providing for a repeal of the existing bankruptcy law, and the vote on said substitute amendment shall be taken before amendments to the text of the bill shall be in order.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? Mr. BENNET of New York. I object.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bill of the following title:

H. R. 26062. An act authorizing the creation of a and district in the State of South Dakota, to be known if the Bellefourche land district.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

H. R. 15372. An act for the allowance of certain claims reported by the Court of Claims under the provisions of the acts approved March 3, 1883, and March 3, 1887, and commonly known as the Bowman and the Tucker acts.

HOUSE BILL WITH SENATE AMENDMENTS REFERRED.

Under clause 2, Rule XXIV, House bill (H. R. 15372) for the allowance of certain claims reported by the Court of Claims under the provisions of the acts approved March 3, 1883, and March 3, 1887, and commonly known as the Bowman and the Tucker acts, with Senate amendments, was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to the Committee on War Claims.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. WILSON of Illinois, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly en-rolled bills of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 17572. An act for the relief of George M. Voorhees;

H. R. 4931. An act to correct the military record of Corwin M. Holt.

The Speaker announced his signature to enrolled bill of the following title:

S. 5473. An act amending section 1998 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, and to authorize the Secretary of the Navy in certain cases to mitigate or remit the loss of rights of citizenship imposed by law upon deserters from the naval service.

GOVERNMENT OF THE CANAL ZONE.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the following order, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

House Order No. 21.

Floured, That it shall be in order on Tuesday, the 9th day of February, 1909, at any time after reading the Journal, to move to go into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 27250) to provide for the government of the Canal Zone, the construction of the Panama Canal, and for other purposes, and that general debate upon said bill shall not occupy more than two hours.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?
Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I will ask the gentleman from Minnesota what this bill contemplates.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. It contemplates a civil government for the Canal Zone.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Have we not got a civil government now?

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. No; only under executive orders of the President; and under the order of the President courts must be established from which there is no right of appeal to any courts of the United States. All of the functions of government now exist only by an arbitrary order of the Executive. There are no legislative rights there at all, and the power of the Executive is doubtful as to its basis and limited necessarily in its scope. So a dangerous condition of affairs exists. That condition has been reported to this Congress several times by the President and by the Secretary of War and the heads of the commission, and they ask that proper legislation be had establishing a system of civil government there. That is what this bill does.

Mr. CLARK of Missourt. Is this a proposition to establish a permanent arrangement down there or just to tide over something?

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. It is practically a temporary stem. The language of the bill establishes a permanent system, but the fact is it is a system to assist in the construction of the canal and during the construction of the canal while existing conditions shall continue. It is a system to coordinate the civil with the engineering authorities in the construction of the canal.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. It is going to wipe out this present system down there?

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Yes; it does.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Does the gentleman think that two hours is sufficient time within which to discuss a system of government for that Canal Zone?

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. The general debate is for two hours. The balance of the day will be used to discuss the sections of the bill under the five-minute rule.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. How much time will be allowed

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. The legislative day of Tues-

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Will there be free right of amendment?

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Yes; all the rights that exist under the rules of the House; no limitation at all except as to the time for general debate. Mr. CLARK of Missouri. And the gentleman will not try to cut it off? Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Not at all. There will be the utmost freedom of debate and right of amendment, as I have before stated.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?
Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have the order again read.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the order will be read. There was no objection, and the Clerk again reported the BILLS ON PRIVATE CALENDAR.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the following order, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk reads as follows:

House Order No. 22.

Ordered, That on Friday next it shall be in order in the House as in the Committee of the Whole House to consider all bills on the Private Calendar to the consideration of which no objection is made.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?
Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman how he is going to find out whether there is any objection?

Mr. MANN. If this order should be passed, the House could still, if it chose, go into Committee of the Whole House under the rules as they exist; but unless it so chooses, the calendar would be called in the House without going through the form of taking the time to pass the bills twice; and if anybody objects the bills will be passed, the bills will be laid over, and then the House could still go into the Committee of the Whole House on those bills afterwards, if it saw fit and there was time.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Now, if there is a little team work of the right sort objection could be made to any bill. I think

I have seen that trick worked here.

Mr. MANN. Oh, yes; you could, I think; but of course the House at any time it chooses could go out from the operation of this order and go into the regular order and go into the Committee of the Whole House, but the gentleman understands very well there are a number of bills on the Private Calendar, none of which have been considered; and it is nothing to me, I am not interested-

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, then I move to suspend the rules and pass the order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois moves to suspend the rules and agree to the order. Is a second demanded?

A second was not demanded.

The question was taken; and in the opinion of the Chair, two-thirds having voted in favor thereof, the rules were suspended, and the order was agreed to.

SECRET SERVICE.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the select committee appointed under House resolution No. 480, I ask unanimous consent for the reading of a short preliminary report, which I have sent to the Clerk's desk, and the present consideration of the resolution which forms a part thereof.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the following resolution and the reading of the report, which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 532.

House resolution 532.

The select committee appointed in pursuance of House resolution No. 480, begs leave to make this preliminary report and shows that it has already proceeded sufficiently far to learn that to make the full inquiry required by the second branch of said resolution as to the number of persons employed in the different branches of the public service in the prevention of frauds and apprehension and bringing to trial and punishment of persons charged with violating the laws of the United States, the names of persons so employed, the specific duty performed or engaged in by each such employee each day since the beginning of the fiscal year 1908, can not be completed during the present session of the House, but would require many months of investigation beyond the life of the present Congress.

Your committee therefore recommends the adoption of the following resolution:

"Resolved, That the select committee, appointed in pursuance of House resolution No. 480, and thereby requested to report to the House during the present session, shall inquire and report only as follows:

"First. What appropriations were made at the first session of the Sixtieth Congress for the fiscal year 1909 that could be used to prevent frauds in and depredations upon the several branches of the public service, including the protection of public lands and their products from fraudulent entry or appropriation, and to apprehend and punish persons charged with violation of the laws of the United States; also what increase, or decrease, if any, was made in any of such appropriations as compared with the amounts appropriated for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908.

"'Second. What branches of the public service, paid for in whole or in part out of the United States Treasury, are authorized or are in existence and supported by appropriations made by Congress, whose duties, in whole or in part, are to detect and prevent frauds, or to apprehend and bring to trial and punishment persons charged with violating the laws of the United States; whether such branches of the public service or any persons employed therein have been or are engaged in any duty not contemplated by law of the appropriation establishing or providing for such service; the number of all persons employed, for any period, in each branch of such service during the current and last fiscal year, and the rates of compensation and allowance paid or being paid to them.'

"The committee, or any subcommittee thereof, is authorized to sit during the sessions of the House; to send for persons and papers; to administer oaths; and to employ such clerical, messenger, and stenographic assistance as they shall deem necessary; all expenses incurred hereunder shall be paid on the certificate of the chairman of the committee out of the contingent fund of the House."

Mr. BENNET of New York. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Olm-STED] to explain the purpose of the modification of the original resolution.

Mr. OLMSTED. I will explain very briefly, Mr. Speaker, that the two substantial changes which this resolution would make in the powers conferred upon the committee by the previous House resolution, No. 480, are these: In the first clause the only change that is made is by adding the words "or decrease," which complies with the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. Bennet] embodied in the resolution which he offered the other day, so that the committee will ascertain any decrease as well as any increase of the appropriations. I hardly think it necessary, as the committee would make such inquiry under the old resolution, but it answers the interrogatory and complies with the desire of the gentleman from New York, and in any event is fair and proper.

The second and most important change is in this particular: The original resolution, House resolution under which the committee was appointed, requires the committee to ascertain and report at this session, among other things, the names of all persons engaged in any branch of the public service in the prevention or detection of fraud and in arresting and bringing to trial violators of the laws of the United States; and not only their names, but the persons upon whose recommendations they were appointed; and also a statement of the specific duty in which each one of these persons was engaged for each day during the two fiscal years. The committee has already proceeded sufficiently far to find that that could not be done, nor even fairly commenced, within the time of the present session. We have learned that each person so employed submits to the department each day a card setting forth where he has been, what service he has performed, his expenses, and so forth.

Now, if we assume that there are only 300 persons so employed, and there are a great many more, that would be in two years, allowing 300 working days each year, 600 cards for each one of 300 persons, or a total of 180,000 cards which would have to be inspected, considered, and embodied in a report, which would fill not less than 7,500 pages. That would be away beyoud the possibility of accomplishment within the present session. In order to limit the inquiry so that we could hope to make an intelligent and, perhaps, useful report during the present session, as the House has commanded, the committee unanimously asks for this modification.

Mr. BENNET of New York. Reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania if his resolution contains anything new except that part embodied from my resolution?

Mr. OLMSTED. No additional power, unless one is conferred by adding the words "or decrease."

Mr. BENNET of New York. And also if the gentleman would have any objection to adding to his resolution a provision that the committee should also make recommendations such as seem to them advisable at the conclusion of their investigation?

Mr. OLMSTED. I would have no objection, Mr. Speaker, except this, that as the resolution now stands it will cause all the work we can possibly perform within the remaining days of this Congress.

Mr. MANN. Is it not the intention under this resolution to extend the committee beyond the session?

Mr. OLMSTED. No; not at all. The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolu-

RESIGNATION OF JUDGES.

Mr. CAULFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules, to discharge the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union from further consideration of the bill S. 4535, with amendment, and pass the bill as amended.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CAUL-FIELD] moves to suspend the rules and pass the following Senate bill, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act (S. 4535) to amend section 714 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, relating to the resignation of judges of the courts of the United States.

Be it enacted, etc., That section 714 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 714. When any judge of any court of the United States resigns his office, after having held a commission or commissions as judge of such court or courts at least ten years, and having attained the age of 70 years, he shall, during the residue of his natural life, receive the same salary which was by law payable to him at the time of his resignation."

Also the following committee amendment:

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

Mr. CAULFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the second may be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CAUL-FIELD] is entitled to twenty minutes and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] to twenty minutes. Mr. CAULFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I am informed that this bill was unanimously passed by the Senate, and it has been approved by the Committee on the Judiciary of the House. Under the present law a judge of the United States, in order to have the privilege of retirement on pay, must have served ten years in one office, so that if it happens that he has served five years on the district bench he can not accept promotion to the circuit bench without being penalized in that his right to retire must be postponed for five years longer, because he can not have the right to retire until he has served ten years in the last office. I believe, Mr. Speaker, that that is against the good of the service, against the efficiency of the judiciary. The passage of this bill will increase the efficiency of the judiciary by making it possible, when a vacancy occurs in a higher judicial office, to fill it with a man whose service and experience on a lesser bench have peculiarly fitted him for the higher place, yet without postponing his retirement beyond an age when both his inclination and a proper regard for the public good should We should consider this bill from the solicit his retiring. standpoint of the public good, for while by unduly postponing the time for retirement we may run counter to the desire of a judge here and there, we are more likely to decrease the efficiency of our courts by continuing men too long in judicial office.

Mr. SIMS. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question? Why does the gentleman call this "penalizing?" If the district judge is getting the district judge's full salary and we remove the inducement to him to seek promotion to a circuit judge by which he can be retired at a larger salary, why does the gentleman call that "penalizing?"

Mr. CAULFIELD. I mean that it may be necessary to the efficiency of the service that a judge be promoted or changed from the district to the circuit court; and if he is, and has served five years on the district bench, his right to retire has been postponed for five years, because he must serve ten years on the circuit bench.

Mr. SIMS. It does not compel him to accept it.

Mr. CAULFIELD. That is true; and that is an argument in favor of the passage of this bill, because it may be necessary and proper for the good of the service that he do accept; and we want to remove the inducement from him not to accept.

Mr. SIMS. Is it not a fact that the district judges perform all of the duties of the circuit judge except sitting on the court of appeals?

Mr. CAULFIELD. That may be true.

Mr. SIMS. How are you to promote the service if you change the salary-and-retirement inducement by merely changing them from district to circuit judges?

Mr. CAULFIELD. It is not true that they always perform those duties. They sometimes do, and often do. Mr. SIMS. A district judge told me the other

Mr. SIMS. A district judge told me the other day that for years he had been hearing all the cases that a circuit judge would hear, except when the circuit judge was sitting on the court of appeals.

Mr. CAULFIELD. If he is performing all the duties of the circuit judge he ought to be promoted to a circuit judge.

Mr. SIMS. Better let him go on and do the work that a higher-priced judge would do.

Mr. CAULFIELD. It is but fair if he performs the service that he should be paid for it.

Mr. SIMS. He is paid for it. This bill simply offers an inducement to the district judges to try to become circuit judges, in order to get a higher pay during the time they are serving, and then to be put on the retired list in less time if they go on the circuit bench. Is not that the practical effect of your bill?

Mr. CAULFIELD. I can not say that it is.
Mr. SIMS (continuing). Without any benefit at all to the public service; because the district judge can properly discharge the duty of the circuit judge, and is competent to do so; and the only object of the bill of the committee is that he will not have to serve the same number of years in the place that he is required to now.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. May I answer the gentleman from Tennessee?

Mr. CAULFIELD. How much time have I left, Mr. Speaker? The gentleman has twelve minutes re-The SPEAKER.

Mr. CAULFIELD. I yield seven minutes to the gentleman from New York

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Mr. Speaker, in reply to the question raised by my friend from Tennessee [Mr. Sims], I desire simply to say that if a district judge has served eight years and is promoted by the President to a circuit judge-

Mr. SIMS. You mean he appoints him a circuit judge? Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. He appoints him.

Mr. SIMS. It is not a promotion except in effect? Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. It is really a promotion, and the courts so regard it.

Mr. MURDOCK. He gets a higher salary?

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. He gets $7,000; the district judge gets $6,000.

Now, having served two years as a circuit judge, he has a right to retire under this bill.

Mr. SIMS. No; he has not.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. He has a right to retire at the age of 70. Now, the question is, shall we let him have the right to retire, with pay, or shall we keep him working until he is 78 years old?

Mr. SIMS. If it was compulsory for him to accept this new appointment, then the argument would be good; but inasmuch as it is merely elective, and he accepts the honor rather than the retirement pay it shows he would rather become a circuit judge than to serve two years more as a district judge and retire on the full pay of a district judge. It is not penalizing him, it is promoting him, and this bill provides that in two years' service as a circuit judge he may retire with the benefits and emoluments of a circuit judge who has been there for ten years.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Which is preferable, to keep a judge on the bench after he feels too old to work and desires to be retired or require him to serve eight years longer? Unless this bill becomes a law, you make it impossible for him to retire with salary until he is 78—that is, until he has served ten years as a circuit judge.

Why should he be appointed to the circuit bench Mr. SIMS.

at the age of 68?

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. That is a question for the Executive

Mr. SIMS. Are there not enough ex-Senators and ex-Members of the House to be appointed circuit judges and serve ten years, and glad to do it? Why put this 68-year-old district judge in line of retirement with full pay as a circuit judge in only two years? [Applause.]

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. That is an executive func-We can not control the President, but we can help the service by allowing an honorable, hard-working district judge who is made a circuit judge to retire under the law with pay before he becomes too old and perhaps useless; and most men do get too old for work before they are 78 years old, especially if they have been hard workers all their days.

Mr. SIMS. Let me say that you are forming what practically becomes an endless chain. Every time the district judge is 68 and the circuit judge is 70 the circuit judge walks out on full pay for life, and the district judge then is appointed and in two years he walks out with full pay, and by the possible operation of this bill you can load this country down with district judges drawing the retirement pay of circuit judges after having rendered two or three years' service, or, maybe, not one.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. I did not yield for a speech; I yielded for a question. We allow army officers to be promoted and then retired.

Mr. SIMS. How long does an army officer have to serve?

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Until he is 64, I believe.

Mr. SIMS. How many years all told.
Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. A judge may serve thirty years as a district judge, and then, because he takes a reappointment as a circuit judge, you would compel him to serve beyond the retirement age, even though his health be broken.

Mr. SIMS. Oh, no; I will not compel him to accept the appointment. He does not have to accept it. He does it as a matter of honor, and if he would rather have honor money, I glory in his selection; but why fix up this matter here for men who are looking for money rather than an honorable career on the bench?

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Oh, well, we are all human. If a judge has worked hard for twenty or thirty years, standing out like a snow-capped peak as one of the best district judges of the country, and the President recognizes his ability by promoting him to a circuit judgeship, shall this House say that he must serve eight years after the retirement age before he may be retired with pay? I hope not.

Mr. SIMS. Let me say that these "snow-capped peaks" are now out for an increase of 50 per cent in their salaries.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Well, it is the custom in the army, and our judges should be treated as generously. is a short-sighted policy to require them to serve after their health is broken, if they have already served ten years as a district and circuit judge. Mr. SIMS. Then there are very few worthy judges, according to the gentleman's statement.

Mr. CAULFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. MANN. How much time has the gentleman remaining? The SPEAKER. The gentleman has five minutes remaining. Mr. STAFFORD. I want to ask the gentleman from Missouri a question.

Mr. MANN. I will yield time enough to the gentleman from Missouri to answer the question of the gentleman from Wis-

Mr. STAFFORD. In reading over the bill, I thought it was ambiguous in phraseology in one particular, and that it did not clearly accomplish the purpose intended. As I understand it, the word "courts," in line 10, is the word upon which you hinge the right of a judge who has held another judgeship to obtain the retirement fund. Would it not be better phraseology, and express the intent more clearly, if you struck out the word "such," in line 9, before "court" and add after the word "courts," in that line, the words "of the United States," so as to read: "judge of any court or courts of the United States?" The word "such" refers to the court in the first line. I think the suggested phraseology would make the intent of the law much clearer.

Mr. MANN. I yielded for a question. Is the question ended? Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman yielded sufficient time to the gentleman to answer my question.

Mr. MANN. I agreed to give some time to the proponents of the bill, but I do not want to give all the time.

Mr. CAULFIELD. I would say, in answer to the objection made by the gentleman from Wisconsin, that the word "such" relates back to show that it is meant the judges of the United States who have held office during good behavior. If you said "judge of any court or courts," it might render the meaning ambiguous.

Mr. STAFFORD. I would insert after the word "courts" the words "of the United States."

Mr. CAULFIELD. I understand that you can not amend a bill under the motion to suspend the rules.

Mr. STAFFORD. But the gentleman could ask unanimous consent.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, the object of this bill is to offer an incentive to the President of the United States to appoint a district judge, after he reaches the age of 60, to the circuit court bench. Without this bill being passed the President does not appoint district judges over the age of 60 to the circuit bench; and I believe the bill, if passed, applies only to one case in the whole United States. In other words, there is only one case where a district judge over the age of 60 years has been appointed to the circuit bench.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I am not in favor of offering a premium to the President to appoint old men upon the circuit bench. I think when a man has reached the age of 60 he has reached the age where, under ordinary circumstances, at least, he ought not to be appointed a circuit judge. If as district judge he is learned in reference to bankruptcy matters and other matters peculiarly within the province of the district bench, let him remain a district judge until he reaches the age of 70, when he can be retired, and let some younger man who may make a more efficient circuit judge be appointed on the bench.

The value of the law as it now exists is shown by the fact that it has not been the habit of the executive to appoint old men, over 60 years of age, on the circuit bench. But if this bill passes every district judge in the United States will be seeking an appointment, when he reaches the age of 60, to the circuit bench in his circuit.

Mr. KEIFER. What circuit judge does the gentleman refer to?

Mr. MANN. United States circuit judges.

Mr. KEIFER. The gentleman means the circuit court of

I do not. I mean the United States circuit Mr. MANN. The circuit court of appeals is made up from the United States circuit court judges. There are no judges appointed by the President to the United States court of appeals. Mr. RUSSELL of Missouri. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. I will yield to the gentleman from Missouri. Mr. RUSSELL of Missouri. I understand that the present law gives a salary of $6,000 to district judges. Is that correct?

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is as well informed as I am. I believe that is correct.

Mr. RUSSELL of Missouri. The circuit judges get an increased salary over that. They get $7,000. Would it not be manifestly unjust if a man should serve as a district judge nine years at the lower salary and then be promoted, and then at the end of one year's service at the increased salary be retired for life and paid the increased salary?

Mr. MANN. I quite agree with the gentleman from Mis-uri. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has fourteen minutes.
Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from Illinois a question.

Mr. MANN. I will yield to the gentleman from Wyoming.

Mr. MONDELL. What would occur in a case of this kind: A man under 60 years is appointed to the circuit bench, and his physical condition becomes, within four or five years, such that it would be for the interest of the service that he should be retired. He would not, under the present law, be eligible to retire with a continued payment of salary.

Mr. MANN. If a man who is appointed judge on the bench becomes incapacitated physically and does not properly perform the functions of his office, he draws his salary until he reaches the retirement age. Mr. Speaker, I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. CLAYTON].

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, this bill is a very simple proposition. There is nothing so involved or complicated or mysterious or far-reaching or direful about it as the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Gaines] seems to think there is. It is a simple proposition, where a judge who has served one, two, three, or five or more years as district judge, in case he is promoted to be circuit judge, is to be credited in the computation of his time of service with those one, two, three, or five years service as district judge in making up the requisite ten years which must concur with the 70 years of age to enable him to be retired on pay. Without this bill, he must serve, in case of his promotion to the circuit judgeship, continuously ten years as circuit judge, notwithstanding he may have served nine years and three hundred and sixty-four days as district judge. That is the proposition. There is but one other idea that I have heard suggested in this debate, and that is it is said that it is an increase of pay. So it is, Mr. Speaker, if he is promoted. The promotions under this bill would be very rare; but suppose there is an increase of pay in case of such promotion, that is one of the unavoidable incidents that attach to a meritorious promotion deservedly won by an honorable judge in the discharge of the duties of his high office. answer may be made to it: There is not a district judge in the United States of first-class ability—mark the words, not a district judge in the United States of first-class ability—who has not from time to time and will not from time to time be called upon to serve as circuit judge in addition to his work as district judge. I have in mind to-day, and I think my colleague from Alabama will bear me out, a conspicuous example, where a district judge residing in his district performs all of his duties as district judge and holds court for other judges in their districts, and, in addition, a large part of his time is consumed in presiding as an associate justice on the circuit court of appeals.

That is pursuant to law, and it is right, and the district judge. can be directed from time to time and is directed, particularly if he is a man of conspicuous ability and a man who can dispatch business rapidly in his own district-I say he is designated from time to time to go and sit on the circuit court of appeals. Now, should that sort of a man, who has served in two offices, one with pay and the other without pay-for when he acts as circuit judge he does not draw the salary of a circuit judge-should such a man as that, when he has won this reputation and discharged this work, met all the obligations of one office and reached out and met a part of the duties of another office by a designation pursuant to law, be deprived of that deserved promotion? I say that if you deprive that sort of a man of a deserved promotion which the Executive has a right to give to him, if you say to him that he can not have that promotion without losing credit for the time that he has served as district judge, without losing credit for the work that he has done both as district judge and as associate judge on the circuit court of appeals, then you penalize him, and I submit to the candid judgment of any fair-minded man whether it would be right to do so in any given case. This bill comes from the committee without any opposition in the shape of minority views. [Applause.]

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Suppose that if the judge serves on the district bench for twenty years and is then appointed to the circuit bench. Must be then serve ten years more?

Mr. CLAYTON. He would, undoubtedly, unless this law is passed.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Then, that is the whole case. The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HARDY].

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that the gentleman who has just taken his seat has given in concrete form the objection to the bill. He says if a district judge had served nine years and three hundred and sixty-four days as district judge and then was promoted before he could retire, he would have to serve ten years more to get the increased pay. I want to reply to that by saying that if this bill goes into operation and the district judge has served nine years and three hundred and sixty-four days and the President appoints him on that three hundred and sixty-fourth day as a circuit judge, and he retires, then, on the three hundred and sixty-fifth day, for that one day's service as a circuit judge, should he live to be 80 years of age, he would receive ten times $1,500, the increase he gets on the retirement by virtue of his appointment on the last day of service. In other words, one day's service as circuit judge enables him to receive $15,000 more civil pension than he would otherwise have obtained.

Mr. BURKE. Would the gentleman regard that as a gross abuse of power by the President of the United States, to appoint a man one day prior to his attaining the age of 70? And does the gentleman suppose for a moment that the Senate of the United States would confirm such an appointment?

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. HARDY. Mr. Speaker, I would like to have permission to answer that question.

Mr. MANN. While, Mr. Speaker, I would be perfectly willing to yield to the gentleman to ask a question, it would be hardly necessary for the President of the United States constantly-and every President has-to run a whole batch of army officers through one office, in order to give them additional title and emoluments, all in a day. The Senate never has refused to confirm one of them yet, that I have ever heard of.

Mr. CLAYTON. You mean the present Chief Executive has done that?

Mr. MANN. I mean Mr. Cleveland, when he was Executive, did that. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. CLAYTON. How about the present Chief Executive?

I do not think he is exempt from it, and whoever Mr. MANN. is President will do it as long as the power remains, and I am not in favor of giving him the power in regard to judges which he now has in regard to army and navy officials. [Applause.]

Now, Mr. Speaker, if this bill is passed every district judge in the United States, whenever there is a vacancy on the circuit bench, will be trying to get that appointment for the purpose of being retired as circuit judge at a higher salary, and they will get the appointment, not for the purpose of performing the duties of the office, but merely for the purpose of receiving extra pay on the retired list. There is no occasion for giving that encouragement.

Mr. Speaker, how much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has three minutes remaining.

Mr. MANN. I desire to have the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DE ARMOND] heard.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman reserve his time? Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I think it would be well to have silent prayer at this time and a contemplation of the enormity of the bill while waiting for the presence of the gentleman from Missouri, and I hope the House for a moment will indulge in silent prayer on the subject under consideration.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, just before the silence begins [laughter and applause] I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. MANN. Now, Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DE ARMOND] such time as I have remaining.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Mr. Speaker, I am one of those members of the Judiciary Committee who at the time this measure was before the committee thought it better not to report it favorably, and I am of the same opinion yet. Ten years' service, as matters stand now, upon one particular bench, the age of 70 years having been reached, entitles the judge to be retired upon full pay. If one having served ten years upon a par-ticular bench chooses to go to a higher bench, or having served eight or nine years chooses to go to a higher one, there is no particular reason why he ought to have the pay of the higher position when retired, and there are strong reasons why pressure for promotion for higher pay and retirement should be avoided.

Now, if the bill were to provide for retirement at a given period of continuous service with the pay of the lower office or the one in which the larger service was rendered-the one in which the longer term of service was rendered-it would be An army or navy officer, as I understand, has to different. serve thirty or forty years before he is entitled to retirement. As the law now is the judge may be retired upon ten years' service as a member of some particular court, having reached

The proposition is to retire him if he reaches 70 years of age with a total service of ten years upon one, two, three, or, if there were so many, ten or fifteen benches, aggregating ten years' service in the federal judiciary. That is the proposition in this bill, and I do not think it is a good one. I think it is better to leave the law as it is, or if service upon one court is to be tacked onto service upon another, I think it a better and fairer provision that the compensation, or, rather, the pension or life allowance which the judge shall receive after he retires, shall be based upon his compensation in the lower court.

It will do very well to talk about the judge who has served faithfully and well for twenty or thirty years; but this bill applies to judges who serve—maybe faithfully, maybe efficiently, maybe unfaithfully, maybe inefficiently—for ten years in a number of courts. My judgment is that the bill ought not to be passed. I think the law as it stands is better than it will be if this measure be incorporated in it. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. CAULFIELD. Mr. Speaker, of course I realize what it means when the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann], with his great learning upon so many subjects, joins with the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. De Armond] in opposing this meritorious measure. But I can not help but believe that these gentlemen, with all their learning and all their experience, fail to grasp the real intention of the retirement law. We do not provide for retiring judges upon pay in order to pension them. This law is not written for the benefit of the judges, but it is written for the benefit of the judiciary system of the United States. It is not well that judges should stay upon the bench after they have ceased to be efficient, and the wisdom of this Congress has set 70 years as that time. I say to you that under the present system a judge might have served twenty-four years, and have reached the age of 85 years, and not be able to retire. I do not appeal for his benefit, but I appeal for the benefit of the judiciary system. It is not well that he should occupy the position so long. This is intended to rectify that. I believe that the law as it was originally drawn was intended to operate just as this bill would make it operate.

They say that there will be more promotions than there are That can not be true to any great extent, though I hope that it would be true to some extent, because there can not be promotions without vacancies, and there can not be vacancies under this bill except those caused by the voluntary retirement of men whose course of life has nearly run, whose efficiency has ceased, and whose places ought to be vacant and can not be made vacant unless this bill shall become a law.

I say to you that this bill, in my judgment, and in the judgment of the Judiciary Committee, is a good bill and ought to ent of the suntainty states of the vote for it.

The SPEAKER. The question is on suspending the rules and passing the bill with an amendment.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. CAULFIELD. Division, Mr. Speaker.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 63, noes 82.

Mr. CAULFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The question was taken on ordering the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were refused.

So the House declined to suspend the rules and pass the bill.

LATE SENATOR ASBURY C. LATIMER.

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk. The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina asks for the present consideration of a resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Order No. 23.

Ordered, That at the conclusion of other special orders Sunday, February 21, there be a session of the House for the delivery of eulogies of the life, character, and public services of the Hon. Asbury C. Latimer, late a member of the United States Senate from the State of South Carolina.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

CONFERENCE REPORT-CORDOVA BAY.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up the conference report on the bill (S. 6418) authorizing the sale of land at the head of Cordova Bay, in the Territory of Alaska, and for other purposes, and ask unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 6418) entitled "An act authorizing the sale of land at the head of Cordova Bay, in the Territory of Alaska, and for other purposes," having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out all after section eight.

And the House agree to the same. F. W. Mondell,
A. J. Volstead,
Jno. W. Gaines,
Managers on the part of the House. FRANK P. FLINT, W. B. HEYBURN, J. H. BANKHEAD Managers on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT.

To accompany conference report on Senate bill 6418.

The House amendment to Senate bill 6418 struck out all of the Senate act, and contained two separate and distinct propositions, which had been recorded by the House Committee on the Public Lands in two separate bills. The first of these propositions, which constituted the first eight sections of the amendment, related to the sale of lands at the head of Cordova Bay, in the Territory of Alaska, which was also the subject-matter of Senate bill 6418, though the provisions of the legislation in the House differed in detail from the provisions in the Senate bill, reducing from five to two thousand acres the area sold, and laying further restrictions and conditions on the sale.

The second proposition contained in the House amendment, sections 9 to 14, related to the sale to the Alaska Terminal and Navigation Company of lands on Kanak Island, Alaska. In the agreement reached by the conferees the House legislation with reference to the lands on Cordova Bay was accepted by the Senate without amendment, while the legislation relating to the sale of land on Kanak Island was stricken out.

F. W. MONDELL, A. J. VOLSTEAD, JNO. W. GAINES Managers on the part of the House.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report. The question was taken, and the conference report was agreed to.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 26915, the army appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 26915) making appropriation for the support of the army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1910, with Mr. PERKINS in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 26915, the army appropriation bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

SUBSISTENCE DEPARTMENT.

the bill H. R. 26915, the army appropriation bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Subsistence department.

Purchase of subsistence supplies: For issue, as rations to troops, civil employees when entitled thereto, hospital matrons, nurses, applicants for enlistment while held under observation, general prisoners of war (including Indians held by the army as prisoners, but for whose subsistence appropriation is not otherwise made), Indians employed with the army, without pay, as guides and scouts, and military convicts at posts; for the subsistence of the masters, officers, crews, and employees of the vessels of the army transport service; hot coffee for troops traveling when supplied with cooked or travel rations; meals for recruiting parties, and applicants for culls, ent with the pay of a property of the payor of the vessels of the army transport service; hot coffee for troops traveling when supplied with cooked or travel rations; meals for recruiting parties, and applicants for endistence of military convicts confined at military posts without pay or allowances, and applicants for enlistment while held under observation; for issues of toilet articles, barbers, laundry, posts without pay or allowances, and applicants for enlistment while held under observation; for issues of toilet kits to recruits upon their first enlistment; lee for issue to organizations of enlisted men at such places as the Secretary of War may determine; for sales to officers and enlisted men of the army; coffee roasters and cooking apparatus in the field, and when traveling (except on transports), bate ovens and apparatus pertaining thereto; scales, weights, measures, utensits, toods stationed at the contract of the contract

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend line 17, page 23, by inserting the proviso which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend line 17, page 23; after the word "fund" insert the proviso: "Provided, That of the amount herein appropriated the sum of $1,587 may be used."

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Then strike out all after the word "available," in line 20, to the close of the paragraph. It is simply a duplication, the committee will notice.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all after the word "available," in line 20, down to the end of the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the

Mr. DRISCOLL. I reserve the point of order on that. I understand it refers to the cadets at West Point.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. It does. Mr. Chairman, the West Point judgment is that without this language on which the gentleman from New York reserves the point of order, it would keep the cadets from coming here. Of course, he has power to do that; but Congress has never refused this extra appropriation in order to allow them to take a part in the inauguration of their future Commander in Chief, the President of the United States. The means under which the naval cadets can come here have been provided for, and the rations for them. This is in addition to the regular appropriation providing for the cadets at West Point. It is an extra appropriation, but it is something the Government has never refused, and I sincerely hope my friend from New York will not refuse it this year.

Mr. DRISCOLL. I would like to have that amendment read again.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will again be reported.

The amendment was again reported.

Mr. DRISCOLL. That is all in here, except the words "immediately available."

Mr. HULL of Iowa. It is. They want it. I will say, Mr. Chairman, to my friend from New York it is no additional amount to ask for the Subsistence Department, but in the preparation of the bill it was left in such a way that we have made a duplication of the appropriation of $7,786,000. The duplication is not stricken out, as it should have been when the bill was prepared to be reported. It was provided that $1,587 for the expenses of the cadets should be paid out of the total sum appropriated for the Subsistence Department and no increase of the amount for the Subsistence Department. This amendment is simply to harmonize what the committee ought to have done. Mr. DRISCOLL. I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. COX of Indiana. I renew the point of order. I want to ask the chairman of the committee a question.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. COX of Indiana. I reserve the point of order. I want to ask the gentleman from Iowa whether or not it has always, so far as the gentleman is informed, been the uniform custom to pay the traveling expenses of the West Point cadets?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. It is, whenever they are ordered anywhere. It is so when they are sent to Sandy Hook for practice. It is so when they are ordered here. It was so four years ago, and I think, if gentlemen will take other appropriation bills, they will find it has been done heretofore. We give an extra appropriation beyond what is given regularly for the subsistence de-partment of these men. Then we provided for "the subsistence of West Point cadets while attending the inaugural ceremony, to be immediately available, $1,000." Now, we give a little more this year, because there are more cadets.

Mr. COX of Indiana. How many of these cadets will attend? Mr. HULL of Iowa. In the neighborhood of three or four hundred.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Is there any appropriation made by any of the departments to get them to attend if this is stricken out?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. If this is stricken out, there is no way by which they can be gotten here except by private subscription.

Mr. DRISCOLL. They can come if they pay their own way.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. We would not ask them to do that.

Mr. DRISCOLL. I think they are paid pretty well.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. It takes pretty near all they get to keep them and supply their uniforms. I have no doubt that a part of these cadets could pay $1,000 to come here; but the great body of the cadets are from poor families, and they would not be able to come. The West Point Academy and the academy at Annapolis are the two greatest democratic institutions on earth, where there is no difference between the washer-woman's son and the millionaire's son. They are not allowed to have money to spend except what the Government provides for them. If they get leave of absence, there are doubtless some that would be able to pay their own way, but they would not be any part of the parade, and consent should not be given to any of them except as a corps of cadets.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I will ask the chairman of the committee if he saw a statement in a newspaper to the effect that the naval cadets would not come and that there was some feeling among the cadets at the Naval Academy over what they regarded as discrimination in favor of the Military Academy?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. No; I did not see it.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I saw a statement to the effect that they were not coming, and I did not know where it had been provided that they should come.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I saw in the paper that the naval cadets would come here in the morning and go back in the evening, be-Mr. HULL of Iowa. It does. Mr. Chairman, the West Point cause they are only 40 miles away, and that a very distincadets have of late years attended the inauguration. My own

I had not seen where they were not coming. I think they will all come.

Mr. SLAYDEN. The paper was perhaps misinformed. Mr. HULL of Iowa. But from West Point they have got to be out all of one night, both going and coming, and be here all of one day

Mr. COX of Indiana. Have the committee figured out the exact cost of bringing them here and taking them home?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Only as the department have given these

Mr. COX of Indiana. These are submitted by the depart-

Mr. HULL of Iowa. They are submitted by the department.
Mr. COX of Indiana. I make the point of order.
Mr. HULL of Iowa. The point of order, I understand, is made simply to the part relating to the extraordinary subsistence of the West Point cadets?
Mr. COX of Indiana.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Yes. Mr. HULL of Iowa. If the Chair sustains the point of order, of course I want to make the other amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Then, I move to strike out, commencing with the word "seven," in line 20, all the rest of the paragraph. The Clerk read as follows:

In line 20, after the word "dollars," strike out the remainder of the

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

It has been suggested to me that the point of order was raised to the proviso. My understanding was that the point of order was to the appropriation for the subsistence of the West Point cadets.

Mr. COX of Indiana. That is all, that $15,000. Mr. HULL of Iowa. Then, my understanding is correct.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the point of order I had pending on Saturday was not disposed of. I do not know whether the gentleman wants to dispose of it or not.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I have such confidence in the gentleman from Illinois that I supposed he raised that point of order in order to get an adjournment.

The CHAIRMAN. What was the point of order?

Mr. MANN. That is a point of order on the paragraph, beginning with line 3 and ending with line 14, on page 20. So far as I am concerned, I withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the point of order will be withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

QUARTERMASTER'S DEPARTMENT.

The Clerk read as follows:

QUARTEEMASTER'S DEPARTMENT.

Regular supplies: Regular supplies of the Quartermaster's Department, including their care and protection, consisting of stoves and heating apparatus required for heating offices, hospitals, barracks, and quarters, and recruiting stations, and United States military prison; also ranges and stoves, and appliances for cooking and serving food at posts, and repair and maintenance of such heating and cooking appliances; for furnishing heat and light for the authorized allowance of quarters for officers and enlisted men, and for recruits, guards, hospitals, storehouses, offices, the buildings erected at private cost in the operation of the act approved May 31, 1902, for sale to officers, and including also fuel and engine supplies required in the operation of modern batteries at established posts; for post bakeries; for ice machines and their maintenance where required for the health and comfort of the troops and for cold storage; for the construction, operation, and maintenance of laundries at military posts in the United States and its island possessions; for the necessary furniture, textbooks, paper, and equipment for the post schools and libraries; for the tableware and mess furniture for kitchens and mess halls, each and all for the enlisted men, including recruits; of forage in kind for the horses, mules, and oxen of the Quartermaster's Department at the several posts and stations and with the armies in the field, and for the horses of the several regiments of cavalry, the batteries of artillery, and such companies of infantry and scouts as may be mounted, and for the authorized number of officers' horses, including bedding for the animals; and nothing in the act making appropriations for the fiscal year 1908, or any other act, shall hereafter be held or construed so as to deprive officers of the form, wherever on duty in the military service of the United States, of forage, bedding, shoeing, or shelter for their authorized number of horses, or of any me suance of law, surplus ice may be disposed of, laundry work may be done for other branches of the Government, and surplus electric light and power may be sold on such terms and in accordance with such regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of War: Provided, That the funds received from such sales and in payment for such laundry work shall be used to defray the cost of operation of said ice, laundry, and electric plants; and the sales and expenditures herein provided for shall be accounted for in accordance with the methods prescribed by law, and any sums remaining, after such cost of maintenance and operation have been defrayed, shall be deposited in the Treasury to the credit of the appropriation from which the cost of operation of such plant is paid, $9,300,000.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on page 24, line 8, commencing with the words "the buildings" down to and including the words "nineteen hundred and two," in line 10, on that page.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. The gentleman's point of order is to the

The buildings erected at private cost in the operation of the act approved May 31, 1902.

I want to say, Mr. Chairman, that under that act there have been donations. Miss Helen Gould started it, I think, by erecting Young Men's Christian Association buildings for the use of the posts. There is one at Fortress Monroe and there is one, I think, at Leavenworth. Those buildings, under the law, can not be lighted or heated at public expense.

Mr. DRISCOLL. By whom are they owned? Mr. HULL of Iowa. By the Government of the United States, donated to the Government, all the cost of building borne by Miss Gould, and possibly others, for the benefit of the moral standing of the army.

She has no interest in them whatever; she simply erects them and donates them to the Government.

Mr. DRISCOLL. And this is for heating and lighting those buildings?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Yes; the same as we light other buildings

Mr. SLAYDEN. I wish to say to the gentleman that the citizens of San Antonio are constructing a chapel which is to be donated to the Government in the same way.

Mr. DRISCOLL. I have no objection, and Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

withdraw the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Incidental expenses: Cost of telegrams on official business received and sent by officers of the army; extra pay to soldiers employed on extra duty, under the direction of the Quartermaster's Department, in the erection of barracks, quarters, and storehouses, in the construction of roads and other constant labor for periods of not less than ten days, and as clerks for post quartermasters at military posts, and for prison overseers at posts designated by the War Department for the confinement of general prisoners, and for the United States military prison guard; for expenses of expresses to and from frontier posts and armies in the field, of escorts to paymasters and other disbursing officers, and to trains where military posts or on the frontiers or when traveling under orders, and of noncommissioned officers and soldiers; and in all cases where such expenses would have been lawful claims against the Government, reimbursement may be made of expenses heretofore or hereafter incurred by individuals of burial and transportation of remains of officers, including acting assistant surgeons, not to exceed the amount now allowed in the cases of officers, and for the reimbursement in the cases of enlisted men not exceeding the amount now allowed in their cases, may be paid out of the proper funds appropriated by this act, and the disbursing officers shall be credited with such reimbursement heretofore made; but hereafter no reimbursement shall be made of such expenses incurred prior to the 21st day of April, 1898; authorized office furniture, hire of laborers in the Quartermaster's Department, including the care of officers' mounts when the same are furnished by the Government and the hire of interpreters, spies, or guides for the army; compensation of clerks and other employees to the officers of the Quartermaster's Department, and clerks, foremen, watchmen, and organist for the United States military prisoners, and the expenses incident to their pursuit, and no

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, on page 27, after the word "Government," in line 18, I ask to strike out the semicolon and insert a comma.

Mr. MACON. I make a point of order as to the paragraph. The Clerk reported the amendment, as follows:

On page 27, line 18, strike out the semicolon and insert a comma.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order will be first disposed of. Mr. MACON. I reserve the point of order against the paragraph for the purpose of asking a question. I notice on line 7, page 38, the words "including the care of officers' mounts when the same are furnished by the Government." That has not been carried in the bill heretofore.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. No; because of the change of law last year by which the Government furnished the mounts and did not pay the officers on account of it. This is only to comply with that law.

Mr. MACON. I notice that there has been an increase of about $50,000. I suppose that is to cover cases of this kind.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Undoubtedly a part of it. We save a much larger sum by reducing the pay of the mounted officers than this would cost. This language, while it is new, is in accordance with the law.

Mr. MACON. I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. DRISCOLL. I move to strike out the last word in order to ask the gentleman a question right there. Page 28, line 8, there is a provision for the employment of spies. Is not that

Mr. HULL of Iowa. No; we have always had it. I think it has been in there, certainly, for eighteen years, and while I have had anything to do with the bill. It has been in all the bills I have had anything to do with. A few years ago there was a good deal of fun made because we had no use for them. If we had a war we would have use for them.

The amendment offered by Mr. Hull was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Horses for cavalry, artillery, and engineers: For the purchase of horses for officers entitled to public mounts for the cavalry, artillery, and engineers, service school and staff colleges, and for the Indian scouts, and for such infantry and members of the Hospital Corps in field campaigns as may be required to be mounted, and the expenses incident thereto, $510,000: Provided, That the number of horses purchased under this appropriation, added to the number now on hand, shall be limited to the actual needs of the mounted service, including reasonable provisions for remounts, and, unless otherwise ordered by the Secretary of War, no part of this appropriation shall be paid out for horses not purchased by contract after competition duly invited by the Quartermaster's Department and an inspection under the direction and authority of the Secretary of War. When practicable, horses shall be purchased in the open market at all military posts or stations, when needed, at a maximum price to be fixed by the Secretary of War: Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be used for breeding purposes: Provided further, That no part of this appropriation shall be expended for the purchase of any horses below the standard set by army regulations for cavalry and artillery horses.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the last proviso for the purpose of getting an explanation.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I do not believe it is subject to a point of order, but I am glad to give the gentleman the reasons for the committee putting it in. There has been a proposition in the last few years to supply polo ponies for the different camps. The proposition was to cut down the regular standard horses, 5 to a troop of cavalry, and have 5 polo ponies. The committee did not believe that the Congress of the United States should give a sum to buy polo ponies from unless it was a direct appropriation, so that they would know what they were doing. priation, so that they would know what they were doing.

Mr. MADDEN. Is it the idea of the officers to buy polo ponies at the expense of the Federal Treasury in order that they may have the instrumentalities to play the game?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. We were afraid they might get at it, and so we have fixed it so they can not.

Mr. MADDEN. And have they been doing that? Mr. HULL of Iown. I think they bought a few undersized horses.

Mr. MADDEN. I withdraw the pro forma amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Barracks and quarters: For barracks and quarters for troops, other than seacoast artillery, storehouses for the safe-keeping of military stores, for offices, recruiting stations, to provide such furniture for the public rooms of officers' messes and officers' quarters at military posts as may be approved by the Secretary of War, and the Auditor for the War Department is authorized and directed to remove any suspensions of accounts of quartermasters for the fiscal years 1907 and 1908, for the purchase of furniture where the same has been or may be approved by the Secretary of War; for the hire of buildings and grounds for summer cantonments, and for temporary buildings at frontier stations, for the construction of temporary buildings and stables, and for repairing public buildings at established posts, including the extra-duty pay of enlisted men employed on the same: Provided, That no part of the moneys so appropriated shall be paid for commutation of fuel or for quarters to officers or enlisted men: Provided further, That the number of and total sum paid for civilian employees in the Quartermaster's Department, including those paid from the funds appropriated for regular supplies, incidental expenses, barracks and quarters, army transportation, clothing, camp and garrison equipage, shall be limited to the actual requirements of the service, and that no employee paid therefrom shall receive a salary of more than $150 per month, except upon the approval of the Secretary of War, $2,500,000: Provided, That no part of the sum herein appropriated shall be used for the construction of officers' quarters at the Army War College: Provided further, That $15,000 of this sum may be used for the construction of a chapel on the military reservation at Fort Des Molnes, Iowa.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order upon the language contained in the last proviso of the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. To what portion?

Mr. MACON. To the proviso that $15,000 of this sum may be used for the construction of a chapel on the military reserva-

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, possibly the point of order is well taken. I want to say that there is a regimental post there, and they have no chapel and are anxious to have one. The officers have asked for it, and the department wants to build it out of this fund, and they do not feel that they have the right to take other buildings or barracks for a chapel.

Mr. MACON. Is there not some other place for them to worship in?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Yes; they can go 41 miles into the city and attend church at the different churches, but it is not good discipline. They have an excellent chaplain there, and I think there is no difference of opinion among the officers and men as to the desirability of a building.

Mr. MACON. How are they worshiping now? Mr. HULL of Iowa. At any place they can find.

Mr. MACON. Can they not continue to worship in that way? Mr. HULL of Iowa. Oh, yes; they could go without worship,

Mr. MACON. Not necessarily. They could worship in the open air if they were really anxious to do it.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. They would freeze their noses at this time of year, with the thermometer at 4 degrees below zero.

Mr. MACON. I will say to the gentleman that he knows as well as anyone in the House that at this particular time we are running behind in our revenues. I will ask him if he thinks it a wise policy to inaugurate new institutions of this kind while our revenues are so low?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I did think it wise or I would not have favored it. We have not increased the appropriation by it. We may cut off some new quarters some place else by putting this in. We do not require that they shall use it, but I presume it would be something they would probably recognize. They have been wanting a chapel there for two or three years, and their chaplain waited upon me when I was home and urged it so strongly that I have told him I would do what I could to get it for him, and that is all there is to it.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, if I felt that these soldiers would not have an opportunity to worship Almighty God according to the dictates of their own conscience unless this chapel could be erected at this time, I would not make the point of order, but I verily believe they have a place now where they can worship God if they so desire, and that this expense of $15,000 is unnecessary, and that when once started it will be a precedent for the establishment of other structures of this character, and that there is no telling where the end will be. Therefore I insist upon the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Transportation of the army and its supplies: For transportation of the army and its supplies, including transportation of the troops when moving either by land or water, and of their baggage, including the cost of packing and crating; for transportation of recruits and recruiting parties; of applicants for enlistment between recruiting stations and recruiting depots; of persons on their discharge from the United States military prison to their homes (or elsewhere as they may elect), provided the cost in each case shall not be greater than to the place of last enlistment; of supplies furnished to the militia for the permanent equipment thereof; of the necessary agents and other employees; of clothing and equipage and other quartermaster's stores from army depots on places of purchase or delivery to the several posts and army depots, and from those depots to the troops in the field; of horse equipments and of subsistence stores from places of purchase, and from the places of delivery under contract to such places as the circumstances of the service may require them to be sent; of ordnance and ordnance stores, and small arms from the foundries and armories to the arsenals, fortifications, frontier posts, and army depots; for payment of wharfage, tolls, and ferriage; for transportation of funds of the army; for the hire or employees; for the payment of army transportation lawfully due such land-grant railroads as have not received aid in government bonds (to be adjusted in accordance with the decisions of the Supreme Court in cases decided under such land-grant acts), but in no case shall more than 50 per cent of full amount of service be paid: Provided, That such compensation shall be computed upon the basis of the tariff or lower special rates for like transportation performed for the public at large, and shall be accepted as in full for all demands for such service: Provided further, That in expending the money appropriated by this the purchase and hire of draft and pack animals in such numbers as are actually required for the service, including reasonable provision for replacing unserviceable animals; for the purchase and repair of such harness, wagons, carts, and drays as are required for the transportation of troops and supplies and for garrison purposes; for drayage and cartage at the several depots; for the hire of teamsters and other employees; and for extra-duty pay of enlisted men driving teams, repairing means of transportation, and employed as train masters; for the purchase and repair of ships, boats, and other vessels required for the transportation of troops and supplies and for garrison purposes; for expenses of sailing public transports and other vessels on the various rivers, the Gulf of Mexico, and the Atlantic and Pacific oceans; and for the purchase and repair of harbor boats, and repair of boats for the seacoast artillery service; in all, $12,250,000.

Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amend-

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by inserting in line 3, page 32, after the word depots, the following:

"Provided, That hereafter one of the infantry companies at each recruiting depot shall have the organization of a band, to which recruits showing an aptitude for music may be attached for examination and instruction before assignments to organizations in the army."

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, on that I make the point of

Mr. SLAYDEN. I will ask the gentleman to reserve the point of order.

Mr. MADDEN. I reserve the point of order.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, the amendment simply aids in the organization and does not cost the Government a cent, and will actually result in an economy. There is a demand constantly, of course, for recruits at these various recruiting depots for new members of the bands as well as for other branches of the service. There are three recruiting depots in this country to which all recruits are sent. There they are tested, examined, and drilled, and it is proposed that at each one of these three recruiting depots one infantry company shall have the organization of a band where the alleged musicians may be tested, and then, if found competent, dispatched to the particular post or garrison somewhere in the country where the services of such a man will be required. It is requested by the administration officers, and it costs the Government nothing in the way of outlay. It saves the Government money because the men will be dispatched from the recruiting depots directly to the post in which they can render the best service. Otherwise they might be assigned to a post in the North and very soon thereafter transferred to one in the South, to which they should have been sent in the first place.

Mr. MADDEN. I would like the gentleman to state how this saves the Government any money.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Because it probably saves the shifting of recruits about from one station to another.

Mr. MADDEN. I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order; I

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois renews the point of order, and reserves it against the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, what is the parliamentary situa-

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. Slay-pen] has offered an amendment. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Madden] reserved the point of order and then withdrew it, and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] now renews the point of order.

Mr. HAY. Can the gentleman renew the point of order after debate has been had?

The CHAIRMAN. There has been no debate. The gentleman has a right to renew the point of order.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I will ask to have the amendment again reported.

The Clerk again reported the amendment.

Mr. MANN. I withdraw the point of order.
The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to. Mr. COX of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, for the purpose of getting some information on this paragraph. If I am correct, the last appropriation bill for this purpose carried $2,314,613.75.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. It carried $11,250,000.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Probably I am incorrect. In this paragraph I see it carries $12,250,000-

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Yes

Mr. COX of Indiana. Why the increase? Mr. HULL of Iowa. Because of the increased demands on the appropriation.

Mr. COX of Indiana. What has caused the increased demands for the appropriation?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. One is the large increase we are now compelled to pay the railroads on account of their having paid their debt to the United States. Heretofore there was a large amount of this transportation carried and charged against the railroads. Page 195 of the estimates gives very clearly the reasons for it. We cut them down some. They thought they reasons for it. We cut them down some. They thought they ought to have the full amount; possibly they ought to have, but we cut them down. In the hearings, after Mr. Slayden had interrogated General Aleshire on the question of $12,632,846.50, General Aleshire said:

The total increase, or total excess, is $1,382,846.50; $720,643.50 is on account of expenses in the United States—

Mr. COX of Indiana. What page of the hearings? Mr. HULL of Iowa. Page 166 of the hearings and $652,203 is on account of the Philippines estimate.

Then General Aleshire goes on to say in regard to this $652,203:

Then General Aleshire goes on to say in regard to this $652,203:

In explanation of the excess on account of the United States I would say that the Southern Pacific Railroad having in August, 1908, settled its indebtedness to the Government, it becomes necessary to pay in cash for all transportation over that road, instead of the Government receiving a credit therefor on the road's indebtedness to the Government, as was the rule prior to the liquidation of its indebtedness. For the payment of transportation over this road $350,000 is estimated, which is an increase of $120,000 over the amount estimated for that purpose for the current fiscal year. It was not anticipated when the estimates for the fiscal year 1909 were prepared that these accounts would have to be paid in cash for the entire year, and there was only included the amount thought to be necessary for payments after the date on which the road's last note was due—February 1, 1909.

The other items of increase are as follows: Transportation of supplies for the Signal Corps, $40,000, which the Chief Signal Officer reported would be in excess of the current year's expenses because of the increased quantities of signal stores to be transported in Alaska. Then there is $15,000 of the increase due to the expenses of crating and packing baggage for which we have no apportionment this year, and the cost-keeping records indicates that would be the amount required for 1910.

There is $22,002.35, which is the amount of increase we estimate.

packing baggage for which we have no apportionment this year, and the cost-keeping records indicates that would be the amount required for 1910.

There is $22,002.35, which is the amount of increase we estimate would be necessary in the transportation of recruits, taking into consideration the discharges and enlistments. There is $2,177.75 for the transportation of recruiting parties. In the transportation of applicants for enlistment there is an increase of $19,440.10. In regard to the transportation of prisoners, the number of prisoners being discharged will be in excess of those for the current year, so far as the records show, and the estimated increased cost on this account is $5,000.

For the transportation of supplies to the militia we estimate an increase of $4,234; for the transportation of clothing and equipage, and the transportation of other quartermaster supplies and of horse equipments, $127,471.15; for the transportation of subsistence stores, based upon the report of the Commissary-General, we estimate the increase to be $20,000. With reference to ordnance and ordnance stores, the competroller has decided that the transportation of heavy ordnance between railroad stations or wharves and battery emplacements must be paid from the appropriations of the Quartermaster's Department instead of the Engineer Department, as formerly, that being an additional service, the cost of which is estimated at $46,155.

I will say be goes all the way through and gives very minute

I will say he goes all the way through and gives very minute details of the increase.

Mr. COX of Indiana. As I understand from the gentleman, a large amount of this increase for the ensuing fiscal year is because the Government has been compelled to pay full rates for transportation of supplies, and so forth.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Yes.
Mr. COX of Indiana. To what railroads?
Mr. COX of Indiana. To what railroads?
Mr. COX of Iowa. The total estimates foot up here $12,-632,846.50. The committee, in figuring it over, believed that in giving them $12,250,000 we cut it to the very lowest point.

Mr. COX of Indiana. But what railroads in the United States have heretofore been carrying troops and supplies and getting credit for the same with the Government?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. The Southern Pacific is one, and the Union Pacific at one time; but I should say all the land-grant railroads and the bond-aided roads.

Mr. COX of Indiana. When did that stop? Mr. HULL of Iowa. When they paid their debt to the Government.

Mr. KAHN. August, 1908; the Southern Pacific.
The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be considered as withdrawn.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Mr. Chairman, I would like to know if the Quartermaster-General has not made any special contracts with the transcontinental roads for a rate to carry soldiers, and so forth, across the continent.
Mr. KAHN. Some of the land-gr

Some of the land-grant roads, under their grants, are required to carry soldiers and supplies for the army at a lower rate, and all other lines that compete with those land-grant roads make the lower rate. Mr. DRISCOLL. Wait a moment. Some years ago the Government was having its soldiers transported across the country, say from Chicago, Milwaukee, and other places in the West, to the Pacific and paying theatrical rates—that is, at the rates that were charged to theatrical companies, baseball clubs, and other organizations which were out giving exhibitions, and those railroads accepted what was paid, but retained their claims against the Government for the balances, which were the difference between individual rates and club rates for all those soldiers who were carried across the continent during several years. Has that matter been settled, as far as the gentleman knows?

Mr. KAHN. I know nothing about that matter at all. So far as I have investigated the matter, the Government has paid the special rates provided for by the act granting the land to the land-grant railroads, and even the competing roads that were not land-grant roads made similar rates for the Govern-

Mr. DRISCOLL. There was certainly a dispute between the railroads and the Quartermaster-General, and especially between railroad companies and the local quartermasters out there who were transporting the troops. The railroads claimed individual rates the same as they charge you or me or any other individual, whereas the quartermasters claimed the right under the law to have these squads of soldiers transported at the same rate as the railroads were transporting theatrical companies, baseball clubs, and other organizations going out to give exhibitions along the line. Has that matter been adjusted, so far as the gentleman knows?

Mr. KAHN. I do not know of any such arrangement, or whether it was adjusted.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Do not know anything of the claims the railroads have against the Government for balances of transportation, and whether they are paid or not?

I have never heard of them. They never have been presented to the Committee on Military Affairs, to my

Mr. DRISCOLL. They have been presented to the Court of

At the bottom of page 32, what do you mean by "paying only 50 per cent of the full amount of service to be paid?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. It means that under the organic law we could retain 50 per cent. There were a great many of them that retained 50 per cent for a while.

The Clerk read as follows:

Construction and maintenance of military and post roads, bridges, and trails, Alaska: For the construction and maintenance of military and post roads, bridges, and trails in the district of Alaska, to be expended under the direction of the board of road commissioners described in section 2 of an act entitled "An act to provide for the construction and maintenance of roads, the establishment and maintenance of schools, and the care and support of insane persons in the district of Alaska, and for other purposes," approved January 27, 1905, and to be expended conformably to the provisions of said act, $350,000, to remain available until close of fiscal year 1911.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on the whole paragraph.

Mr. COX of Indiana. I want to ask the chairman of the committee a question. I see in the paragraph that two kinds of roads are designated, namely, military and post roads. Are they the same?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. It is a combination. It is connecting the different posts and troops in Alaska, and they are carrying mail over the same route.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Then, as I understand the chairman of the committee, it is all the same road?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. It is all the same road.

Mr. MADDEN. The Government is spending a hundred thousand dollars more there this year than they did last year?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I will say to the gentleman from Illinois that Major Richardson claimed that by giving them this amount they could complete all the roads practically that Congress has authorized, and he thinks thereafter there will be no appropriations for this purpose except for small sums for maintenance.

Mr. MADDEN. How much have they spent all together for building roads in Alaska?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I should say that when they get this through it will be a million dollars, but that is a guess.

Mr. MADDEN. How many miles of road?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. It is being figured up. it is not a road of the same fine character that you would have here, that you would call a regular government road. It is a trail, and through what is called, I think, "tundra;" they try to put in corduroy enough so that they can get over it during the soft season of the year. During the winter nature provides a

I understand we have expended about $825,000, counting this. Then I should say the amount of trails and roads we have built must be in the neighborhood of 800 miles. The secretary of the Military Committee says that he has been over them, and that there is more than that.

Mr. MADDEN. How many troops are stationed in Alaska?
Mr. HULL of Iowa. Not a very large number, but they are very badly scattered. We have troops at Fairbanks, Valdez, and a number of places through there, but these main places are on the coast from Fairbanks to Valdez.

Mr. MADDEN. Is it generally understood now in the department that if this amount is appropriated it will build all the roads they need?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. No; I would not want to say that. I have letters from Alaska wanting a million dollars, but these are the roads that are necessary to connect these different military detachments or posts.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question? Mr. HULL of Iowa. In a moment. The hearings of Major Richardson were very full. He is the man who has charge of all this construction. He could get along with $200,000. They are building one great bridge; and he said by purchasing all the material and get it in during the winter, without waiting another appropriation, they could do their work better, more promptly, and more economically. We first thought to cut it down to $200,000, with the idea of giving $150,000 next Congress, but it was put in on his statement that if they could get this amount this year they would finish it up, and that it would ultimately save some expense to the Government. Now I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I would ask the gentleman, Are these roads a military necessity or a necessity purely for the purposes of ordinary commerce?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Well, Mr. Chairman, when they first started out I insisted that they were not a military necessity, and I did not want to go into that business; but Congress over-ruled me; and now I think they are almost a military necessity, for the reason that the posts in the interior have got to have transportation, and without these roads for government purposes the extra expense of transportation to the posts would be more than enough in a short time to make what it cost the Government to build the roads.

Mr. MANN. What I want to get out is whether the actuating motive for the construction of the road was a military use of the road or was by the civil authorities and for civil purposes?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I would say without the military use this committee would never be justified in expending a cent. I remember very well when the first proposition of this kind was made the committee refused to make an appropriation, and the gentleman will remember it. A gentleman from New York came in and his eloquence carried the Committee of the Whole off its feet, and they did make an appropriation and gave it for this purpose.

And now, in my judgment, it has been a wise provision; not altogether a military purpose, but on account of the peculiar situation of the people of Alaska. In other words, I think they are situated in such a way that the Government is justified in extending some aid in consideration of the widely separated parts of the Territory, that it would not be justified in extending to territories in our own continental country.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman puts it on the needs of roads for the people, that is one thing; but if it is for military necessities, then I suggest to the gentleman whether at this time, with a deficiency for this year of $150,000,000 or thereabouts in the Treasury, the necessities—the military necessities—of Alaska are sufficiently great to authorize an expenditure of $350,000 for building roads. In other words, if the gentleman does not think he can afford to cut out the roads for one year in Alaska?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Well, Mr. Chairman, by cutting out this work will prevent us from receiving a benefit from the large amount we have already expended there.

Mr. MANN. But I do not so understand that.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. And I think as a military proposition that it is wise that this appropriation should be made.

Mr. MANN. Well, Mr. Chairman, I submit that so far as the military necessity is concerned it could just as well be put off for another year until we know what the revenues are going to be.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. If it were an original proposition, I might have a different feeling. There is a peculiar condition existing between Alaska and this country, and I think it would be a mistake to cut off this appropriation.

Mr. DRISCOLL. How does the War Department get jurisdiction to undertake the expenditure of this money?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. The whole country belongs to the people, and a military board has this.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Does that authorize the committee to spend, through the War Department, money for the construction of roads? The act provided "for the construction and maintenance of roads, the establishment and maintenance of schools."

Mr. HULL of Iowa. That is a different proposition.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Where did you get this act?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. This gives the jurisdiction itself, as a continuing work.

Mr. DRISCOLL. What does?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. This board that is established there; and an army officer is at the head of it; and it is the War Department that is engaged in this construction work. Major Richardson has charge of it.

Mr. DRISCOLL. But it is-

For the construction and maintenance of roads-

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. DRISCOLL (continuing)- and the establishment and maintenance of schools and the care and support of insane persons in the district of Alaska.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. No; you are reading from the organic tt. This act under which this appropriation is to be expended for the construction of roads was described in such act; but that was a different and independent act.

Mr. PARKER. I would like to say a word.
Mr. MACON. I reserve the point of order for the purpose of asking a question.

Mr. PARKER. I would like to say a word before the gentleman asks his question, because I may be able to answer it in anticipation. In Alaska, as is well known, there are three divisions practically. One is the south coast along the Pacific Ocean, along the coast reached by water; the other is the western extremity on Bering Sea at Cape Nome, which is near the mouth of the Yukon River. The third, which is reached only in the summer by the great Yukon River, includes the north and central portion, but separated from the Pacific Ocean by very high mountains.

Through all of the summer work and a great deal of the winter work trails from the ocean to our central camps on the Yukon are an absolute necessity. At first the transportation was over short trails, from the more eastern part of the Territory, with curious connections, partly through British territory, by trail, lake, and river to what was known as Dawson; but we have found it necessary for the support of our military posts, and for the delivery of the mail to the people who are in Alaska only in the summer, to create a through trunk road from Valdez, on the Pacific, to Fairbanks. It is 386 miles long. It is constructed with the utmost economy, with macadam where necessary, and with simple road-making where that is sufficient for a wagon trail to be used all through the summer. Of this appropriation $247,000 goes to complete this road, which, as a whole, will have cost half a million dollars and is absolutely essential to the delivery of the mails and communication with our military posts, which are occupied all the year round, and for reaching the population which is there in the summer. The two objects can not be separated. Beyond that there were planned a few years ago certain short trunk lines into different parts of the country, which are being constructed from the license-tax fund that is collected outside of incorporated towns

Mr. MADDEN. How much does that amount to? Mr. PARKER. Those are not out of this appropriation.

Mr. MADDEN. How much do they amount to?

Mr. PARKER. I do not know. But the other roads that have been planned by the board are shorter sections of roads, which are also military and post roads like this one. One is from Fort William Seward up the Chilkat River, for which an estimate was made of $20,000 for completion to the boundary

They want to build a road from Fort Egbert, Eagle, out to the Fortymile country, for $7,000. They want to connect the post of Fort Liscum with the main route from Valdez to Fairbanks, a purely military route, for $8,000. They want, further, to improve the united mail trail and sled route from Fairbanks through to St. Michael and Nome, $20,000, that being a winter route. They want to construct a mail trail from Fort Gibbon north to the Koyukuk for $10,000. There is a preliminary route or cut-off, for winter travel only, through from the head of Cook Inlet to the Innoko and Seward Peninsula, which it is estimated will cost $50,000. If I remember right, that shortens the time some forty days. It is a great shortening of the journey. Now, these trails are necessary in order to connect our scattered military posts and these widely separated summer camps. They are essential for the military service, essential for the mail, essential for the lives, perhaps, of the people in that country to get in provisions. The work has been done under the War Depart-

I remember when the Navy Department of the United States ran what was called the "Vanderbilt route" to California for some years through Nicaragua. I know that all through the West the original trails through wild country were established by the military forces of the United States. It is nothing new. It is only that this, unlike most countries that we have now, is really a new country, and to be administered as such. I think it has been done in the most economical fashion by one of the most careful men that I ever met; a man who spends all the road-making season in Alaska and comes here to Washington and gets his directions and makes his plans and his arrangements in the winter. I know of no work of the Government which is considered as important as the completion of this system of trunk lines of trails and roads for mails, passengers, and supplies, which must be transported over these roads until private enterprise takes up the building of railroads in Alaska.

Mr. COX of Indiana. How many military posts have we in Alaska?

Mr. CALE. Six.

Mr. COX of Indiana. I should like to ask the gentleman from New Jersey whether or not it is to be the policy of the Government to connect all the military posts that we now have in Alaska by means of military post routes?

Mr. PARKER. Those that I have named are the only ones that have now been planned. There are no others in sight.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Can the gentleman state that if this appropriation goes through it will connect all the main military routes in Alaska?

Mr. PARKER. All that now exist; that is to say, it connects it partly by trail, and it is done by boat in summer and by travel over the ice in winter. The difficulty is to get over these terrific mountains to the Yukon Valley.

Mr. COX of Indiana. This will be the only appropriation asked for, will it?

Mr. PARKER. Oh, we do not know. You can not guard against the discovery of new gold fields. Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Indiana does not look so innocent as to make a remark like that. [Laughter.]

Mr. PARKER. Now, Mr. Chairman, I would like to have the Delegate from Alaska explain some of those matters, with which he is more familiar than the rest of us. Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the chairman of the committee if this appropriation for the construction of roads in Alaska is based upon existing law? Is there a law that authorizes the construction other than that carried in the annual appropriation bill? Mr. HULL of Iowa. It is a work commenced some four or five years ago. We have been appropriating and continuing it from time to time until we have reached a point in that progressive work where the gentleman in charge of it says that this amount will complete all the work commenced in previous years. Mr. MACON. Is it authorized by existing law? Mr. HULL of Iowa. I think it comes on appropriation bills from session to session. Mr. MACON. And that is the only law for it?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I think so. I think the original act, entitled "An act to provide for the construction and maintenance of roads, the establishment and maintenance of schools, and the care and support of insane persons in the district of Alaska," is the foundation for it, but I never read it, and so I

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, I want to be heard on the point

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York insist on his point of order?

Mr. DRISCOLL. I have not withdrawn it, and I would like to hear what the gentleman from Arkansas has to say.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, according to the statement of the chairman of the committee, this provision is only authorized at this time by reason of the fact that appropriations have been carried heretofore in the annual appropriation bill for the construction of these roads in Alaska. The Chair, of course, is familiar with the decisions of the House to the effect that the fact that appropriations are carried, or have been carried, in annual appropriation bills is no reason why they should be carried there continually, if objection is made to them.

The Chair will remember the other day when the post-office appropriation bill was before the House, that the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Moon] made a point of order against the provision carried in that bill for several years providing for the pay or expense of certain employees when they were traveling away from their places of employment, and the Chair very properly held that notwithstanding the appropriation had been carried for several years, still it was not authorized by existing law, and hence obnoxious to the rule of the House upon that

Mr. Chairman, I received this morning, and I suppose almost every Member of the House received from some one interested in the project, some printed matter-I do not recollect whether it was typewritten or printed-in reference to this particular appropriation, in which it was given as one reason therefor that since 1880, a period of twenty-nine years, Alaska had furnished to the United States $140,000,000 in gold. It gave that as a reason why this road should be constructed and why we should extend it and continue to improve it.

Mr. Chairman, I call attention to the fact that the farmers of the West only last year gave the United States more than $2,000,000,000 worth of corn, more than one billion and a half dollars' worth of wheat, more than $1,000,000,000 worth of hay and oats combined, and the South, the particular section of the country that I happen to hail from, gave the United States something over $750,000,000 worth of cotton; and that these particular sections of the West and South have been asking aid from the National Government for the construction of roads in their particular sections, but have received nothing, while Alaska has received several hundred thousand dollars of the people's money to construct roads within its borders. insist that it is wrong to continue such a one-sided policy. It is not necessary for us to have military roads in Alaska con-The Chair knows that there structed at enormous expense. are no military operations going on in Alaska, and the military part of it is a mere subterfuge to get the money to construct roads for the use of the people who happen to reside in Alaska.

I remember to have read a good many years ago that a flock of geese as a military adjunct had a great deal to do with the saving of a certain important city by acting as sentinels and raising an alarm. Would the Chair tolerate the thought of allowing this bill to carry an appropriation for the purpose of raising a flock of geese because geese once had something to do with a military feat, upon the claim that it was a proper military creation, that might be useful in time of war and add strength to the military forces or affairs of this country in case of war? I think not. The geese appropriation would be just as proper, however, as the one to construct military roads in Alaska, in my judgment. In this case they are simply trying to get money out of the Treasury of the United States to make roads for the gold diggers of Alaska, and not for the army of the United States. The farmers all over the country are crying for assistance from the Government to aid them to improve their roads, but Congress will not hear them as it hears the call from Alaska. I hope it will be decided that this appropriation is contrary to the rules of the House, and that a stop will be put to this extravagant appropriation of the people's [Applause.] money. [Applause.]

Mr. CALE. Mr. Chairman, the ground has been pretty well covered in relation to this appropriation by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PARKER], together with what the chairman of the committee has said. The object of this appropriation is not exclusively for military purposes. There are post-roads, which it is the duty of the Government to build, that this appropriation is to be used for. There are few people who can fully realize the conditions that exist in Alaska. Our mail to-day goes from Valdez through to Nome, a distance of 1,700 miles by dog teams, except the 400 miles between Valdez and Fairbanks. In days gone by, only a year or two ago, before this road was begun, the mail that went through that road cost the Government of the United States at least $3.50 a pound to trans-I refer, of course, to the winter season. To-day we get that mail through for about $1.75. That is largely due, if not entirely, to this trail, on account of its being shortened some 200 miles, and because of the building and improvement of the There is to-day bunched at Valdez, Alaska, over 5,000 pounds of mail that the people of Nome and Fairbanks and the interior of Alaska stand in need of. Are we to stand and quibble over the sum of $300,000 which we will spend not only for the convenience of the people of the Territory of Alaska, but of the Government of the United States in opening up and developing one of the grandest noncontiguous possessions that the United States ever did own? [Applause.]

You are spending to-day on the Philippine Islands, on Porto Rico, and Hawaii, tramendous sums of money, and while I realize and understand the importance of these Territories, yet, put them all together and they neither equal nor compare with our arctic northland. Again, Alaska has never been a millstone on the neck of the Government, but has been a source of revenue and profit since it became a part of this great Nation. So I simply say that this money we are asking for Alaska is a mere atom as compared with what was really necessary and what the Territory is entitled to. The gentleman from Arkan-sas [Mr. Macon] seems to think that the Government ought to spend money in Arkansas for the same purposes it does in the Territory of Alaska, and that they have the same reason for it. I wish to say to the gentleman that he has his own state government to look after his roads, and so forth, and they have the absolute control of their own revenue. We have ample revenue, which is turned into the Treasury of the United States, some of which we are asking for in this measure. We have no local government, and must ask Congress for our own money. For these reasons we are entitled to a consideration that a State does not ask.

Mr. MACON. Did the Territories of this Nation have that right originally?

Which right? Mr. CALE.

Mr. MACON. Control of all their revenues, election of their officers, and so forth.

Mr. CALE. No. Mr. MACON. Then, did the Government help to build the roads in California? Mr. CALE. Certainly.

Mr. MACON. Did the Government help to build them in Arizona and New Mexico?

Mr. CALE. Certainly.
Mr. MACON. And does the Government help to do it now?
Mr. CALE. They build it whenever it is necessary. They built them in Michigan-post-roads-and in Wisconsin. donated large areas of government lands for making military trails through all of the Northern States, all through Wisconsin and Michigan, and I worked on them myself, on military trails built by the United States Government.

Mr. COX of Indiana. And the Government has even built railroads.

Mr. CALE.

Mr. CALE. Yes. Mr. MACON. The gentleman says the Government of the United States constructed those roads?

Mr. CALE. They appropriated money for the building of Mr. MACON. And the money paid for the work?

Mr. CALE. Certainly.
Mr. MACON. A government appropriation?

Certainly. I think that is all. [Applause.] The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New insist on his point of order?

Mr. DRISCOLL. Mr. Chairman, in my judgment this whole tragraph is subject to a point of order. There is no law auparagraph is subject to a point of order. thorizing this kind of work or improvements in Alaska, and the act referred to on which this paragraph is hung provides for civil improvements and does not provide at all for military roads, or post-roads, or bridges, or trails, but in view of the arguments and the reasons given by the gentlemen, I will not insist on the point of order.

Mr. MACON. I renew the point of order.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I just want a word on the point of order and then the Chair can rule. I want to call the attention of the Chair to the fact that the first appropriation for this character of roads was made in 1906. A continuation of it was made in 1907, and another appropriation in 1908, and now this amount is asked to complete what the Congress has already commenced and has largely completed.

The plan was all adopted in the beginning. There is a large amount of material accumulated there under the appropriation. If it is held that the Congress can start a work of this character, and then some one can come in and claim that a point of order will prevent an appropriation for it, the Government could at all times be robbed of every dollar of investment in machinery, in improvements, bridge materials, and so forth, as in this case. The act that is referred to here is an act providing for the creation of a board to provide for the construction and maintenance of roads and the establishment and maintenance of schools, and so forth. I do not believe this appropriation can properly be based on that, because that act provides for 60 per cent of the receipts from the licenses and taxes for schools and roads and the care of the insane.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. MANN. I understood the gentleman from Alaska to say that the taxes that were raised from Alaska were not spent in Alaska. Is it not a fact that all the taxes raised from Alaska are spent in Alaska?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. That is my understanding. Mr. MANN. And that a large share is spent for this purpose? Mr. CALE. My reply to the gentleman from Illinois is that there are a million dollars in the United States Treasury now belonging to Alaska.

Mr. MANN. Oh, every State claims a million dollars or two; it is a poor man who can not claim a million dollars.

Mr. CALE. But I said we did not control it. Mr. MANN. But the gentleman's Territory got it.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. For three years we have been engaged in this work, we have the machinery collected necessary for road building, we have material for building a large bridge largely on the ground, and if this appropriation shall be made we will complete that bridge. It is a work in progress absolutely, and I want to call the attention of the Chair, as the Chair so well knows, to paragraph 2 of Rule XXI:

No appropriation shall be reported in any general appropriation bill, or be in order as an amendment thereto, for any expenditure not previously authorized by law, unless in continuation of appropriations for such public works and objects as are already in progress.

This work was put in progress by authority of the Congress of the United States and is, in my judgment, a continuation of actual work, especially when it comes to the very completion of it, and it is not obnoxious to the rule.

Mr. DRISCOLL. I would like to ask the gentleman if it is true that there is no provision of this kind in the present current appropriation?

There is exactly such a provision and Mr. HULL of Iowa.

in the year before and the year before that.

Mr. DRISCOLL. I do not think there is; the gentleman can look and see.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. I have it here and it reads exactly the same and it has been in for four years.

Mr. MACON. I would like to ask the gentleman this question: He says this is a work in progress, and therefore, in his judgment, ought to be sustained by the House. I desire to ask him if his committee has assumed jurisdiction of some naval project, no objection being offered to it at all, and an appropriation therefor had been carried in his bill for a period of years, and that a war ship had been partially constructed therewith; does he mean to say that if he further attempted to appropriate for that purpose that a point of order would not lie against it because it was a work in progress, and hence that he ought to be permitted to go on making appropriations for the work in progress that was unlawfully begun?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. The question of jurisdiction might be raised, but the question-

Mr. MACON. You do not have jurisdiction of this matter under existing law; you just assumed jurisdiction.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. We have over these military roads. Mr. MACON. This is not a military road, in my judgment.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. We have absolute jurisdiction of the subject, and if the law was passed it would give us power to go on from year to year for any new subject we cared for. The point is we have jurisdiction of the question. I did not suppose that was raised. I supposed the only question raised here was whether this is a work in progress, and it seems to me it is absolutely a work in progress.

Mr. MACON. I would like to ask the gentleman another question. Is there any limit to it; is there any limitation of this work in progress?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. No; but I shall not object if the gentleman wants to put one in here saying that this appropriation is

Mr. MACON. There is no limit to it, then?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. The material is all along the line now.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, while it would seem to be an Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, while it would seem to be an anomalous proposition that this is not a work or object in progress, yet it seems to me it is the case.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair did not get what the gentleman from Illinois said.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, while it would seem to be anomalous to deny this is a work or object in progress, yet that seems to me to be the case.

An appropriation is authorized in one bill for road building. Query: Does that of itself authorize appropriation for all roads in Alaska and for all time so far as being an object or work in progress is concerned? The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Hull] says this is to complete a project. Not at all. This is not to complete a project. It is for construction and maintenance.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. These appropriations have been made on plans that were adopted, and the Congress has been informed each time as to the roads and that the amount appropriated then would not be sufficient to complete them.

amount of money for the construction and maintenance of military and post roads, and the presumption is that that is for a completed project. It is not toward the construction and maintenance of roads.

The law has been for the construction and maintenance of a road. For the construction of a road does not mean, I take it, for commencing the construction of a road, which is a work or object in progress, perhaps, for years to come. The point of order may be waived one year in order to do the work provided for that year, but that is not authority, I take it. commence an object or work in progress—that is, to build roads all over Alaska. Now, this item, of course, is subject to the point of order irrespective of that, because it makes the appropriation available after the next fiscal year, and all that the Committee on Military Affairs has jurisdiction to report in this bill is for the maintenance of the army for the ensuing fiscal year and not for the fiscal year ending 1911. So that, so far as the general item is concerned, it is clearly subject to that point of order, but it seems to me that it is subject to the point of order as not being a work or object in progress, because the bill itself and the law contemplate the completion of the work.

Mr. PARKER and Mr. KEIFER rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. Parker].

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be heard but a moment on the point of order. The act of 1905, referred to, provides for a board consisting of one engineer officer and two other officers of the army. The chief of the board is to reside in Alaska. The board are to prepare plans for the construction of roads and to construct the same to prepare plans for the construction of roads and to construct the roads. By that act the proceeds of roads and to construct the roads. By that act the proceeds of the liquor licenses in Alaska go into what is called the "Alaskan fund" for the construction of those roads. Therefore, there is a plan for roads authorized by Congress. The Alaskan fund not proving sufficient to construct these military roads, there has been appropriated for three or four years in the army appropriation bill certain sums of money which are to be expended by that board upon that plan. I can not see, therefore, how it can be alleged at all that there is not a plan and a continuing work—one that has been recognized by Congress as such, and toward which appropriations have been made, and toward which they are now continued in pursuance of the military policy of the United States.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. PARKER. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman think that authority to build a road to be paid for out of a certain fund will warrant an appropriation out of another fund to build that road?

Mr. PARKER. Perhaps not, as an original appropriation, but the appropriation-

Mr. MANN. That is the question here.

Mr. PARKER. Excuse me; but the appropriation has been made. The work has been begun under those different appropriations according to that plan. That plan is a legal and recognized plan by the old statute, and it is in aiding that plan that we have constructed and are contributing the military part of the road there.

I want to ask if under this paragraph there Mr. DRISCOLL. is anything to prevent this board not only from completing or continuing the work already in progress, but from commencing to build new bridges and new trails, so by having a lot of them in progress next year it would make the work continuous as long as we live?

Under this bill, appropriation is made toward Mr. PARKER. a plan which has been adopted under a United States statute which is recited in this appropriation.

Mr. COX of Indiana. I want to ask the gentleman one ques-My question is whether the organic act is broad enough to keep up a continuous construction of roads-after one is completed, go on to another, and thus become a continuous

Mr. PARKER. It is for the building of roads and trails in Alaska, which are to be laid out by this commission, and we add appropriations in this because it is for the benefit of the military posts.

Mr. COX of Indiana. But my question is whether the organic act under which the appropriation is proposed is broad enough to allow it universally?

Mr. PARKER. This is not an organic act. This is an act which creates the board. The board has planned the building would not be sufficient to complete them.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman's committee may have had plans.

Congress has never had plans and never has adopted any. All that the appropriation has ever carried was for a certain Alaska will be utterly insufficient to keep up communication with the United States and with these posts.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Then, the gentleman thinks the organic act is broad enough to give Congress power to make appropriations for the completion of the construction of these roads?

Mr. PARKER. I think so.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Now, another question; conceding the organic act be for that purpose, whether it is broad enough to lay out a uniform system of highways throughout the Territory of Alaska and keep Congress continually appropriating.

Mr. PARKER. I do not think that would be possible. Mr. COX of Indiana. I am trying to find out what the

Mr. PARKER. This board is composed of three military officers

Mr. MACON. I want to ask the gentleman from New Jersey a question. You said the original act provided for the fund to construct this road?

Mr. PARKER. We have already built part of this road out of the fund.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I think in view of the fact that Congress had enacted a law establishing a board, fixing the duties of the board, giving that board authority to plant or build roads, that the appropriation sought to be made to-day is authorized by law, and is not subject to the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. It seems entirely clear that the appropriation contained in the present paragraph is not authorized by the statute to which reference has been made. In 1905 a law was passed which provided that moneys derived from liquor licenses and other purposes stated in Alaska might be used for certain ends. After stating the scheme, and referring to the construction of roads, it further goes on:

The cost and expense of laying out, constructing, and repairing such roads and trails shall be paid by the Secretary of the Treasury out of the road and trail portion of the said Alaska fund.

It seems to the Chair perfectly clear that an act which authorized the construction of roads and trails, to be paid for out of a certain specified fund, known as the "Alaskan fund," to be derived from certain specific sources of revenue, is not the authority of law which is required to authorize an appropriation to be made in a general appropriation bill to be paid out of the Treasury at large; and so it seems to the Chair that this appropriation is not authorized by statute.

It is then argued that even if not authorized originally by statute, it may be regarded under the rule of the House as the continuation of a work already in progress, and for that reason in order upon this bill. The Chair is familiar with that rule. If the construction of a building, for instance, for a public purpose has been commenced, even though originally subject to the point of order, yet the work having commenced and there being no limit of cost, further appropriations may be made.

It is entirely possible that if a road or highway for military purposes, or even for other purposes, is once commenced, with no limitation on the appropriation, although originally subject to the point of order, yet the work having been undertaken it would be in order to make an appropriation for a continuation of the work. But the present section is very different, because it authorizes the expenditure of money as follows:

For the construction and maintenance of military and post-roads, bridges, and trails in the district of Alaska.

In other words, the argument is, if a road had been begun in one State or Territory, this would authorize an appropriation to be made for any other roads or bridges. Two bridges might have been begun in the district of Alaska. Would this authorize this appropriation to be used for the construction of any number of additional roads and bridges in different parts of the district that it might be deemed expedient to build? It does not seem to the Chair that under the rule which authorizes the completion of a work begun, the fact that one road has been commenced in the district would authorize Congress to proceed and extend throughout the entire district any number of roads, and the construction of any number of bridges which the board may not even have planned yet. Therefore the Chair feels constrained to sustain the point of order.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

Mr. MACON. Does the gentleman offer it as a new paragraph?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I offer it as a new paragraph, in place of the one stricken out.

The Clerk read as follows:

Construction and maintenance of military and post roads, bridges, and trails, Alaska: For continuance of the construction and maintenance of military and post roads, bridges, and trails already begun, in the district of Alaska, to be expended under the direction of the board of road commissioners described in section 2 of an act entitled "An act to provide for the construction and maintenance of roads, the establishment and maintenance of schools, and the care and support of insane persons in the district of Alaska, and for other purposes," approved January 27, 1905, and to be expended conformably to the provisions of said act, $200,000.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order against the provision.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I do not desire to say a word on the point of order.

Mr. MACON. I make the point of order that there is no law authorizing it.

Mr. MANN. I call the attention of the Chair to the fact that a continuation of a road begun on the Pacific Ocean, if pursued far enough, would land on the Atlantic Ocean. This does not locate the road.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. There is definite information and Mr. Hull of Iowa. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. bare these roads are. The gentleman from heavings. where these roads are. PARKER] stated that fully, as it is shown in the hearings.

Mr. MANN. I listened to what the gentleman said, and I did not hear it.

Mr. PARKER. It is in the statement of Major Richardson. Mr. MANN. I understand that, but nobody knows whether he is going to complete the projects under this provision or In fact, I suspect that after the gentleman and myself are both in our graves for fifty years, this same item will be proposed from year to year, continuing the improvement of roads in Alaska, and perhaps properly.

Mr. PARKER. I gave a definite statement of the proposed routes, as shown in the hearing.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. This proviso would make it impossible start any new project whatever. This is simply an approto start any new project whatever. priation for continuing, not completing, because this will not complete it. On the evidence before the committee it will take $150,000 more to complete it.

Mr. BENNET of New York. Is this the proposition that has the support and approval of Major Richardson?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not desire to be technical. but after all we are governed by rules that we can not disregard. The only authority for the construction of these roads is contained in the original act of 1905, and that act provides that they may be constructed, to be paid for out of a certain fund. That fund constitutes the limit of cost. It is thoroughly well settled that the construction of a work commenced can only be continued where there is no limit of cost that is exceeded by subsequent appropriations. It seems to the Chair that this is subject to that rule, and the Chair sustains the point of order against the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Construction and repair of hospitals: For construction and repair of hospitals at military posts already established and occupied, including the extra-duty pay of enlisted men employed on the same, and including also all expenditures for construction and repairs required at the Army and Navy Hospital at Hot Springs, Ark., and for the construction and repair of general hospitals and expenses incident thereto, and for additions needed to meet the requirements of increased garrisons, $410.000: Provided, That $85.000 of this sum may be used for construction of additional ward buildings for the United States Army General Hospital at Fort Bayard, N. Mex.

Mr. MACON. I reserve a point of order on the proviso of that paragraph, beginning in line 15:

Provided, That $85,000 of this sum may be used for construction of additional ward buildings for the United States Army General Hospital at Fort Bayard, N. Mex.

Mr. MANN. I should like to be heard on that. Mr. MACON. I make the point of order that it is not authorized by existing law.

Mr. MANN. Probably it is authorized by existing law. Upon that point I am unable to inform the gentleman, but if the gentleman will reserve the point of order-

Mr. MACON. Yes; I reserve it. Mr. MANN. I speak of this because I have a peculiar and personal interest, not in this place, but in the question of tuber-culosis. This is a hospital now maintained by the military authorities for the cure, if possible, of tuberculosis patients in the army

Mr. MACON. I withdraw the point of order, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I renew it, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. MANN. I may say that the hospital people in charge of it are adopting a cure for tuberculosis, probably the most advanced in the world, and they are having greater success in that hospital in the cure of tuberculosis than anywhere else in the world. One of the Members of this House now lies on his back at Fort Bayard endeavoring to be cured under their method of curing tuberculosis, with every prospect of success, where, without the methods they have now adopted, in all probability, he never would have a chance to become again a well

Tuberculosis has been spread throughout the country, and if the military authorities, if the surgeons in the army, through their scientific investigations are able to add but a mite to the ability of mankind to cure tuberculosis, the expense will be the most willing expense that our people bear for any purpose. [Applause.]

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I want to say just a word on this.
Mr. FITZGERALD. I hope the gentleman will explain just what is to be done with this appropriation.
Mr. HULL of Iowa. The $85,000 is not for one building, but

Mr. HULL of Iowa. The $$5,000 is not for one building, but for a large number of buildings, for consumptive patients and administrative purposes. I think none of the buildings are to exceed $20,000.

Mr. MANN. Perhaps not that much. Let me say to the gentleman the theory out there is to keep the people, as far as possible, out of doors and in as small buildings as possible.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. They asked for a much larger sum than the committee reported for hospitals. We cut the amount asked for so much we were afraid, after cutting it down over $100,000, they might let Fort Bayard go by, and believing that it is the most important hospital and doing an immense amount of good—more good than any other hospital—we wanted to make it certain that this money was spent there for these houses where the patients will be kept out doors and segregated from each other as much as possible, so that they will have the least contamina-tion possible. We struck out all the large buildings, and reduced the expenditure to that amount. We did not give them what they asked for by more than $100,000. They wanted $40,000 or $50,000 for a single building at other places.

Mr. MANN. When the gentleman says that the committee did not give them all they asked for, he does not refer to Fort Bayard.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. No; we are giving Fort Bayard every dollar they asked for. I do not believe the point of order could be raised on it, because we cut down the total amount asked for more than $100,000.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I will withdraw the point of order. The Clerk read as follows:

Shooting galleries and ranges: For shelter, shooting galleries, ranges for small-arms target practice, repairs, and expenses incident thereto, such ranges and galleries to be open, as far as practicable, to the national guard and organized rific clubs under regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of War, $155,576.50: Provided, That $41,000 of this amount may be used for the acquisition of approximately 320 acres of land adjacent to Fort Leavenworth, Kans., as an addition to the target range, provided, that the funds herein provided, or as much thereof as may be necessary, shall be immediately available.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order

Mr. MACON. Mr. Charman, I desire to say that they against the proviso in that paragraph.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say that they have a post there of 7,000 or 8,000 acres of land, with a large have a post there against to make the rifle range secure. They have a rifle range now, and I doubt if it is subject to a point of order, because they have the range there, and this is only to make it secure. It is estimated for by the War Department, and in place of our passing it by a separate bill we placed it on this bill.

Mr. MADDEN. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I will yield to the gentleman.
Mr. MADDEN. Does the gentleman assume to say that because the army has now 7,000 or 8,000 acres of land at this place it could go on indefinitely increasing the number of acres of land without any additional authority of law?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Well, this is for extension of a rifle

Mr. MADDEN. What difference does that make?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. It is a question in my mind, but the Committee on Appropriations often make reports of items like this, and I supposed it would of course be in order, and believe it is in order.

Mr. MADDEN. The gentleman must not assume that because the Committee on Appropriations report things in order that everybody else has the right to do it. [Laughter.]

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I am perfectly willing, Mr. Chairman, to leave it to the Chair, but before the Chair rules I desire the Chair to hear the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, I would like to say that there are 320 acres of additional land required at Fort Leavenworth, and this provision is imperatively necessary. They have a rifle range there, and since the invention of long-range guns there is an increased danger zone. Last year it was almost impossible to give rifle practice to 3,000 troops, and the Government was upon the point of sending them to Fort Riley fer target practice, at an expense of nearly $25,000. If this provision is adopted, it will be an economy to the Government,

Mr. MADDEN. I would like to ask the gentleman a question. Mr. ANTHONY. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MADDEN. I want to ask whether the territory surrounding the present rifle range is built up and inhabited, and whether that was what caused the danger under the present conditions?

Mr. ANTHONY. No; the danger under the present condition is that the range of the rifle bullets is now longer than a few years ago, and the ricochet bullets go over the hill almost a mile or more beyond the former range.

Mr. MACON. Three hundred and twenty acres would not be 2 miles.

Mr. ANTHONY. There are scattered bullets that hit the farmers' houses there; and while no one has been killed so far, there is imminent danger.

Mr. MADDEN. If these bullets go a mile or 2 miles over the hills beyond the present range, how far beyond the contemplated range would they go if this purchase was made?

Mr. ANTHONY. This additional land embraces the entire danger zone.

Mr. MADDEN. It is not to exceed a mile in length, is it?

Mr. ANTHONY. No; but it lies in a long strip.
Mr. MADDEN. Half a mile in width?
Mr. ANTHONY. Not that much, perhaps. It is an oblong piece of land

Mr. MADDEN. It is a piece of land taken from a number of farms, then, I take it?
Mr. ANTHONY. Yes. This has been carefully investigated by different military boards, and they report here in this sup-plementary report that it entirely covers the danger zone.

Mr. MACON. Is it contiguous to the other?
Mr. ANTHONY. Yes.

Mr. COX of Indiana. I see the proposition proposes to purchase approximately 320 acres of land at $41,000. That is about $128 per acre?

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes.

Mr. COX of Indiana. What is the current value of land in that vicinity per acre?

Mr. ANTHÔNY. Some land sells there for as high as $150 an acre. Rough land is worth about $100 an acre, and the best land $150.

Mr. COX of Indiana. What kind of land is this?

Mr. ANTHONY. There is some valley and some rolling-all

Mr. COX of Indiana. Does the gentleman know how much this land is appraised at for taxation purposes?

Mr. ANTHONY. It is appraised at fully $100 an acre.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Has the gentleman examined the records on that himself?

Mr. ANTHONY. No; but I know, because I live adjoining it, and I have been over the land every year, and I know that the price at which it is offered the Government is about its cash

Mr. COX of Indiana. As I understand the gentleman, he makes this statement: This is necessary in order to increase the firing range of the guns.

Mr. ANTHONY. Oh, no. It is so as to minimize the danger to property and life.

Mr. COX of Indiana. And that, the gentleman says, has been brought about by an increase in the range of the guns recently manufactured?

Mr. ANTHONY. In the old days of black powder and the .45-caliber bullet, a bullet seldom went over onto this land that we propose to buy, but since we have the new high-power rifle they do.

Mr. COX of Indiana. And if the Government goes ahead and continues to manufacture higher-power rifles, we would have to keep on getting more land.

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Is this land owned by one farmer? Mr. ANTHONY. No; about a half a dozen different farmers. Mr. COX of Indiana. Has the Government any option on it now? Mr. ANTHONY. No; they have no option. They practically have, because the farmers have agreed on a price among themselves that they will sell at.

Mr. COX of Indiana. How far is it from town?

Mr. ANTHONY. About a mile and a half.

Mr. MANN. May I ask the gentleman from Iowa in charge of the bill a question? Is this the only provision in the bill in reference to the purchase of rifle ranges?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I think so; yes.

Mr. MANN. Is there any other item carried in the bill that is intended for the purchasing of rifle ranges?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. No.

Mr. MANN. Nothing in the bill about the Virginia rifle range?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. No; nothing but this. Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order. The gentleman says that the land is contiguous.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I wish to renew the point of order.
The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is renewed by the gentleman from New York. The Chair is ready to rule. In reference to the point of order that is raised, the Chair is of opinion that a certain portion of the paragraph is subject to a point of order, but only a certain portion. The first portion provides that $41,000 of the amount may be used for the acquisition of 320 acres of land. The Chair understands that the target range has been acquired by provision of law, and there is no limitation upon the appropriation. In view of that, the Chair thinks that the acquisition of 320 acres adjacent thereto and forming a part of it, under the rules of the House and its procedure, is not subject to a point of order. The Chair will, however, state that the second proviso is subject to the point of order if the point of order is insisted upon. The Chair refers to that portion of the section which provides that the funds herein provided, or so much thereof as may be necessary, shall be immediately available. Under that provision this appropriation should go on the deficiency appropriation bill; and therefore, if the point of order is insisted upon against the whole paragraph, it would be necessary to strike it out because the second portion is obnoxious to the rule.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, before the Chair finishes his ruling-and there is no question about the point, I suppose-does the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] desire to prevent this $41,000 from being made immediately available, or the $155,000? Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that proviso makes the entire appropriation immediately available. There is no question about the proviso being subject to the point

The CHAIRMAN. There is no question about that.

I understood the gentleman from New York Mr. MANN. The CHAIRMAN. And if the gentleman from New York

Mr. MANN. Would the gentleman object to the $41,000 being made immediately available?

Mr. FITZGERALD. My opinion is, the entire appropriation is immediately available.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will ask the gentleman from New York to state again what his point of order is. To what portion of the paragraph does the gentleman direct his point or order?

Mr. FITZGERALD. That it makes a deficiency appropriation. The CHAIRMAN. The Chair then sustains the point of order, beginning with the word "provided," in line—

Mr. FITZGERALD. I will make it against the whole para-

The CHAIRMAN. Then the point is made against the whole paragraph, because a portion of it being subject to the rule—

Mr. FITZGERALD. The rule is, Mr. Chairman, that if any portion is subject to the point of order, the entire paragraph goes out on the point being made.

The CHAIRMAN. Then the Chair must sustain the point of order to the whole provision as it stands now.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the paragraph after the word "range," in line 9—

Provided, That of the funds herein provided, or so much thereof as may be necessary, shall be immediately available—that the paragraph be inserted without those lines. I yield now to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL] to offer an amend-

Mr. HULL of Iowa. The gentleman from Kansas offered the amendment.

Mr. MANN. I vield, then to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANTHONY]

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, I offer that amendment. The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 23, page 37, reinsert the paragraph down to and including the word "range" in line —, page 38.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the amendment-

Provided, That of the funds herein provided, not to exceed $41,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, shall be immediately available.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, let the amendment be reported, so we will know what it is.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert at the close of the amendment the words: "Provided, That of the funds herein provided, not to exceed $41,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, shall be immediately available,"

Mr. FITZGERALD. Well, I reserve the point of order against that, Mr. Chairman. I would not object to an appropriation for the rifle range being made immediately available if the House wishes to make the appropriation.

Mr. MANN. Then I withdraw the amendment and offer this amendment:

Provided, That of the funds herein provided not to exceed $41,000, or as much thereof as may be necessary, for the purchase of an addition to said target range shall be immediately available.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That of the funds herein provided not to exceed $41,000, or as much thereof as may be necessary, for the purchase of an addition to said target range, shall be immediately available.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to. The CHAIRMAN. The question now comes on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kansas as amended.

The question was taken, and the amendment as amended was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Buildings on Corregidor Island, Philippine Islands: For the construction on Corregidor Island, Philippine Islands, of storehouses for the Quartermaster's, Subsistence, Ordnance, and Medical departments of the army, $250,000.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Mr. Chairman-

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Arkansas make the point or reserve?

Mr. MACON. I reserve the point of order.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, the Government is expending large sums of money in Corregidor Island in the construction of fortifications and quarters for the soldiers to man those fortifications. Those appropriations are in the fortifications bill. This island is at the opening of or the entrance to Manila Bay. It is of sufficient size to form an asylum in case of an emergency for all the civil officers and military officers and men on the island, but in order to make that of any benefit whatever as an asylum for this force of officers, it is necessary to erect buildings for the storing of supplies.

This appropriation has absolutely nothing to do with any part of the fortifications. It is for the storing of quartermaster supplies, medical supplies, and subsistence supplies, and providing for the maintenance of a large number of refugees, if it should become necessary to send them there, for at least four to six months. And it seems to me that in view of what we are doing at that island, this is a very important item. I do not see how it can be subject to a point of order, because it is a part of the work that is going on all the time, of putting up buildings in connection with the troops, that are entirely independent of the const-defense part. While I hope and believe that we will not have any occasion for the use of this island as an asylum for many years-I hope never-yet it is not the part of wisdom to fix ourselves in such shape that if the emergency should come, as it may at any time, we would be unable to take advantage of these great defenses. This island is far enough away and on heights that can be made practically im-pregnable. I do not believe it would be possible to take it by direct attack, and while they were holding out there, of course, our authorities would be engaged in sending them supplies in the nature of our fleet and additional arms.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Are there very extensive fortifications on Corregidor Island?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Oh, yes.

Mr. DRISCOLL. You have not had much money for it yet.

Mr. MACON. I would like to ask the chairman if he knows anything about the total amount of cost of buildings that have been constructed in the Philippine Islands by this Government?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I do not know. In the hearing they stated that the fortifications were in a state of preparation, and that they were doing good work there and would have it so that no enemy would capture it.

Mr. MACON. Is this authorized by existing law?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Only on the general principle that the supplies of the quartermaster's other departments are authorMr. MACON. Does existing law authorize the construction of any kind of buildings that the Committee on Military Affairs might conceive to be necessary?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. If a place is designated as a post, we can put up all the buildings necessary for the maintenance of that post. Now, that goes a little beyond that, I will say to my friend. It is more as a reserve. It is for the troops, it is for a great reserve of medicines and a great reserve of the necessities of life, and when the question was asked as to whether or not the supplies would grow stale there the reply was:

Yes, except that we will always issue to the army in the Philippines the oldest on hand, so that we are supplying them with fresh all the time, and therefore it will not grow stale.

Mr. COX of Indiana. When was the first appropriation made for this particular island?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. This is the first of this kind of buildings on this island. The Committee on Appropriations have carried on their part of the work.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Will the gentleman state whether or not this appropriation will be sufficient to construct all the buildings necessary on that island?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Yes; that was the evidence given us. As I said, we may never use it; but, on the other hand, we may have to use it in the near future in order to put our soldiers there from the mainland, and our civil officers, and to do that without any food or any preparation for caring for them would be an act of criminal negligence on the part of this Government.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Mr. Chairman, I am one of that very large and rapidly growing class of our people in this country who regret exceedingly that we ever got into the Philippines, and who hope to live to see the time when we may honorably get rid of them. I am afraid we will not, but I hope for it. And I have consistently voted against every proposition which would tend to tie us up there when the time came that we could honorably dispose of the islands and get out. I have consistently voted for permanent improvements at Subic Bay rather than Cavite, on the theory that when we get ready to leave they can hold Subic Bay and Olongapo and such improvements as we have made there. And if we do not hold Manila, we should not hold the balance of the island, nor should we hold Cavite, and certainly, if we let Manila go we can not consistently hold Corregidor Island, because that is right on the bay.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. It is 30 miles away.

Mr. DRISCOLL. You would not say for a minute that this Government can withdraw its occupation of the archipelago and surrender the island of Luzon, Manila, and Cavite, and at the same time hold an island in the bay absolutely commanding the harbor and the city which is the heart of the whole archipelago? Nobody would consistently think of doing that. fore I insist that if we do get out of the islands we will have to surrender Corregidor and Cavite and Manila and the territory around there. I have been opposed to putting any permanent improvements there except where we might hold them in case we are ready to move out and surrender occupation. Therefore I will insist on this point of order, if the gentleman from Arkansas does not, and it is clearly subject to the point of order.

Mr. MACON. I want to be heard on the point of order a few minutes. Now, the chairman of the committee, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Hull], says that this is not only not authorized by law, but he further says that it is not necessary, nor does he know that it will ever be necessary to use these buildings. Therefore I think it is the height of legislative folly to invest $250,000 as the beginning of a construction of buildings that no one, not even the chairman of the committee, who has charge of investigating the necessities of the Philippine Islands, knows we will ever need; and hence, sir, it looks to me like a useless piece of legislation, a wasteful expenditure of money at this time; and there being no law authorizing it, no need for it, I can not see why anyone should insist upon it when no one knows whether we will ever need it or not. The gentleman from Texas said a few moments ago that it was 20 miles from Manila. I can not see why we can not keep our bases of supplies at Manila and not upon this island; and I think the chairman must have had that in mind when he said he did not know whether we would ever use these buildings, even if we constructed them.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Will the gentleman permit a statement? understood the gentleman to say that there was absolutely no necessity for these buildings.

Mr. MACON. No immediate necessity.
Mr. HULL of Iowa. Oh, no; I did not say that at all.
Mr. MACON. I understood the gentleman to say that.
Mr. HULL of Iowa. Oh, no; I said I was satisfied there would be no necessity for the occupation of this island by our army from the mainland or by our fleet authorities in the care of order.

of our records, but that it might be a necessity to use the island, and it might be necessary in the near future; and if we did not have that done, it might be of great injury to the Government. I could not hear the gentleman. He was making a magnificent speech, and I did not think he was saying what he now seems to have said, and I thank the gentleman from Texas for calling my attention to it.

Mr. MACON. I said what the gentleman said.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. He might have misconstrued my remarks very much.

Mr. MACON. The gentleman said that he did not know that this island would ever be occupied, and he does not know that the buildings will therefore ever be needed.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Oh. no.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I want to say to the gentleman from Arkansas that never have I willingly voted for money to be expended upon the Philippine Islands; and if I had my way I would get out, get out honorably, and get out immediately. [Applause.] I do not believe there is any reason why we should be there; I do not believe there is any possibility that honor compels us to stay there, but we are there. And I repeat what said, that I have never willingly voted for money to be spent there, but I did support that proposition in the committee, and support it now, and regard it as a desirable appropriation.

Mr. MACON. Does the gentleman believe that an appropriation of $250,000 for the construction of these buildings will help us to get out of the Philippine Islands earlier? Will we not hold them all the more?

Mr. SLAYDEN. I regret to say that I do not think so.

Mr. MACON. On the contrary, I want to say, Mr. Chairman, that, in my judgment, this will put in another nail that will fasten us the closer to those islands; and if we keep appropriating money making these constructions, we will be kept in the Philippines eternally. It is just like we have done and are doing with the capital in this District. There are places in the United States much more appropriate for a capital than this. The State of my distinguished friend from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] is much better situated for a capital, much better located than the District of Columbia, but we have invested in these grand public buildings to the extent that we will never be able to get the capital away from it; and if we keep piling millions upon millions of dollars in constructing buildings in the Philippine Islands, it will be much harder for us to get away from them.

Mr. SLAYDEN. As a general proposition, I admit that every dollar spent in the Philippines helps to fasten that incubus upon us. I have opposed that policy, but we must be reasonable in these matters. These houses are to be simply a refuge to protect those who may be tempted to flee from the wrath to come, when those terrible fellows, the Japanese, threaten the Americans out there. They merely want some safe place to which they may retire, and they must have something to eat while there; and while I oppose expenditures for permanent improvements, I regard this as a temporary matter, solely intended as a haven of retreat to meet an event which I think will never come.

It is entirely subject to the point of order, I think, but I hope the gentleman will not press it. I believe it will be wiser not to do it. I assure the gentleman that I am in perfect sympathy with his desire not to spend money in the Philippines, and I am even more anxious than he, I think, to get away. I think we can get out with honor any time, and the earliest exit will be the most honorable, for we will leave those people to govern or. if they prefer it, to misgovern themselves, which is both American and honorable.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, believing, as I do, that we ought to surrender the Philippine Islands at the earliest possible moment, and that we ought not in any wise to bind them closer to us than they now are, I would be doing violence to my conscience if I did not insist upon the point of order. Whether this is subject to the point of order or not the Chair will have to determine; but by my insistence on the point, even though it may be overruled by the Chair, I give evidence of the fact that I am, in good faith, trying to get away from the Philippine Islands-trying to get this great Nation to surrender them at the earliest possble moment. I want to put myself on record as favoring that proposition every time I have an opportunity. I want those people to be as free as we are, and I want it to be known unto them that some of us are clamoring for their liberty on all occasions.

Mr. PRINCE. I desire to be heard on the point of order, unless the Chair is ready to rule.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule on the point

Mr. HOLLIDAY. I wanted to be heard on the point of order, but if the Chair is ready to rule—

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule, and in doing so he merely sustains the opinion of his many predecessors in the chair. The Chair has nothing to do with the propriety or wisdom of this appropriation; but it has been held that the construction of barracks in a navy-yard was not a continuation of a public work; that an appropriation for a naval prison was not a continuation of a public work; that an appropriation for officers' quarters and an appropriation for a hospital in a navy-yard was not a continuation of a public work. At the very last session of this Congress, in February, 1908, one of the most distinguished parliamentarians of this body, who is soon to become Vice-President of the United States, sustained a similar point of order against an appropriation for the completion of a building at the Engineers' School at Washington, stating that the tendency of the decisions on this point was strictly to the enforcement of the rule, departing somewhat from what he regarded as perhaps a certain laxity in former decisions.

In view of the whole tenor of the recent decisions, the Chair feels that he is bound by the opinions of his predecessors, and must sustain the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Engineer equipment of troops: For pontoon material, tools, instruments, and supplies required for use in the engineer equipment of troops, including the purchase and preparation of engineer manuals, $90,000.

Mr. COX of Indiana. I move to strike out the last word. The language of this paragraph is identical with the language in the last appropriation bill, except that the last bill carried $72,500, and this bill carries $90,000. What is the reason for the increase in the amount of this appropriation?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. The engineer officers assured us that it was impossible to supply the amount of tools, materials, and other things necessary. They have been making their accumuother things necessary. They have been making their accumulation of material, but have not yet got enough for a full bridge across, say, the Potomac River below here. They must have an accumulation of supplies more rapidly than now to replace the old supplies that we have been carrying practically since the civil war. It is absolutely necessary. They have not enough material to instruct the troops, the cadets at West Point, and the Engineer School at Washington.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Was the appropriation last year sufficient?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. The evidence was that it was not nearly sufficient, and they would be glad to have more than the amount here appropriated.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Did they ask for more than this? Mr. HULL of Iowa. They would like to have $150,000.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Did they ask for that?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. They asked the Secretary of War, and he cut them down to this.

Mr. COX of Indiana. The amount here given is the amount recommended by the Secretary of War?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. PARKER. One hundred and thirty-five thousand dollars. Mr. HULL of Iowa. He recommended $135,000. I want to say that this is an appropriation which you will have with you always.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Like the poor. Mr. HULL of Iowa. It is one of those cases where you are buying material all the time and accumulating some little re-If there was a likelihood of hostilities in the near future I should be in favor of multiplying this amount by 3, so as to accumulate a much larger amount of these supplies. I regard them as absolutely necessary in order to get enough for the instruction of our troops, militia, and cadets.

Mr. COX of Indiana. The amount appropriated here is merely for the purpose of buying supplies for instruction?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. No; of course they use it for instruction largely, but it is to be used in any emergency where they might need it. A large part of our powder is for instruction now.

The pro forma amendment was withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

Ordnance stores—Ammunition: Manufacture and purchase of ammunition and materials therefor for small arms for reserve supply; ammunition for burials at the National Soldiers' Home in Washington, D. C.; ammunition for firing the morning and evening gun at military posts prescribed by General Orders, No. 70, Headquarters of the Army, dated July 23, 1867, and at National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers and its several branches, including National Soldiers' Home in Washington, D. C., and soldiers' and sailors' state homes, $700,000.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the language "and purchase," in lines 11 and 12, page 43. It reads "manufacture and purchase," and I make the point of order against the words "and purchase."

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I only desire to say that the Government has always had the words "and purchase" in the bill until two years ago, when the committee believed we could manufacture it better and cheaper than to purchase it, and it was left out of the last appropriation bill. It was put back because the majority of the committee believed it was necessary to reinstate those words.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, if I thought it was necessary or would serve a useful purpose to incorporate the two words in this bill, I would certainly withdraw the point of order; but in the hearings before the committee when they were considering this bill, I find the following questions and answers thereto:

The CHAIRMAN. The committee and the House seemed to get an impression last time that there was a combination by which the Government was being held up on purchases; that they were charging us exceptions, prices ment was being held up on purchases; that they were charging us exorbitant prices.

General Crozier. With reference to that, I will refresh the memory of the committee by saying that the price which has heretofore been charged is about 25 per cent greater than we can make the ammunition for at the government factory. The ammunition manufacturers have a combination for holding up the selling price. They are not combined in any other way, I believe. I think that in all other respects they are keen rivals.

Reen rivals.

The CHAIRMAN. But they will not underbid each other.

General CROZIER. They will not bid against each other in the matter of price. They do bid against each other in regard to excellence of ammunition and every other manner in which manufacturers bid, but they advance arguments in support of the view that they ought to get 25 per cent more than it costs the Government to manufacture.

Mr. Chairman, after reading the foregoing inquiries and the answers thereto, made by the chairman of the committee and answered by General Crozier, who is in charge of this matter, and who ought to know what he is talking about, I must insist that it does not seem to be in the interest of the proper conduct of the affairs of this Government, military or otherwise, for us, if we can help it, to buy ammunition 25 per cent higher in price than we can manufacture it, when, as stated here, those who are manufacturing it are combined, in the matter of selling price alone, against the Government of the United States. For that reason I insist on the point of order. I do so in accordance with my disposition to overcome the evil connection with the conduct of the affairs of this Government wherever I find it.

Mr. HOLLIDAY. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. MACON. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. HOLLIDAY. I suggest to the gentleman that if he strikes out the words "and purchase" that he will strike out the purchase of material for the manufacture of powder. If the gentleman's contention is supported, we can not buy material. The Government has no saltpeter factory.

Mr. DAWSON. Can I ask the gentleman from Indiana a question?

Mr. HOLLIDAY. Certainly.
Mr. DAWSON. Was not that the language in the bill last ear—"manufacture of ammunition and materials therefor?" Mr. MACON. Yes; that is the language of the last bill. Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. I would like to ask the gentleman from Arkansas a question.

Mr. MACON. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. Does the gentleman think that the private powder manufacturer should be encouraged to continue the manufacture of powder?

Mr. MACON. Not if they want to combine to put up prices. Mr. MANN. It seems to me that there is as much authority to purchase ammunition as there is to manufacture ammunition.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. The purchase of ammunition and materials is plainly within the general scheme for the maintenance of the army, and the Chair must overrule the point of order.

Mr. MACON. Then I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 43, strike out the word "and" at the end of line 11, and the word "purchase," in line 12.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Arkansas.

The question was taken, and the amendment was lost.

The Clerk read as follows:

Small-arms target practice: Ammunition, targets, and other accessories for small-arms and machine-gun target practice and instruction; marksmen's medals, prize arms, and insignia for all arms of the service; and ammunition, targets, target material, and other accessories may be issued for small-arms target practice and instruction at the educational institutions and state soldiers and saliors' orphans' homes, to which issues of small arms are lawfully made, under such regulations as the Secretary of War may prescribe, provided the total value of the stores so issued to the educational institutions does not exceed $30,000, $1.330,000.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on that part of the paragraph beginning at the word "and," in line 1, down to and including the word "dollars," in line 8.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I think the objectionable language commences at the word "targets," in line 1. We have already been authorizing the issue of ammunition at the educational institutions and state soldiers and sailors' orphans' homes, but we never authorized the putting up of targets or target material.

Mr. MANN. I will say that what you have heretofore carried in the appropriation law is "an ammunition of older than current model may be issued." Now, you have entirely eliminated that proposition and propose to issue new ammunition.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. That was some time past, and the older ammunition is exhausted.

Mr. MANN. No; it is current law. The current law says "ammunition of older than the current model." What they are doing I do not know, but if they observe the law that is what they are doing.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I do not care about it; I had just as soon it would go out. If the gentleman insists on his point of order, I

Mr. MANN. What is the reason of it?
Mr. HULL of Iowa. The reason is the issuing of ammunition to them so that they can have an opportunity for target practice and learn to be good shots. There is a great disposition at this time to train these youngsters at these institutions, so as to make them effective.

I will say to the gentleman from Illinois that there is very strong pressure being made on the committee all the time to establish rifle practice in all the high schools of the country.

Mr. MANN. This covers all the state universities, as I understand.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Yes. Mr. MANN. I myself am a graduate of a state university, and I have the greatest affection for my alma mater-

Mr. KEIFER. Can the gentleman shoot? Mr. MANN. Yes; I can shoot. I studied military tactics and commanded a company and went through bayonet and sword practice—and am willing to meet the gentleman at any time. [Laughter.] Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that the state universities are getting to be too much in the attitude of beggars. We have now on the calendar one bill to create a mining school in every state university in the country. have already provided so that we increase the appropriation to the state universities $5,000 a year until it reaches, I think, $30,000 a year for experimental purposes.

I would like to see the States have patriotism enough to use a little of their own money in buying ammunition [applause] instead of getting so that every State expects the National Government, or the National Treasury, to do all the work, most of which ought to be done by the States. I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Iowa desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Only to say that we already furnish the ammunition, and I think the old ammunition has all been issued, so that I think the whole paragraph may as well go out if the point of order is insisted upon.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman will probably want to reduce the

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I understand that all that is left of the paragraph now is "ammunition, targets, and other accessories for small arms and machine-gun target practice and instruction; marksmen's medals, prize arms, and insignia for all arms of the service.

Mr. MANN. That is correct.
Mr. HULL of Iowa. All the rest goes out?

Mr. MANN. Yes, except the amount.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I move to amend the amount by striking out the words "and thirty."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 44, line 9, strike out the words "and thirty."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to. Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike at the last word. When we began debate on this bill, several out the last word. days ago, I asked the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Hull], in charge of the bill, some questions about the amount of powder we use in the army, and the gentleman asked to defer answering them until we reached this part of the bill. I would like to have the gentleman, before we go further, answer my inquiry and give me the cost of powder. My information is that we are paying 85 cents a pound for the powder we are using in

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Oh, no; I do not think so.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Eighty-four and one-half cents for this year, said General Crozier a few days ago to the Appropriations Committee.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I think it is 80 cents.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Eighty-four and one-half cents for the year is the present information, and the information that I have here in this book for 1906-7 (being the hearings in the Senate on this subject) states that we are paying about 83 cents a pound for small caliber, and I would like to know how much we are now paying and how much we are buying.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. We have passed everything on that subject, I think.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. You provide for "ammunition" in this paragraph.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I will say in answer to the gentleman that the amount of powder procured annually by the army is approximately 670,000 pounds of cannon and 360,000 pounds of small-arms powder.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. How much do we pay for the cannon powder and how much for the small-arms powder?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I think we pay 67 cents for the cannon powder and about 80 cents for the small-arms powder.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I want to read from General Crozier, who testified in 1906 on this subject before the Senate committee. I want the committee and the country to know all about this subject as of 1906 and now. I am reading General Crozier's own words to the Senate committee:

In 1906 he said:

There is computed to be needed-

"Needed," mind you-for proper preparation for war, and all purposes-

"All purposes," bear in mind-about 15,000,000 pounds of powder.

Of this 15,000,000 pounds we have on hand something over 4,000,000 pounds at present, leaving to be provided for nearly 11,000,000 pounds. The cost of this 11,000,000 pounds at the prices which we have to pay for the different kinds of powder is about $8,500,000.

Senator PERKINS. Per annum?

General CROZIER. No, sir; those are all total figures.

Mr. Chairman, in other words, we were, in 1906, short in the army for "all purposes"—the war reserve and daily needs of the army—11,000,000 pounds, costing, if bought then, $8,500,000. General Crozier was further asked:

Senator Warren. Averaging about 75 cents a pound?

General CROZIER. Yes. I believe 78 cents a pound for the powder which is used for the purposes of the Government by this bill (the fortifications bill) and about 83 cents a pound for that which is covered by small arms.

Senator Warren. If I figure right, 11,000,000 pounds of powder at 75 cents would be $8,500,000.

Mr. YOUNG. Will the gentleman, state the date of those hearings?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I will do it. They are dated "February 27, 1906. Senate hearings on fortifications bill." have said that I was reading from a report for 1906, and that all the information I have been able to get, plus the information I got out of the hearings containing General Crozier's evidence on the fortifications bill, which was reported to the House a few days since, is what I have in mind. He says now (1908) that we are paying 84½ cents this year.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Eighty-four and one-half cents. Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. The gentleman from New York

[Mr. FITZGERALD], who heard General Crozier, says 844 cents

I will read this from the 1906 hearings:

I will read this from the 1906 hearings:

Senator Warren. Do the manufacturers in the United States carry any great amount of finished stock?

General Crozier. No, sir; practically none.

Senator Warren. Then if the Government should find itself in need of powder for any continued engagement with another country, would it have to go abroad for powder, unless it would wait six or seven months until it was made here?

General Crozier. Yes.

Senator Warren. That is one of the reasons why you desire to have this reserve?

this reserve?
General CROZIER. Yes.

In this same statement-1906-General Crozier said we bought smokeless from 1900 to 1906 as follows:

$159, 900. 74 -- 2, 222, 066, 60 1, 093, 670. 40

Total pounds, 4,914,399, costing_____ __ 3, 475, 637, 74

From July, 1898, to January, 1906, he says we bought for small arms, .30 caliber powder:

We also bought this, he says-caliber .38 powder:

Total pounds (small arms), 1,258,550, costing ____ 1,068, 176.70

Think of that, gentlemen of this committee. I do not care whether the Government is buying at or manufacturing at that price; it is buying every year millions and millions of pounds of powder from private manufacturers, from that world-belting octopus, part of which is in my district, at 67, 80, and 83 cents a pound, when we are making it at 43 and buying part of it at 67 cents. And yet the gentleman from Arkansas had offered an amendment as I came into the Chamber here to put a limit, as I caught it, upon the cost, and it was defeated. We are going along here year after year, and have been for twelve years buying this powder at trust prices, millions of pounds, to be shot away in the air at sunset and sunrise, and otherwise. [Applause.] Mr. Chairman, I pray the indulgence of this com-This is nothing on earth but hard work for me, and while I have done lots of it and shall continue to do it until the 4th of March next at 12 o'clock noon, and have done so for nearly twelve years, I have done it in the name of my country and for right and justice, by the eternal. [Applause.] Now, let me read from General Crozier as to what is contemplated in our great undertaking to bring about peace, to educate ourselves to shoot peace into people. [Laughter.] have it here, and I had to go over to the Senate and borrow this book to get it, and I want to be heard.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I would ask for five minutes more.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I hope the gentleman will let us finish the bill.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed for five minutes.

[After a pause.] The Chair hears no objection,

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I am obliged to the gentleman and to the committee. I was called from the Chamber a while ago and got in just at this time, or I would not delay you.

There is computed-

In 1906, says General Crozier-now look what we are running up against, gentlemen. Listen to this:

There is computed to be needed as a reserve for proper preparation for war, and for all purposes, about 15,000,000 pounds of powder.

Fifteen million pounds of powder at 83 and 85 cents, or 67 cents, if you please, unless you bring a halt to these exorbitant

Of this 15,000,000 pounds we have on hand something over 4,000,000 pounds at present, leaving to be provided pretty nearly 11,000,000 pounds. The cost of this 11,000,000 pounds at the prices which we have to pay for the different kinds of powder is about $8,500,000.

Now, then, on another page-remember that is the reserve which we have to lay up to be ready for war-he was asked how long did he think we would need to gather up this 15,000,000 pounds of "reserve" powder. He replied:

I would be satisfied if we would take six years to do it in, but I do not think we cught to go beyond ten.

Senator Warren. You think, then, that probably 3,000,000 pounds a year would be enough?

General Crozzer. Yes, sir; to go into the reserve supply. I think that would be prudent, reasonable, and conservative.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the intelligent and distinguished gentleman, the chairman of the committee, has stated that we are now paying, I believe he said, 85 cents a pound for powder.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. No; I said 80 cents in the last report I have here

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. The testimony of General Crozier is that in 1906 we were paying from 75 to 85 cents on 15,000,000

Mr. HULL of Iowa. If the gentleman will just wait a min-ute, I will say that in 1907 we were paying 84.5 cents. Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Well, the gentleman, I thought, said 85 cents, so that is pretty close to it. General Crozier, in another part of his evidence of 1906, said he paid for 30 caliber "about 85," and had no "plant" to make any and could not tell the cost to make it there. You can see what I am driving at. I am not a military man. Thank God, I am a man of peace; and I see some big lions on the General Grant monument down here in sight of the Capitol—I would rather see on that magnificent monument we are erecting the words, "Let us have peace," than to bring all the lions in the jungles of Africa. or Great Britain and adorn that magnificent structure with them. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, shall we manufacture powder? General Crozier asked the Committee on Appropriations in 1908—last year—to give him $165,000 to enlarge the "capacity" of the Hook, but it was not given. Why not? He wanted to raise it to the "capacity" of a "war plant," so that if we have war we will proceed the next morning to start to make powder. He wanted to investigate powder prices and hold the trust at reasonable prices, and said so. It requires seven months before we can use a single pound of powder, he says, after we have made it. But the committee did not give him a cent to enlarge this plant. He comes here this year—1909—and asks the committee to give it to him, and he says he asked for it in the sundry civil bill. Why in a "civil" bill? Why wait for that late bill? Why not in the fortifications bill? Why not in this military bill, Mr. Chairman? Why in neither of our military bills? Why wait for the tail end of Congress to put that item in, and perhaps give it appendicitis and let it slough out of the bill, with no way to remedy the situation, because "we are in the dying hours of Congress?" Why not put it in this bill? Why not put it in the fortifications bill? Why have we not had up before this this great reform that General Crozier says he and his splendid aides recommend to this great Congress? I thank the committee. [Applause.]

The Clerk read as follows:

For range finders and other instruments for fire control in field batteries, to be available until June 30, 1911, $62,000.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I reserve a point of order against the paragraph. I wish to inquire why the chairman of the committee is making appropriation for two years instead of one in this bill?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. It is subject to a point of order, if the gentleman desires to strike it out. We fixed a specific time on the theory that there ought to be no indefinite extension of We thought that it was work that would be better done by allowing it to run on for an extra year.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The same argument would apply to every appropriation.

Mr. MANN. It formerly was the custom to make these appropriations available until expended. I called the attention of the committee a year or so ago to the fact that the Constitution prohibited the making of appropriations for the maintenance of the army for the two years. At that time it was explained that the necessity for an appropriation was that sometimes it took more than a year to provide these things. They are manufacturing, I think, to order these range finders and instruments for fire control and field batteries, and it was then explained that it was not desirable to make the contract and require an appropriation to be delivered within a year.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I will withdraw the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the purchase of material, equipment, books of instruction, range finders, and fire-control equipment for the instruction and use of state coast artillery organizations, $25,000: Provided, That in time of war, or threatened war, such equipment may, in the discretion of the Secretary of War, be withdrawn from armories or other places where it is in use by the state coast artillery organizations and may be used in the fortifications of the United States.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order upon that paragraph.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I only desire to say that this appropriation here is for equipping the cavalry and the infantry with automatic machine guns that go with them into the field. It is a part of the equipment of the mobile army, independent of either coast or field artillery. It is purely for the regiments of cavalry and infantry, and if the gentleman will turn to page 2 of the hearings, he will see that this is intended entirely for the equipment of the mobile army in the field, outside of the artillery entirely. In other words, automatic guns are now carried on horses. These are not the same as heretofore provided.

In the committee, where a point of order was raised that we had no jurisdiction over the range finders, it was shown that they were for field artillery, and the chairman of the committee held they belonged to the Committee on Military Affairs. This is exactly the same character as that, only stronger, being for a branch of the service entirely under control of the Committee on Military Affairs. The line of the army has always been provided for in its equipment by the Committee on Military Affairs. Exactly the same man that handles the musket handles this new gun and uses same ammunition used in infantry rifle.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, I think in time of peace we have got enough weapons of war without appropriating $200,000 to begin the manufacture of any new guns. We have war vessels and different rifles that we are changing every few years, and so on; and I am afraid if we proceed to the manufacture of these particular guns against which I make the point of order that they will become obsolete without having been used. I see no prospect of war, and therefore I insist upon my point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule.
Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Chairman, I would like to know what the point of order is.

Mr. MACON. That it is contrary to existing law.

Mr. OLMSTED. Wherein is it contrary to existing law? Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I make the point of order that it is not within the jurisdiction of the Committee on Military Affairs. Mr. MACON. It is certainly subject to a point of order. will read the paragraph again, so the gentleman can see that it is obnoxious to the rules of the House: Automatic and machine guns: For the purchase, manufacture, and test of machine and automatic guns, including their carriages, sights, implements, and equipments, to remain available until June 30, 1911, $200,000.

That is new legislation not authorized by law, and in conflict with the rules of the House.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I would like to be heard on the point of order that it is not within the jurisdiction of the Committee on Military Affairs.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Iowa upon that point.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. As I understand, there is an unbroken line of decisions that the jurisdiction of the Committee on Appropriations and the Committee on Military Affairs must be determined by the state of the division of these items as between the fortifications bill and the army bill at the time the army bill was taken from the Committee on Appropriations and given to the Committee on Military Affairs. The fortification bill for 1876 carried Gatling guns and howitzers for flank defense; the bill for 1877 carried howitzers for flank defense. In 1878 it carried Gatling and other machine guns. For 1879, 1880, 1881, 1882, 1883, 1884, and 1885, the fortifications bill carried the appropriation for machine guns. It will scarcely be claimed that an automatic gun is not a machine gun.

At all times prior to the separation of this work, giving the army bill to the Committee on Military Affairs, the carrying of machine guns was in the fortifications bill and never in the army bill; and that was determined to be the test of jurisdiction. seems to me there can be no question that these guns are within the jurisdiction of the Committee on Appropriations. Decisions without number, almost, have been made, that the decision of this question in each instance must turn upon what the division of these appropriations was just prior to the time the army bill was taken from the Appropriation Committee and given to the Military Committee. At all times, down to and including that of the separation, the appropriations for these guns were carried in the fortifications and not in the army bill. In all recent years this appropriation has been carried in the fortifications bill, and perhaps sometimes in the army bill as well. But the department itself, this year, for the first time, determined to revise the rules of the House and send the estimate for these guns to the Committee on Military Affairs. By every precedent in this House the Committee on Military Affairs has no jurisdiction of this item of machine guns.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, before deciding the point, desire to call the Chair's attention to the fact that this is the first time there has ever been submitted for this kind of gun any estimate specifically for the cavalry and infantry arms of the service.

Now, I want to call the Chair's attention to what this estimate is for. It is set forth in the hearings, in the statement of General Crozier, speaking of small-arms fire:

But I have estimated for these now, because they go right with the infantry and the cavalry. As it is now, the organization is of a field-gun platoon with two guns in each regiment of cavalry and each regiment of infantry; so they are handled by the infantrymen and cavalrymen; they are right with them.

The Chairman. They are not of the caliber of artillery at all?
General Crozier. No; not at all; it is small-arms fire that they deliver, of course much more rapidly than a body of troops can deliver it. It seems to me that they are more peculiarly, even than the field artillery, a part of the armament of the mobile army, because they are handled by the same men who handle muskets.

It is proposed in this appropriation to put them with each arm of the service, the cavalry and the infantry. There is to be organized a field-gun platoon of two guns in each regiment of cavalry or infantry. They are handled by the infantrymen and cavalrymen.

Now, I want to say to my friend from Iowa [Mr. Smith] that as long as they were attached to the artillery, as long as guns of the character then in existence were a part of the artillery force of the country, it was a different proposition; but it is now proposed to organize out of each regiment of infantry and each regiment of cavalry a machine-gun platoon, with a new type of gun, so that they will always have them, in every campaign. You might as well say that range finders and other instruments for fire control in field batteries must always remain with the Appropriations Committee. And yet it has been held by the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House recently that if they belong to the mobile army they do not belong to the Committee on Appropriations.

But it seems to me the rule, if construed properly and correctly, would give the Committee on Military Affairs the appropriation for the field artillery; but not for this type of gun, because the rule provides specifically for all of the line of the army to go to the Committee on Military Affairs for whatever is used, including its muskets, its clothing, and everything. The first decision of the Chairman of this Committee of the Whole House after the separation of the appropriation bills was that the field artillery belonged to the Military Committee. As usual, the Committee on Appropriations was strong enough, with its splendid membership and always its able leadership, to appeal from the decision of the Chair, who had correctly interpreted the rule, and set a bad precedent by reversing him by a vote of the committee on an appeal.

This being the first time that such a provision has been offered arming the mobile army, the infantry and cavalry, with these weapons, I think even the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. SMITH] will not claim jurisdiction of the Committee on Appropriations in its fortification bill. This is the first time when it is proposed to make this advance in the armament of the mobile army with this new gun, and so I submit it belongs to the committee that has entire control under the rules of the House of the line of

Mr. PRINCE. Mr. Chairman, just a word on the point of order. Paragraph 12 of Rule XI states:

All proposed legislation shall be referred to the committees named in the preceding rule, as follows:

Subjects relating to the military establishment and the public defense, including the appropriations for its support, to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The paragraph under discussion begins on page 45, line 20, and ends with line 24, and is the paragraph relating to automatic and machine guns.

Heretofore a different automatic and machine gun has been used by the coast artillery and as a part of the fortifications, For the first time in the legislative history of a military bill, automatic machine guns are proposed for the mobile army. On page 278 of the hearings of the Committee on Military Affairs occurs the following:

The CHAIRMAN. These are for the mobile army?

General CROZIER. These are for the mobile army entirely. We require some for the fortifications, but all of these and a part of those for the mobile army have been procured. We will need of these guns something like 1,550, as it stands now.

Mr. Young. Those for the use of the mobile army also? General CROZIER. Yes; those for the use of the mobile army, too.

Now, what does the mobile army consist of? The cavalry, the coast artillery in part, the field artillery exclusively, and the infantry. These guns are to be used by the infantry and by the cavalry, which are without doubt distinctively a part of the mobile army. If the implements are to be used by the mobile army, there can be no question that as it is now presented this appropriation is in order, and is not subject to a point of order. because it properly belongs to the Committee on Military Affairs and not to the Committee on Appropriations under its subcommittee of fortifications.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Chairman, I am not enough of a machine man to be able to judge whether or not an automatic gun is a machine gun.

Mr. MANN. If a Pennsylvania politician does not know that, do not know who would.

I do not know who would.

Mr. OLMSTED. A Chicago politician probably would. But I should like to say just a word on the point of order made by the gentleman from Arkansas. If I understood, his point of order was not the one which possibly might have been made against this paragraph, but it is that the purchase or manufacture of these gaps was without previous authority of law. facture of these guns was without previous authority of law, and therefore not in order in a general appropriation bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman need not spend any time on that point. The Chair is not at all in doubt on that. The only question in the mind of the Chair is the question of juris-

Mr. OLMSTED. Then I do not care to discuss the question further. I felt sure that the Chair would not hold that every time the army needs a new kind of gun it must first secure the passage of an authorizing act of Congress before the money to pay for the gun can be carried in a general appropriation bill.

Mr. MACON. The Chair held that when the time of limitation which had expired was extended, as this is, for two years, it made it obnoxious to the rule, and hence subject to a point of

Mr. OLMSTED. Does the gentleman think that every time the army wants to adopt a new gun it must come and get an act of the Congress before it can use it?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, on page 527 of the Digest are several decisions that field artillery comes within the jurisdiction of the Committee on Appropriations. The point is made by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PRINCE] that the guns authorized in this paragraph are not field artillery because they belong to the mobile army, and that the mobile army consists of cavalry, infantry, and artillery. The mere fact that the improvements in the character of these guns are such that instead of being dragged by horses they are now carried either on pack horses or by mounted men does not change their character-they are still, in a broad sense, field artillery. The paragraph provides for the gun carriages and equipment to be used in the field by the mobile army, and the decisions say that field artillery comes within the jurisdiction of the Committee on Appropriations.

The mere fact that the War Department has designated these guns by a different title, or has changed the method in which they have been transported, does not change the character of the weapons. They are distinctively field guns, and within the jurisdiction of the Committee on Appropriations and not within the jurisdiction of the Committee on Military Affairs.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will be glad to hear from the gentleman from New York in reference to those decisions.

Mr. FITZGERALD. On page 537 of the Digest there is a decision that appropriations for field guns and their equipment belong to the Committee on Appropriations and not to the Committee on Military Affairs. There are decisions cited in the first session of the Fifty-first Congress and second session of the Fifty-fifth Congress and the second session of the Fiftyninth Congress.

Moreover, an examination of the various fortification bills in recent years will disclose that provisions practically identical with the one under consideration have been carried in it. In determining questions of the jurisdiction of committees, the practice of the House in the past has been given great weight in determining the question at issue.

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Chairman, the facts in this case are new. I desire to call the attention of the chairman to what was said

by General Crozier:

by General Crozier:

Field artillery and mountain artillery and these machine guns, all are for the mobile army, but have all been appropriated for heretofore in the fortifications bill; but I have estimated for these now, because they go right with the infantry and the cavalry. As it is now the organization is of a field-gun platoon with two guns in each regiment of cavalry and each regiment of infantry, so they are handled by the infantrymen and cavalrymen; they are right with them.

The Chairman. They are not of the caliber of artillery at all?

General Crozier. No; not at all; it is small-arms fire that they deliver, of course much more rapidly than a body of troops can deliver it. It seems to me that they are more peculiarly, even than the field artillery, a part of the armament of the mobile army, because they are handled by the same men who handle muskets; not the same individual men, but the same organizations.

Now, the point is, here is a rifle handled by the infantryman.

Now, the point is, here is a rifle handled by the infantryman, handled by the cavalryman, and the only difference from an ordinary rifle is that it delivers the fire more rapidly; and while it was quite proper that machine guns for use in fortifications should have been appropriated for by the Appropriations Committee, the machine gun, which is only a rapid-fire rifle, carried by the infantryman and carried by the cavalryman as a part of the equipment, comes under the jurisdiction of the Committee on Military Affairs, which must provide the arms which the infantrymen and cavalrymen use.

The CHAIRMAN. Where are these guns made? Mr. PARKER. I do not know where they are made. The bullet is of the same size as the other rifles.

The CHAIRMAN. At Watervliet?

Mr. PARKER. I do not know where they are made. I always supposed they were made like the others, in Springfield. do not think there is anything in the hearings as to where they are made. They are used by the infantry and the cavalry just like other rifles.

The CHAIRMAN. How are the guns carried?

Mr. PARKER. They are carried on mules, I think.

Mr. FITZGERALD. On pack horses.

Mr. PARKER. On pack horses, and they go with the regiments. There is no carriage to them.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, yes; there is provision for carriages

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, on the point of order I would like to read three or four lines out of the manual:

The appropriations for field guns and their appurtenances belong to the Appropriations, and not to the Military Affairs, Committee. Cit-ing many authorities. But fire-control and direction apparatus for field artillery comes within the jurisdiction of the Committee on Military Affairs. Citing within the jurisdiction of the Committee on Military Anairs. Citing authorities.

The maintenance and equipment of arsenals and armories are within the jurisdiction of the Appropriations Committee, while the Military Affairs Committee has charge of the manufacture of small arms, equipments, etc. Citing authorities.

Appropriations for barracks and quarters for troops for the seacoast artillery are within the jurisdiction of the Committee on Appropriations, and not of the Committee on Military Affairs. Citing authorities.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I simply desire to call the attention of the Chair to the decision of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union on the question of range finders, similar to this. It is impossible to finish the bill to-night, and I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. Perkins, chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 26915, the army appropriation bill, and had come to no conclusion thereon.

ENBOLLED BILLS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. WILSON of Illinois, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that this day they had presented to the President of the United States, for his approval, the following joint resolution and bills:

H. R. 26606. An act to authorize the Lewis Bridge Company to construct a bridge across the Missouri River;

H. R. 26709. An act to amend an act to provide for the reorganization of the consular service of the United States; and

H. R. 16954. An act to provide for the Thirteenth and subsequent decennial censuses.

BRIDGE ACROSS KANSAS RIVER, KANSAS CITY.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 8333), to authorize the Edgewater Connecting Railway Company to construct, maintain, and operate a railroad bridge across the Kansas River at or near Kansas City, Kans., in the county of Wyandotte, State of Kansas, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is there anything about this bill that requires this railroad to build the bridge high enough to let the water through?

Mr. SCOTT. Nothing in the bill, but there is a general provision in the statutes requiring these bridges to be built in accordance with plans and specifications that are satisfactory to the War Department.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The reason I ask is that it was charged at the time of that tremendous flood out there in Kansas and Missouri in 1903 that it was produced largely from the fact that the railroads, without any consent or authority from the War Department, had built bridges at all sorts of elevations to satisfy themselves, and that when the flood came the bridges themselves prevented the water from getting out of the Kaw River into the Missouri River.

Mr. SCOTT. I wish to say that the very purpose of this bill is to permit one of these railroads to build a larger bridge.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I am very glad to hear that.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

UNITED STATES COURT, GADSDEN, ALA.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 21560) to provide for circuit and district courts of the United States at Gadsden, Ala., which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the middle division of the northern judicial district of the State of Alabama is hereby established, composed of the counties of Cherokee, Dekalb, Marshall, Etowah, St. Clair, and Blount. SEC. 2. That a term of the circuit and the district courts of the middle division of the northern judicial district of the State of Alabama shall be held at Gadsden, in Etowah County, in said State, on the and on the ——: Provided, hovever, That suitable rooms and accommodations are furnished for the holdings of said courts, free of all expense to the Government, until a public building shall be provided for by law.

pense to the Government, until a public building snail be provided for by law.

Sec. 3. That all civil process issued against persons residing in said counties cognizable before the United States court shall be made returnable to the courts of the United States, respectively, to be held at Gadsden, as provided by this act, and all prosecutions for offenses committed in any of said counties shall be tried in the appropriate United States court at Gadsden: Provided, That no process or prosecutions commenced or suits instituted before the passage of this act shall be in any way affected by the provisions hereof, and that all prosecutions herefofore commenced for offenses herefofore committed against the United States in any of the said counties shall be prosecuted and tried as though this act had not been passed.

States in any of the said counties shall be prosecuted and tried as though this act had not been passed.

SEC. 4. That it shall be the duty of the clerks, marshals, and other officers of the northern judicial district to attend said terms of said court and perform the duties pertaining to their positions, and no additional clerk or marshal shall be appointed in said district; and that the clerks of the circuit and district courts of said northern district shall maintain an office, in charge of themselves or a deputy, at Gadsden, which shall be kept open at all times for the transaction of the business of said division.

With the following amendments:

"Page 1, line 10, after the words 'on the' insert 'first Tuesday in February.'

February 1, after the words 'on the' insert 'first Tuesday in August of each year.'
"Strike out the words 'and Blount,' at the end of line 6, page 1, and insert the word 'and' before the word 'Saint.'"

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

The question was taken and the amendments were agreed to. The SPEAKER. The question now is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

IMMIGRATION OF ALIENS.

Mr. BENNET of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 13079) to amend section 21 of the immigration law, with amendments, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 21 of the act entitled "An act to speak or to learn the English language, and regulate the immigration of aliens into the United States," approved homesteader he could not become naturalized.

February 20, 1907, is hereby amended by adding at the end thereof the February 20, 1907, is hereby amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"Provided further, That any alien who is now under sentence because of conviction in this country of a felony, or who may be hereafter convicted of a felony, shall, at the expiration of his sentence, be taken into custody and returned to the country whence he came in the manner provided by section 20 of this act."

SEC. 2. That section 21 of the said act, as so amended, is hereby reenacted.

With the following amendment:

Strike out lines 7 to 12 and insert the following:

"Provided further, That any alien who is now under sentence because of conviction in this country of a crime punishable by imprisonment in a state prison or penitentiary for a term of one year or more, or who may be hereafter convicted of such a crime, shall, at the expiration of his sentence, be taken into custody and returned to the country whence he came in the manner provided by section 20 of this act, but at the expense of the 'immigrant fund.' This proviso shall not apply to an alien sentenced for a term less than one year. Each alien taken into custody on a warrant issued pursuant to this proviso shall be held for at least ten days before being actually deported."

Mr. STAFFORD. I would like to ask the gentleman whether the purpose of the amendment which has been read is to compel the deportation of aliens from this country provided they have committed a crime that is only punishable by one year's imprisonment in a state prison or penitentiary?

Mr. BENNET of New York. No; it applies only to aliens who have committed a felony, and only applies when the term of their sentence is a year or more. I might say to the gentleman that the objections which were made to this bill when it was up before by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Sabath], were that it might apply to trivial crimes, to technical felonies, and also American citizens might be "railroaded." These objections have been met by making it apply to men who are sentenced to more than a year and so that the actual deportation shall not take place until ten days after the arrest. This gives them the time for habeas corpus.

Mr. STAFFORD. I can appreciate how a person might commit a minor offense and it might yet be considered a felony, under extenuating circumstances, and with no real intent to do wrong, as when drunk, and be punished for a year and committed to state prison, but who should not be deported by reason of his unfortunate condition or the peculiar conditions of family and the like, which this amendment would compel.

Mr. BENNET of New York. In the first place, for the absolutely minor offenses no man would be sentenced for more than a year. In the second place, if by accident he was, the thing to do would be to get a pardon, in which case the bill would not operate.

Mr. STAFFORD. Are you sure? Mr. BENNET of New York. Yes; because it has been held in the Supreme Court of the United States that a pardon will wipe out everything ab initio.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Suppose a man has been in this country ten years without becoming naturalized. Suppose his family is here, and he commits some offense for which he is committed for a year. Is it proposed under this bill, after that man has been punished, to separate him from his family and leave them dependent upon the community?

Mr. BENNET of New York. Absolutely; and I will say to the gentleman, while I doubt if the alien has a greater friend on the floor than I, that the man who comes here and stays ten years without becoming a citizen, and at the conclusion of the ten years commits a felony, ought not to receive very great consideration. And, further, I will say, answering that which is in the gentleman's mind, perhaps, about his family. In the first place, the family would be better off without the incumbrance of that man; and in the second place, answering another argument as to who would look after the family, his family would be looked after by the same people who would look after them when the man was in jail.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Is it not possible for some man to come here and stay ten years and not be able to comply with the requirements of the naturalization act?

Mr. BENNET of New York. Any man of good moral character

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes. The applicant must be able to comply with certain requirements, and some men could not even though they were of good moral character.

Mr. BENNET of New York. I think my friend is mistaken, although he is usually correct and accurate. If the gentleman will look to the act of June 29, 1906, I think he will agree with me that there is nothing in that act which a man ought not to be able to learn in ten years.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Some men might come here and be employed in some place where they never have an opportunity to speak or to learn the English language, and if he were not a Mr. BENNET of New York. Oh, yes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, no.

Mr. BENNET of New York. He must be able to speak the English language.

Mr. FITZGERALD. And he might be located and employed in some section of this country where he would never have the opportunity to speak or to learn enough English to become naturalized.

Mr. BENNET of New York. I doubt it, and the man who had no more initiative and ambition than not to learn the English language in ten years would not have the initiative and ambition to commit a crime of any magnitude.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Unless there is some recommendation in this to protect the families of aliens who have been residents here for a number of years, I shall object.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I object.

Mr. BENNET of New York. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I demand a second.

Mr. BENNET of New York. I ask unanimous consent that second be deemed to be ordered.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I object, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. An objection is equivalent to a demand for quorum?

Mr. FITZGERALD. It may be eventually.

The SPEAKER. The Chair wants to get at it. Mr. FITZGERALD. I suppose it would.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman propose if the bill

Mr. FITZGERALD. This bill will not pass without a quorum.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I move that the House do now adjourn. The SPEAKER. Pending the motion, the Chair submits the following personal requests:

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. WEBB, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, the papers in the case of bill for relief of Millie Riddle (Invalid Pensions), no adverse report having been made thereon.

Mr. RANSDELL of Louisiana, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, the papers in the case of Eleanor M. Loise (H. R. 8635). Fifty-fourth Congress, no adverse report having been made

ADJOURNMENT.

The motion to adjourn was then agreed to; and accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 28 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

SENATE.

Tuesday, February 2, 1909.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. Edward E. Hale. The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on request of Mr. Kean, and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Journal stands approved.

EARTHOUAKE IN CALIFORNIA.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting, by direction of the President, and in response to a resolution of the 27th ultimo, a special report by Maj. Gen. A. W. Greely, U. S. Army, commanding the Pacific Division, on the relief operations conducted by the military authorities of the United States at San Francisco and other points in connection with the earthquake of April 18, 1906, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Printing.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 8333) to authorize the Edgewater Connecting Railway Company to construct, maintain, and operate a rail-road bridge across the Kansas River at or near Kansas City, Kans., in the county of Wyandotte, State of Kansas.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 6418) authorizing the sale of land at the head of Cordova Bay, in the Territory of Alaska, and for other purposes.

The message further announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 26399) making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1909, asks a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. TAWNEY, Mr. VREELAND, and Mr. LIVINGSTON managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H. R. 21560. An act to provide for circuit and district courts of the United States at Gadsden, Ala.; and

H. R. 24863. An act to prohibit the importation and use of opium for other than medicinal purposes.

The message further transmitted to the Senate a resolution declaring that the bill (S. 8021) to prohibit the importation and use of opium for other than medicinal purposes, in effect repeals in part the provision of section 43 of the act of July 24, 1897, the existing tariff act, and in the opinion of the House of Representatives contravenes the first clause of the seventh section of the first article of the Constitution, and is an infringement of the privileges of the House of Representatives, and that the bill had been ordered to lie on the table.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills, and they were thereupon signed by the Vice-President:

S. 5473. An act amending section 1998 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, and to authorize the Secretary of the Navy in certain cases to mitigate or remit the loss of rights of ciizenship imposed by law upon deserters from the naval service;

H. R. 4931. An act to correct the military record of Corwin M. Holt; and

H. R. 17572. An act for the relief of George M. Voorhees.

Whereas the National Rivers and Harbors Congress has asked that provision be made for $500,000,000 to be expended for the development of the navigable waterways of the United States; and Whereas it has been publicly announced by a high and well-informed official of the United States that a sum of about $275,000,000 has already been appropriated and authorized to be expended upon works now undertaken and to be hereafter completed on the rivers and harbors of the United States; and Whereas none of the said $275,000,000 is being expended on the 1,600 miles of the navigable Missourl River above Sloux City; and Whereas the report of the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors recommends the improvement of the Missourl River below Sloux City (which is concurred in by the United States engineers), and its estimate provides for the expenditure of $42,500,000 for the general improvement of the Missourl River below Sloux City, Iowa, of which sum $2,000,000 is to be expended annually upon the Missourl River from Kansas City to St. Louis; and Whereas no estimates have been made for the general improvement of the Missourl River above Sloux City, Iowa, or the Yellowstone River or the Red River of the North; and Whereas no money is being expended nor has provision been made to expend any-part of the aforementioned $42,500,000 within the States of North Dakota, South Dakota, and Montana; and Whereas the United States engineer's estimate submitted to the Chief of Engineers, and through him submitted to the present Congress, makes practically no provision for any expenditures for the improvement or snagging of the upper Missourl River above Sloux City, Iowa, or the Yellowstone River in North Dakota and Montana; and Whereas commerce carried on these streams during the year 1908 in the localities mentioned exceeds that of the Missourl River below Sloux City; Now, therefore be it Resolved by the senate (the house of representatives co

Concurrent resolution.

Whereas the interests of the State of North Dakota are agricultural and its grain crop is its chief source of wealth; and
Whereas the interests of the grain producer of the State of North Dakota are inseparably dependent upon a system of inspection which shall give to the producer a just reward for his toil; and
Whereas after a careful and exhaustive investigation of the subject of grain grading it is apparent that such a uniform grading and inspection can be attained only under federal supervision; and
Whereas such a federal system and inspection would eliminate present injustice, do away with fraud and discrimination, and insure to the farmer the profits which are frequently taken by those who have produced none of the actual wealth; and
Whereas 90 per cent of the grain handled at terminals is interstate, which would insure federal supervision over nearly the entire crop of the Northwest, if a federal-inspection law were passed; and
Whereas federal inspection of meats and foods has resulted in untold benefits to the people of this country; and
Whereas the only remedy for present injustice in grain grading lies in the absolute divorce of the purchasing interests from the inspection and grading of grain: Now, therefore be it

Resolved by the senate of the State of North Dakota (the house of representatives concurring), That Senate bill No. 382, known as the "McCumber bill," which provides for a fair, adequate, and just system of federal inspection, be approved and indorsed by this legislative assembly on behalf of the great producing classes of this State, and that its passage by the Congress of the United States be earnestly recommended; and be it further

I hereby certify that the above resolution originated in the senate and was concurred in by the house of the eleventh legislative assembly of the State of North Dakota,

JAMES W. FOLEY, Secretary.

Mr. McCUMBER presented a concurrent resolution of the legislature of North Dakota, which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands and ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

Concurrent resolution.

Whereas there is now pending before the Congress of the United States a bill providing that the United States Government shall reserve unto itself all mining rights to all coal deposits underlying government lands for which patent has not been issued so far, and that patent be issued for the surface of the land only; and

Whereas most of these coal-underlying lands in the western part of the State of North Dakota have been disposed of in former years as land grants and under the different land laws without restrictions of this kind; and

Whereas the comparatively small acreage of unpatented lands, scattered mostly in small and isolated tracts, left in the hands of the Government in this State are of not much value as mining properties, more so as the quality of this lignite coal in this State is such that it can be used in a limited way and only inside of a short time after its mining; and

Whereas hundreds of settlers have made homestead entries in good faith and have improved their places, spending thousands of dollars, not knowing that their lands were underlaid with this coal, relying upon and expecting to receive clear title to such lands after fully complying with the requirements of the law; and

Whereas such clouded title will be a hardship to a great number of settlers, because they, with such a cloud and burden upon the land, will be unable to borrow money on mortgages or sell or dispose of the same: Now, therefore be it

Resolved by the senate of the State of North Dakota, the house of representatives concurring, That our congressional delegation in Congress be respectfully requested to use all honorable means to prevent the passage of said bill and to introduce and to assist in its operation of the state of North Dakota which have been entered upon under our present land laws and which were not designated as coal lands in the State of North Dakota which have been entered upon under our present land laws and which were not designated as coal lands at the time such entry was made.

Resolved; That the clerk of the senate be instructed to send a copy of these resolutions to each of our Members in Congress on the final passage of the same.

I hereby certify that the above resolution originated in the senate and was concurred in by the house of the eleventh legislative assembly of the State of North Dakota.

JAMES W. FOLEY, Secretary.

THE STATE OF WYOMING, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY OF STATE.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, State of Wyoming, 88:

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, State of Wyoming, 88:

I, William R. Schnitger, secretary of state of the State of Wyoming, do hereby certify that the annexed has been carefully compared with the original enrolled house joint memorial No. 1, of the tenth legislature of the State of Wyoming, and is a full, true, and correct copy of same, and of the whole thereof.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the great seal of the State of Wyoming.

Done at Cheyenne, the capital, this 29th day of January, A. D. 1909.

[SEAL.]

WILLIAM R. SCHNITGER,

Secretary of State.

House joint memorial 1-Good roads memorial.

Memorializing the Congress of the United States to transfer 1,000,000 acres of the public land now held by the United States within the boundaries of the State of Wyoming to this State for the purpose of creating a fund for establishing and maintaining good roads in the said State of Wyoming.

said State of Wyoming.

Be it resolved by the house of representatives of the State of Wyoming (the senate concurring), That the Congress of the United States be memorialized as follows:

Whereas good roads are one of the great first needs of every State and also one of the surest means of aiding the material prosperity and advancing the settlement thereof, this being especially true in Wyoming, where the country is not thickly populated and where the means of communication between the several parts of the State are not numerous: Now therefore be it

Resolved, That the Congress of the United States is hereby requested to transfer 1,000,000 acres of the public land now held by the United States within the boundaries of the State of Wyoming to this State for the purpose of creating a fund to be used by the State of Wyoming solely for the establishment and maintenance in good repair of a system of public roads within its borders: Be it further

Resolved, That a certified copy of this memorial be sent to each of the Members of the congressional delegation from this State in Congress with a request that they employ their best efforts to secure action in the premises.

Approved January 28, 1909.

AFFAIRS OF INDIANS IN WISCONSIN.

Mr. KEAN, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to whom was referred Senate resolution 263 (reported by Mr. Clapp from the Committee on Indian Affairs, January 26, 1909), reported it without amendment, and it was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Indian Affairs be, and it hereby is, authorized to investigate the affairs of all the Indians of Wisconsin. Said committee is authorized to send for persons and papers, to administer oaths, and to sit during the session of Congress or during recess, at Washington or elsewhere, and to have the testimony taken printed; the expense of such investigation to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate; and be it further Resolved, That pending the final report of such committee and action thereon by Congress the Secretary of the Interior be requested to suspend the approval of any roll, the making of allotments, and the making of timber contracts for Indian allottees in the State of Wisconsin.

LANDS OF OMAHA INDIANS.

Mr. BROWN. I am directed by the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 8356) to enable the Omaha Indians to protect from overflow their tribal and allotted lands located within the boundaries of any drainage district in Nebraska, to report it favorably with amendments. I ask for the present consideration of the bill.

The Secretary read the bill, and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The first amendment was, in section 1, page 1, line 4, after the word "funds," to strike out the words "remaining to the credit;" in line 5, after the word "Indians," to insert the words "hereafter accruing from any source," so as to make the section read:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized, in his discretion, to pay from the funds of the Omaha tribe of Indians hereafter accruing from any source any assessments which may be made by any drainage district in the State of Nebraska on the tribal lands of said Indians to protect such lands from overflow, not exceeding an average of $8 per acre.

The amendments were agreed to.

The amendment was, in section 2, page 2, line 1, after the word "funds," to insert the word "now;" and in line 2, after the word "tribe," to strike out the words "after the payment provided for in section 1 of this act," so as to read:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized, in his discretion, under such regulations as he may prescribe, to pay per capita to the Indians of the Omaha tribe allotted lands within any such drainage district the proportionate share of such Indians in the funds now remaining to the credit of said tribe.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXPENSES OF INAUGURAL CEREMONIES.

Mr. HALE. From the Committee on Appropriations, I report back without amendment the joint resolution (S. R. 122) to enable the Secretary of the Senate and Clerk of the House of Representatives to pay the necessary expenses of the inaugural ceremonies of the President of the United States March 4. 1909, and I ask for its immediate consideration.

The Secretary read the joint resolution; and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

COURTS IN TENNESSEE.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I am directed by the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (H. Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to cause a survey to be made of the harbor at Anacortes, Wash., to determine the cost and advisability of its improvement.

EMPLOYEES OF INTERSTATE RAILROADS.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I ask unanimous consent that a document (S. Doc. No. 691) be printed consisting of acts of Congress affecting railroad employees and orders of the Interstate Commerce Commission made in accordance with said acts.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nevada asks unanimous consent that the paper submitted by him be printed as a document. Is there objection?

Mr. ALDRICH. What is the nature of the document? Mr. NEWLANDS. It is a document containing the acts of Congress relating to labor in the operation of interstate commerce and the rulings of the Interstate Commerce Commission under the acts affecting railroad employees. It is a very short document

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

H. R. 21560. An act to provide for circuit and district courts of the United States at Gadsden, Ala., was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

RESTRICTION ON OPIUM TRADE.

The bill (H. R. 27427) to prohibit the importation and use of opium for other than medicinal purposes was read the first time by its title.

Mr. ALDRICH. That is practically the same bill which was reported from the Committee on Finance and passed by the Senate. I ask that it be now taken up.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be read for the information of the Senate.

The bill was read the second time at length, as follows:

The bill was read the second time at length, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That after the 1st day of April, 1909, it shall be unlawful to import into the United States opium in any form or any preparation or derivative thereof: Provided, That opium and preparations and derivatives thereof: Provided, That opium and preparations and derivatives thereof, other than smoking opium or opium prepared for smoking, may be imported for medicinal purposes only, under regulations which the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to prescribe, and when so imported shall be subject to the duties which are now or may hereafter be imposed by law.

Sec. 2. That if any person shall fraudulently or knowingly import or bring into the United States, or assist in so doing, any opium or any preparation or derivative thereof contrary to law, or shall receive, conceal, buy, sell, or in any manner facilitate the transportation, concealment, or sale of such opium or preparation or derivative thereof after importation, knowing the same to have been imported contrary to law, such opium or preparation or derivative thereof shall be forfeited and shall be destroyed, and the offender shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $5,000 nor less than $50, or by imprisonment for any time not exceeding two years, or both. Whenever, on trial for a violation of this section, the defendant is shown to have, or to have had, possession of such opium or preparation or derivative thereof, such possession shall be deemed sufficient evidence to authorize conviction unless the defendant shall explain the possession to the satisfaction of the jury.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following resolution of the House of Representatives, which was referred to the Committee on Finance:

Resolved, That Senate bill 8021, "To prohibit the importation and use of opium for other than medicinal purposes," in effect repeals in part the provision of section 43 of the act of July 24, 1897, the existing tariff act, and in the opinion of this House contravenes the first clause of the seventh section of the first acticle of the Constitution of the United States, and is an infringement of the privileges of this House, and that the said bill be laid upon the table; that a copy of this resolution be transmitted to the Senate.

LANDS IN ALASKA.

Mr. FLINT submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (8. 6418) entitled "An act authorizing the sale of land at the head of Cordova Bay, in the Territory of Alaska, and for other purposes," having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out all after section 8.

And the House agree to the same.

FRANK P. FLINT, W. B. HEYBURN, J. H. BANKHEAD, Managers on the part of the Senate. F. W. MONDELL, A. J. VOLSTEAD, JNO. W. GAINES, Managers on the part of the House.

The report was agreed to.

NATIONAL CURRENCY ASSOCIATIONS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The morning business is closed, and the Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over under the rule, which will be read.

The Secretary read Senate resolution 271, submitted yesterday by Mr. CLAY, as follows:

day by Mr. CLAY, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to transmit to the Senate the names of the national currency associations formed under the act approved May 30, 1908, known as an act to amend the national banking laws, the names and location of the banks composing each association, the principal place of business of each association thus formed, the name and location of each bank belonging to any national currency association applying for an issue of additional circulating notes under the provisions of the act approved May 30, 1908, together with a list of the securities deposited for the redemption of such notes and the total amount of notes issued under this provision of law.

Mr. ALDRICH I would suggest that the information which

Mr. ALDRICH. I would suggest that the information which the Senator seeks is at the disposal of every Member of the Senate. I think perhaps the resolution had better be sent to the Committee on Finance. In any event, I am prepared to answer the question. There has been only one currency association formed, and that is in the city of Washington. There have been, of course, no emergency notes issued by any association.

Mr. CLAY. I was fully aware of the fact that no additional notes had been issued. I have been asked by two or three of my constituents what had been the operation of the new financial act, and if any additional currency had been issued or applied for. My object and purpose in getting the information was to have it simply in a succinct form, that we might readily refer to it.

Mr. ALDRICH. The operation of the act, so far as I am aware, has been of the best possible nature. There has been no occasion for currency associations and none have been formed, and no notes have been issued.

Mr. CLAY. Do I understand the Senator to say that the act has accomplished its purpose?

Mr. ALDRICH. Precisely.
Mr. CLAY. It has caused no money to be issued and has placed no more in circulation, and that was really the intention of the act.

Mr. ALDRICH. That is not my statement. I suppose the Senator from Georgia understands that. I made a statement and it was perfectly plain, I imagine, to the comprehension of the Senator from Georgia; but I think the resolution had better go to the Committee on Finance.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Rhode Island moves that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. CLAY. I hope the Senator will not insist on that motion. I can not see why it should be referred. The Senator says that there is no reason why the information ought not to be furnished. If the Senator intends to have it referred to the Finance Committee, there to sleep, it is not the usual course in cases of this kind. I hope the Senator will withdraw the motion and let the resolution be adopted.

Mr. ALDRICH. The information which the Senator seeks is already in the possession of the Senate by the reports of two executive officers. It is in the possession of the Senate by the statement which I make that no currency associations have been formed except one in the city of Washington, and no notes have been issued. I can not see any particular purpose which the Senator from Georgia or anybody else can have by the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. CLAY. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Rhode Island yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. ALDRICH. Certainly.

Mr. CLAY. The Senator is fully aware of the fact that we frequently seek information here from the departments in concise form to meet the wishes of Senators, notwithstanding the fact that you can go through the reports of different departments and select the information that is really in the possesston of the departments. I hardly think the Senator will contend that this information is in the possession of the Senate. In the reports of the Treasury Department the information can probably be found. The Senator will not deny that frequently we have passed resolutions seeking such information, notwithstanding the fact that we could go to the Post-Office Department, or the Treasury Department, or the Navy Department, and go through the reports there and by dilligent inquiry find what we want.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President, the Senate has always been extremely liberal in passing resolutions asking for information from the different departments of the Government. Some of it of course will answer a useful purpose, but at times the Senate has adopted resolutions that have caused great expense to the Government, when I imagine not even the Senator who asked for the information himself ever read the answer. Certainly no useful purpose has been gained by the adoption of resolutions

Here is a resolution which asks for information that has already been reported upon by two officers of the Government, required by law to make reports to Congress. I have stated to the Senator what is an unquestioned fact which can not be denied anywhere, that no such currency associations except in one case have been formed, and no notes have been issued. There may be some constituent of the Senator from Georgia who wants to have some other form of information upon the subject. I can see no other useful purpose which the Senator can have in view by the adoption of his resolution.

Mr. CLAY. Do I understand the Senator from Rhode Island to say, and I think I understand him correctly, that only one association has been formed under the law, and that is an association in the city of Washington, and that outside of the city of Washington not a single currency association has been

Mr. ALDRICH. The organization has not been completed in any case. There is one in Atlanta and one—

Mr. CLAY. That has not been completed.
Mr. ALDRICH. There is one in New York, and there are a large number of applications which are not covered by the resolution of the Senator from Georgia where the organization is in an incomplete form. The only completed organization is the one in the District of Columbia of the banks here.

Mr. CLAY. There has been no currency issued under the

Mr. ALDRICH. None whatever.

Mr. CLAY. None applied for, and no organization except

Mr. ALDRICH. That is all.
Mr. CLAY. Let the resolution go over until to-morrow. I think I shall want to call it up and submit some remarks on it.
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the resolution will lie over, with the motion of the Senator from Rhode Island pending.

COMPANIES B, C, AND D, TWENTY-FIFTH INFANTRY.

Mr. FORAKER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 5729.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 5729) to correct the records and authorize the reenlistment of certain noncommissioned officers and enlisted men belonging to Companies B, C, and D of the Twenty-fifth U. S. Infantry who were discharged without honor under Special Orders, No. 266, War Department, November 9, 1906, and the restoration to them of all rights of which they have been deprived on account thereof.

Mr. FORAKER. The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. McLau-

RIN] yesterday announced that he would probably be ready to speak this morning on the pending measure.

Mr. President, I prefer not to speak on the Mr. McLAURIN. bill to-day if the Senator is not urgent for it. I was busily engaged on some matters yesterday that interrupted my preparation for what I intend to say. I do not intend to say very much on the bill, however.

Mr. FORAKER. I would be only too glad to accommodate the Senator if he will accommodate me a little.

Mr. McLAURIN. What is the accommodation the Senator from Ohio would ask?

Mr. FORAKER. I am willing to let the bill go over if the Senate will agree to a day on which we can take a vote on the

Mr. McLAURIN. What day would the Senator from Ohio suggest?

Mr. FORAKER. I would like it not later than the 15th. Mr. McLAURIN. Suppose we agree on the 1st of March? Mr. FORAKER. We can not agree on the 1st of March.

Mr. TALIAFERRO. I should like to ask the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, or the Senator in charge of the bill, if there have been any further reports made by the War Department in regard to the Brownsville matter. I think we should know that before an agreement to vote is fixed by the

Mr. FORAKER. I do not know of any. Mr. WARREN. So far as the committee is concerned, and the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs knows, there has been nothing received from the War Department since the report which was read here some ten days ago. I do not know whether the Senator from Ohio has anything later or not.

Mr. FORAKER. I have no information as to what is in the War Department. Does the Senator from Florida refer to a report from the detectives who were employed?

Mr. TALIAFERRO. I do not know what report may have been made, but I have heard it rumored that the War Department is in possession of fresh and new information on this subject.

Mr. FORAKER. Is it valuable, like that which was last transmitted to the Senate?

Mr. TALIAFERRO. I am not in the confidence of the department, Mr. President, and I am unable to tell the Senator from Ohio what the report may be. I am unable to say that there is such a report; but as the rumor had reached my ears I thought it proper that I should call the attention of the Senate to the fact before a unanimous-consent agreement to vote upon the bill is made by the Senate.

Mr. WARREN. I wish to say in further answer to the Senator that I have made no inquiry of the War Department. Does the Senator allude to information that was submitted in response to a resolution introduced by the Senator from Ohio? That is in the possession of the Senate, if the Senator refers to that.

Mr. TALIAFERRO. Mr. President, I heard the rumor last night that there was certain information in the possession of the War Department bearing on this subject. Whether that report is true or not I am unable to say, but it would seem to me that coming as it did to me from a source that I thought knew about the matter it would be well for the Senate to inquire into it before agreeing to vote on this measure, so that if there is any important information in the possession of the War Department that might influence Senators in their vote on this question the Senate might know about it before a time is fixed for such a vote.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, I do not know anything about what may be in the possession of the War Department. The Senator remarked that he was not in the confidence of the War Department. I can make the same remark. I am not in the confidence of the War Department either. I do not know what has been done by the detectives or anybody else since they last favored us with their collections from Georgia and other places. If there is anything more of that character, I do not think it makes much difference whether it comes to the Senate or not. I think it would be an insult to the Senate, to speak plainly about it, to send to us anything from that same source again, and I should not hesitate to say that in different and more elaborate language if any such communication should be received. But whether the department have such information or not, and whether there is to be anything more or not, does not affect the merits of this measure. If they were to send anything more, it would only be another reason why there should be an independent tribunal created, as this measure seeks to create one, before which this matter can be heard and be determined once and for all. Therefore I believe that the Senator ought to agree with us as to a day when we can take a vote. Otherwise I shall have to press the bill for consideration.

Mr. TALIAFERRO. I did not rise to obstruct the efforts of the Senator from Ohio to get a vote on this question. This information had reached me last night, and I felt it my duty to call the attention of the Senate to the fact. I presumed that if any report had been filed it would bear on the merits of this case, and I think the Senator from Ohio goes a little further than would seem justified in suggesting that it could not bear on the merits of the case. If it had not seemed to me that it would possibly bear on the merits of the case, I would not have made the suggestion that I did in the first place.

Mr. President, I spoke to the Senator from Ohio just before this question was taken up in the Senate. I suggested to him that if he would allow this matter to go over until to-morrow, to give us the opportunity of inquiring into the correctness or the incorrectness of this report, and if there was any information, any new facts, that we might have an opportunity to bring them before the Senate; or, if they were of the unworthy character that the Senator from Ohio speaks of, that we might dismiss them, I thought that there would be less difficulty in reaching an understanding about the time of taking the vote.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, it is true the Senator from Florida asked me if I would not allow the bill to go over until to-morrow; but he did not tell me the reason why he wanted it to go over. I did not know, until he announced it here in open Senate a moment ago, that there was any such rumor in circulation or that anybody was claiming that any further testimony had been gathered bearing upon the guilt or innocence of these men. But to say that that was any reason why it should be further postponed is but to recall the fact that, even if there should be testimony incriminating somebody or showing who the guilty men were, if there were any guilty men in that battalion, it would be only another reason for creating this tribunal forthwith, so that it might be submitted there and not be submitted here, where we can, under the circumstances, take no action, except some such action as we are now proposing to take. So that I think the suggestion of the Senator, even if it should be followed with an affirmation of the rumor, only amounts to another argument, and, under all the circumstances, a conclusive one, why we should act promptly with respect to the proposed legislation. Therefore I hope the Senator will agree to fixing an early date. I could not agree on a date so late as March 1.

Mr. TALIAFERRO. Just a word more, Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield further to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. FORAKER. Certainly.

Mr. TALIAFERRO. I understand, Mr. President, that the Senator from Ohio is attempting to fix a date in the future to take a vote on this bill.

Mr. FORAKER. I am trying to get unanimous consent to fix a date.

Mr. TALIAFERRO. Trying to fix a day by unanimous consent?

Mr. FORAKER. Yes.
Mr. TALIAFERRO. I do not see any possible harm that could come by his letting this matter go over until to-morrow before asking for unanimous consent. I repeat now that my purpose in rising is not to obstruct him at all, but to verify this report, if it is capable of verification, and to ascertain what there is in the possession of the department that may be new on this subject, if there is anything. I do not know that there is anything; but if there is, perhaps the Senator from Ohio would like to know of it before he undertakes to press his bill.

Mr. FORAKER. I should like to know from whom it comes before I could say whether I should want to hear it or not.

have already heard enough from one source.

Mr. McLAURIN. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. FORAKER. Certainly.

Mr. McLAURIN. I suggest to the Senator from Ohio that the 15th of February is too early a date for the vote. If the 1st of March is not satisfactory, let the Senator name a day later than the 15th, because there are a great many appropriation bills yet to come before the Senate, and there is going to be very little time and opportunity for the discussion of this There are a number of speeches yet to be made on it. and I think it would be better for the Senator to ask for a day later than the 15th of February.

Mr. FORAKER. Will the Senator propose a date? Mr. McLAURIN. Suppose we fix on the 26th of this month.

Mr. HALE. I should like to suggest—the suggestion being called out by the reference of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. McLaurin] to appropriation bills-that I hope no date later than a week, perhaps, from February 15 will be fixed, because the jam of appropriation bills will come later than that rather than earlier. Having in view the appropriation bills, I shall have to object to any day being fixed later than a date perhaps midway between what the Senator from Ohio suggested and that suggested by the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. FORAKER. My colleagues about me here suggest, as a compromise, Saturday, the 20th of February.

Mr. HALE. That would be a safer day.

Mr. McLAURIN. I do not think we can agree upon the 20th. That will not give us time enough.

Mr. HALE. Then, say the 22d. Mr. McLAURIN. The 22d is Washington's birthday.

Mr. KEAN. That would be a good day on which to have the

Mr. FORAKER. Another date has been suggested, which possibly may have some significance under some circumstances, and that is February 23. I will be ready to compromise

Mr. HALE. Let it go at that.

Mr. McLAURIN. Well, if the rest of the Senate will agree to that, I will raise no objection to the 23d.

Mr. FORAKER. Then I ask unanimous consent that we may vote on the bill and all amendments that may be proposed at 3 o'clock on Tuesday, February 23.

Mr. TALIAFERRO. Make it 4 o'clock.

Mr. TALIAFERRO. Make it 4 o'clock.
Mr. HALE. At 4 o'clock on February 23.
Mr. FORAKER. Very well; 4 o'clock.
Mr. McLAURIN. On the bill and all amendments.
Mr. FORAKER. Yes.
Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. FORAKER. Yes.

Mr. CULBERSON. Before the request for unanimous consent is put, I will ask the Senator what facilities or opportunities will be given under the unanimous-consent agreement for debate on the matter?

Mr. FORAKER. All the facilities that the rules of the Senate will allow. One reason why I wanted to get a date fixed was that the appropriation bills are coming on, and every time I rise to present this matter I feel as if I were crowding somebody out who wants to be heard. I hope the Senator will agree

Mr. HALE. Let me suggest to the Senator from Texas that, even with the importance of passing appropriation bills in the last days of a session, nobody has ever been able to prevent a Senator from making a speech upon any subject if he wanted to do so. Any Senator at any time who desires to speak upon this measure will ask for the floor, and will get it; and it will depend upon his discretion, his judgment, and his interest in the public business whether he will occupy the time even to the exclusion of appropriation bills. I do not think the Senator from Texas, or any other Senator upon the other side, need be under any concern; for if the day and hour for a vote are fixed as indicated, any Senator who desires to debate this matter will find, and find easily, the opportunity to do so. So that I hope—and I am thinking not so much about this measure as I am about the appropriation bills—that the Senate can agree to the 23d of February, at 4 o'clock in the afternoon, as the time to take a vote on the bill and all amendments. I want Senators to remember that almost all of the appropriation bills are still due and are not even before the Senate, and after that time the Senate will have to work day and night to pass the appropriation bills, but I shall endeavor to keep them out of the way so that there may be the opportunity to dispose of this vexed question at the time indicated.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Ohio asks unanimous consent that on Tuesday, February 23, 1909, at 4 o'clock p. m., the Senate proceed to vote upon Senate bill 5729 and all amendments pending and to be offered. Is there objection?

Mr. CULBERSON. I suggest that it will probably be well to modify the proposition so that the bill can be taken up, say, at 2 o'clock on that day under the ten-minute rule.

Mr. FORAKER. I will move to take it up immediately after the routine morning business

Mr. HALE. An hour had better be fixed, say 1 o'clock.

Mr. FORAKER. And if no one should want to discuss it, it could be temporarily laid aside. I will move to take it up immediately after the close of the routine morning busi-

Mr. HALE. I would not wait for that. Morning business might run too long. Fix the hour at 1 o'clock. Mr. FORAKER. At 1 o'clock, then.

Mr. CULBERSON obtained the floor.

Mr. BURKETT. Before unanimous consent is given, I should like to make an inquiry.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. CULBERSON. Of course this agreement, as I understand, does not preclude any Senator on either side of the Chamber from speaking on the bill at any time in the interim. Mr. HALE. No.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It puts no limitation upon the Senate prior to the hour named.

Mr. BURKETT. I should like particularly to call the attention of the Senator in charge of the unfinished business to this request. I do not know what would be the effect on the unfinished business if the consent were given.

Mr. FORAKER. At 2 o'clock the Senator in charge of the unfinished business could ask that it be laid aside, I suppose.

Mr. BURKETT. In order to get this important matter out of the way I should not object to the proposed agreement if it would not affect the unfinished business. I should not want to have the unfinished business displaced.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator in charge of the unfinished business can ask that it be temporarily laid aside.

Mr. BURKETT. Unless that be done, the unfinished business might lose its place.

Mr. FORAKER. That may be understood. I hope the request for unanimous consent will now be put.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Ohio asks unanimous consent that on Tuesday, February 23, 1909, at 1 o'clock p. m., the Senate proceed with the consideration of the bill (S. 5729) to correct the records and authorize the reenlistment of certain noncommissioned officers and enlisted men belonging to Companies B, C, and D, of the Twenty-fifth U. S. Infantry, who were discharged without honor under Special Orders, No. 266, War Department, November 9, 1906, and the restoration to them of all rights of which they have been deprived on account thereof, debate to proceed under the ten-minute rule, and that at 4 o'clock on that day a vote be taken upon the bill and amendments that may be pending or that may be offered, not to displace the unfinished business. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and that order is made.

Mr. FORAKER. I now ask that the bill be laid aside.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be laid aside at the request of the Senator from Ohio.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. FRYE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After four hours and twenty-five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 25 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, February 3, 1909, at 12 o'clock m.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. WILSON of Illinois, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly en-rolled bill of the following title, when the Speaker signed the same

H. R. 26062. An act authorizing the creation of a land district in the State of South Dakota, to be known as the Bellefourche land district.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bill of the following title:

S. 8695. An act extending the time for the construction by James A. Moore, or his assigns, of a canal along the government right of way connecting the waters of Puget Sound with Lake Washington.

URGENT DEFICIENCY BILL

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill H. R. 26399. being the urgent deficiency appropriation bill, with Senate amendments, ask that the Senate amendments be disagreed to. and the House ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER. The Chair lays before the House, from the Speaker's table, a House bill, with Senate amendments, and the gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent that the House disagree to the Senate amendments and ask for a conference. The Clerk will report the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

The bill (H. R. 26399) making appropriations to supply urgent defi-ciencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1909, with several Senate amendments.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I understand this is the urgent deficiency bill which contained a provision for $12,000 for the purchase of two automobiles.

Mr. TAWNEY. It contained that provision when it was considered in the House. I understand it has been amended.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. That has been stricken out by the Senate. Now, does the gentleman request the House to disagree to that amendment as well as the others?

Mr. TAWNEY. I ask the House to disagree to that amendment and to all other Senate amendments.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. For myself I desire to concur in that amendment of the Senate, and, like a great many other gentlemen in the House, would like an opportunity to vote to concur in the amendment of the Senate. Mr. Speaker, I do not want the gentleman to give any promise for anybody but him-Can the gentleman say that we will have an opportunity to vote upon that amendment? Because if that amendment remains in when the conference report is presented, we will have to vote it up or down.

Mr. TAWNEY. Well, I can not say, Mr. Speaker, in advance. Of course if I did it would be equivalent to no conference on that particular item. The House having by a very large majority voted in favor of the provision when it was under consideration in the House, as one of the conferees I should be disposed to feel it my duty to insist upon the House provision.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, may I reply to the gentleman? It is true the House did vote for that. I do not know that there was any motion to strike it out, even.

Mr. TAWNEY. Well, if there was no vote, which I do not exactly recall, I was under the impression there was no vote.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. No; there was not. Mr. TAWNEY. I know I was in charge of the bill, and I was interrogated in regard to this provision, and if there was no vote it went in practically by unanimous consent.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. But some of us have learned since, which we did not know at the time, that the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill contained $35,000 for carriages and automobiles.

Mr. TAWNEY. Oh, that statement was made by myself on the floor—$25,000, not $35,000. But that will not be available until the 1st of next July, and will provide only for maintenance of such vehicles as the President may employ or pur-

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. The statement was made somewhere else that it would be a violation of the rules to mention, by a Member of Congress, that the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill did carry $35,000 for carriages and automobiles for the Executive Mansion.

Mr. TAWNEY. My recollection is that the amount is $25,000.

However, it is the same amount that has been appropriated in previous years for that service.

But that appropriation will not be available for the purchase of these automobiles until July, and the current appropriation for that service is not available because the language in which the current appropriation is made does not authorize the purchase of automobiles.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. I merely want to say, because this is the only opportunity, that for one I do not want to agree that the purchase of automobiles is so urgent as to put it in the urgent deficiency bill. I do not want to give unanimous consent, although I know that is the usual way, to agree to disagree to the Senate amendment. I want to support the amendment of the Senate that struck that appropriation from the original deficiency bill.

Mr. TAWNEY. I do not think the gentleman from Georgia is disposed to inconvenience the Chief Executive in the matter of conveyance. As I said, the incoming President proposes to abandon the use of horses for reasons that the gentleman well knows; he does not wish to violate the law against cruelty to

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. I do not desire to inconvenience him. I merely want to repeat that I am not objecting, except, as I say, I am not in favor of agreeing to the amendment, and I hope some time before the bill passes that I and other Members of the House will have an opportunity to express by our votes our position on this proposition.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, what does the gentleman from Minnesota say about that proposition?

Mr. TAWNEY. Nothing but to repeat what I stated before. This provision having been agreed to by the House without objection, as a conferee I should feel that it was my duty to endeavor to carry out the will of the House by inducing the Senate conferees to recede. That is the only way the two Houses can be brought together.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Who put the proposition in the

Mr. TAWNEY. It was put in by the House and struck out by the Senate.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Then I am with the Senate. you put that proposition in the bill, will it not end this way: You will have the usual appropriation for horses and this additional appropriation for automobiles?

Mr. TAWNEY. No. I will state to the gentleman from Missouri that the reason for this special appropriation is due to the fact that the appropriation made for horses and vehicles for the current year is so worded as to make it impossible to purchase automobiles out of it. Now, the appropriation for the fiscal year 1910 carried in the legislative bill for this purpose is worded so that it will enable them to purchase and maintain automobiles after July 1; but there is no authority-there is money enough-for the purchase of automobiles out of the current appropriation.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Is there an appropriation already made to buy automobiles after the 1st of July?

Mr. TAWNEY. The bill has not become a law yet. It is in the legislative bill and has been agreed to by the two Houses. It is in conference.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. That has gone, then?

Mr. TAWNEY. Yes.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I remember that when the defi-ciency bill was brought in I got the impression from the gentleman from Minnesota that it was an unusually small deficiency

Mr. TAWNEY. The smallest that has been presented to Congress for many years.

Mr. SIMS. Was this item a deficiency?

Mr. TAWNEY. This was not a deficiency, and I so stated at the time.

Some of us on this side had the idea that there was nothing in it but deficiencies. Otherwise there would have been a point of order made to that item. I think in all fairness, as the gentleman brought in the deficiency bill, we had a right to rely on him that there was nothing in it but deficiencies, and that was why a unanimous vote of the House was had-there was nothing wrong about it, of course-but I do think the House ought to have an opportunity to vote to concur in the Senate amendment.

Mr. TAWNEY. I will state to the gentleman from Tennessee that this particular item was discussed at some length, and was about the only item that was discussed.

Mr. SIMS. But there was no point of order made, and it was not made because it was supposed to be a deficiency item and not subject to a point of order.

Mr. TAWNEY. The discussion shows conclusively that the gentleman from Tennessee, or his side of the House, was not misled by any statement anybody made.

Mr. SIMS. Not at all; but the bill was read practically before the discussion took place, and no point of order was made.

Mr. TAWNEY. The discussion of this provision took place after the reading of the item.

Mr. SIMS. And too late to make a point of order. The point of order would have been made had it been known it was not a deficiency item.

Mr. MANN. Is not the question that is in the legislative bill in relation to salaries, the salary of the President, involved in this proposition; and if the House agrees to the item for automobiles, is not that a step in the direction of not agreeing to the exorbitant increase of salary

Mr. TAWNEY. I do not know that I can answer that one way or the other. I will leave that to the gentleman from Illinois to answer.

Mr. MANN. I think everybody understands that it will have that effect.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that gentlemen on the other side, either because of being asleep or for some other cause, did not know, or now pretend they did not know, that this provision carried in the urgent deficiency bill was not in the deficiency bill, although it was discussed, I ask unanimous consent that this amendment be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole and acted upon at this time.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that there are other amendments.

Mr. TAWNEY. There are other amendments.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman ask that the House disagree to the Senate amendments other than this one?

Mr. TAWNEY. That is my request now.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman requests that the House disagree to the other Senate amendments than the one designated and that the amendment designated be considered in the House at this time as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I would suggest that it is not necessary for either of these amendments to be considered in Committee of the Whole at all. This is a House provision disagreed to in the Senate. We do not have to go into Committee of the Whole to consider this Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER. Has the Senate put other items on the bill? Mr. MANN. The other Senate amendment was simply an item relative to an amount, on a subject that had already been considered.

The SPEAKER. Is there a substantive Senate amendment proposing a new appropriation?

Mr. TAWNEY. My understanding is that there is. Mr. KEIFER. But the amendment relating to automobiles was not a substantive Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is of the opinion that this particular amendment does not require to be considered in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, but an item on page 2, for oil, cotton waste, and so forth, seems to be a new item, and also the amendment providing for printing and binding for the Court of Claims.

Mr. TAWNEY. There is an amendment in regard to night schools, making an appropriation, which is an entirely new item, appropriating the money for defraying the expense.

The SPEAKER. Now, the Chair understands that the gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent-

Mr. TAWNEY. To disagree to all the Senate amendments except the one indicated, which relates to the automobiles for the President-elect.

The SPEAKER. Yes; all except Senate amendment numbered 5, which is the automobile amendment.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Is it proper at this juncture to move to concur in the Senate amendment as to automobiles? Mr. MANN. That will come later.

The SPEAKER. It will be, as soon as we dispose of the other amendments. Is there objection?

There was no objection.
The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report amendment numbered 5.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 5, strike out lines 20, 21, and 22, the lines proposed to be stricken out being as follows:

"EXECUTIVE OFFICE.

"For purchase, care, and maintenance of automobiles for use of the President, $12,000."

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, I move to disagree to the Senate amendment numbered 5 and ask for a conference.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House concur in Senate amendment numbered 5, the automobile amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri moves that the House do concur. That would bring the House and the Senate together, if the gentleman's amendment prevails.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. That motion undoubtedly has precedence over the other.

The SPEAKER. It is the better form at least, and if that motion is voted down, that would be equivalent to disagreeing. It would dispose of the matter. So the question is on the motion of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] that the House do concur in Senate amendment numbered 5. The gentleman from Minnesota is recognized.

Mr. TAWNEY. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Clark].

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. May we have the amendment read first?

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the amendment will be again reported.

The amendment was again read. Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Now, Mr. Speaker, I suppose I have the floor in my own right.

The SPEAKER. No. While the gentleman's motion is the preferential one, yet the time in control of the bill remains with the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I have no sort of objection to the President of the United States having an automobile if he wants it, but what I do object to is to make the usual appropriation for horses and then make the extraordinary appropriation for automobiles. I do not know that the next President of the United States would prefer an automobile to a horse, but I have observed this-and so has any other man who has been here any considerable length of time-that if you ever make an appropriation for a thing once the tendency is to keep on making that appropriation, so far as I know, until the end of the world; if you create an office here temporarily, everybody agreeing that it is to be temporary, when that temporary period expires there are a lot of people clamoring to make it permanent.

If the President-elect can not use horses, then we ought to cut off the appropriation for horses and give him automobiles. If that is his preference, I am willing to do it. But I do object to this doubling up. I understand those stables down there now cost something like $35,000 a year. It is an extraordinary sum to spend in that kind of a performance. I do not know exactly what the reason for this automobile appropriation is. It was intimated by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations that if we did not pass it, it would be inflicting cruelty, as I understood him, on animals. [Laughter.] That may mean that the incoming President is of such ample proportions that it is dangerous to any horse he would ride. If that is true, he does not need as big an appropriation for horses as the celebrated equestrian who occupies the White House now. There is no possible danger, as I take it, of President Taft ever riding 98 miles in a day or two days or three or four or five days or a week; but the objection and the only objection I have to it is that it doubles up this appropriation, and if you ever do it once, you have got to go on doing it forever.

Mr. TAWNEY. If the gentleman will permit me, I wish to correct him. It does not double the appropriation.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. It adds to it.

Mr. TAWNEY. No; it adds to it in this way: The current appropriation for horses, stable, attendance, care, and feed will not be expended for that purpose from the 4th of March until the 1st of July, owing to the fact that the President will be using automobiles, and that there will be a surplus at the end of the fiscal year in the appropriations for this current year, to be turned back into the Treasury, because of the appropriation made here for the purchase and maintenance of automobiles. Thereafter the appropriation for this purpose will be the same as it always has been in the past. I think it will be less. I have no doubt in the world that you can maintain all the automobiles needed by the President of the United States for a great deal less than it has cost the Government to maintain the executive stable.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I will tell the gentleman what I will do with him. If he, as chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, will state to this House that the amount saved on the appropriation for horses, feed, and so forth, this current year will equal this appropriation for automobiles, as far as I am concerned I withdraw all opposition to it. That is a fair proposition.

Mr. TAWNEY. I submit that it is hardly a fair proposition inasmuch as I am not to administer the appropriation or the expenditure of the money under it, but I do say that if I were administering or expending the money under this appropriation that, in view of the appropriation of $12,000 for the purchase and maintenance of automobiles during the remainder of this fiscal year, all of that amount, or so much of it as was possible, would be turned back into the Treasury, and I believe that that will be the case in this appropriation administered by the men who will be authorized to administer it.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The keepers of these stables down here are going to keep these automobiles, I suppose?

Mr. TAWNEY. I suppose not. I do not suppose they can. A hostler and a chauffeur are two different persons altogether. Mr. CLARK of Missouri. They are very much the same thing when you come to the end of it. Do not they have to keep these What are they going to do with horses over there anyway?

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I would like to have another minute

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAWNEY. I yield to the gentleman five minutes more.

For the information of the gentleman I want to read the language under which the current appropriation is made, for the purpose of showing that there is no authority for the purchase and maintenance of automobiles out of this appropriation. The appropriation, as I said before, is $25,000 instead of $35,000, as was stated by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Bartlett]:

For contingent expenses of the executive office, including stationery therefor, as well as record books, telegrams, telephones, books for library, furniture and carpets for offices, horses, harness, expenses of stables, including labor and miscellaneous items, to be expended in the discretion of the President, $25,000.

Now, the horses, harness, expense of stable, including labor of course from the 4th of March, if the use of horses is abandoned, as I am informed by the present secretary to the President-elect, the use of horses will be abandoned that appropriation, or so much of the money as has heretofore been expended for that service, will not be expended after the 4th of March or after the horses are disposed of, as I understand the purpose to be.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Who owns the horses? Mr. TAWNEY. The Government of the United States.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. What are they going to do with them if we give this appropriation?

Mr. TAWNEY. Sell them, I suppose. They have been purchased for the use of the Executive.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Will they not have to build a garage if we allow this appropriation?

Mr. TAWNEY. I do not know whether they will be paid for or not. They may very easily convert the President's stable into a garage. Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Minnesota yield for a question? Is this the only appropriation out of which horses for the White House have been purchased?

Mr. TAWNEY. It is the only appropriation from which horses could be purchased under the law.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, no. Mr. TAWNEY. I do not know whether horses have been purchased out of other appropriations or not.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Well, has the gentleman from Minnesota any information that horses for the White House stables have been purchased out of appropriations made for the support of the army

Mr. TAWNEY. I have no information that would justify me in making a statement upon the floor of the House that that is the fact. I would ask the gentleman from New York if he has such information? [Laughter.]

Mr. FITZGERALD. Well, if the gentleman will yield me a little time I will explain why I supported this particular amend-

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I did not object to the appropriation of $12,000 for the purchase and maintenance of automobiles for the President during the period of four months from March 4, 1909, to July 1, 1909, because I did not believe it was adding additional expense to the Government in the cost of maintaining the White House. For the current year $25,000 was appropriated for the purposes specified by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. Tawner]. For the next fiscal year, 1910, the item in the legislative bill for the same purposes is $25,000. In the legislative bill for the next year the word "automobiles" is included where it has not hitherto been in the law. Some gentlemen may think it strange that with $25,000 for the current year and this additional appropriation of $12,000 for automobiles for four months, an addition to the appropriation of $25,000 for the next ensuing fiscal year would not be neces-I was of the opinion at first that an additional sum would be required. From some more or less distinct or obscure source I have received either the information or the intimation that the horses for the White House are not purchased entirely, if at all, out of the appropriation in the legislative bill. The President is the Commander in Chief of the army, and as such he is entitled to mounts of horses and an appropriation of a very large amount is available in the bill for the support of the army for the purchase of horses. I do not know whether the mounts of the President, purchased out of the army fund, have amounted to $12,000 in four months, $12,000 in twelve months, or $12,000 in the seven years in which he has been in office, but I have no doubt that if it had been necessary it would have amounted to that much. I say this not intending any reflection upon the present Chief Executive. If he needed those horses either for his official duties or to keep himself in that vigorous condition so essential to the proper discharge of the duties of the Chief Executive, I would say that he certainly was justified in purchasing the horses.

Perhaps it may be that such horses are not purchased at all for the White House. It may be that when the President, for instance, desires in one day to ride 98 miles and use three relays of horses, instead of using the horses purchased for the White House, or his own personal mounts, that as Commander in Chief of the Army he directs the Quartermaster-General to have suitable mounts for the President stationed at various places and available at certain times, to enable him, "To ride places and available at certain times, to enable him, "To ride and spread the alarm through every Middlesex village and farm" wherever they may be located. [Applause and laughter.] Mr. Speaker, the money expended for the White House and for the support of the President is so obscured in the mysteries of many appropriation bills that I doubt if any man in Congress is able to state the exact sum which is used for the support of the President. Believing this, believing that it would conduce to the comfort, happiness and well-being of the Chief Executive of the United States, and especially if it would make him of a more peaceful and complacent disposition after the 4th of March than he has been prior to the 4th of March, I believe that $12,000 could be well expended, not in four months, but every month in the year. [Applause.] I submit this explanation of my position on this appropriation, and as the reasons why I did support it, and why I feel inclined to support it now, in justice to those Members on this side of the House who have the right to know my reasons for acting on various matters considered by the Committee on Appropria-

Unfortunately I was compelled to be absent from the city when this item was under consideration by the House or I should have stated just as frankly as I do now the reasons that induced me to believe that this would be a wise expenditure. And if it would prevent the inclination, if there has been any, or the action, if there has been any, of encroaching on other funds for the purpose of obtaining services or necessaries for the White House, I believe it to be desirable. I am prepared to vote for any reasonable sums for the support and comfort of the President, but I believe that the Congress and the country are entitled to know how much is expended for the necessary purposes, and just what appropriations are drawn upon for the various services at the White House. [Applause.]

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Keifer].

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Speaker, the item in the House appropriation bill for the purchase, care, and maintenance of automobiles for the President is a very proper one. The chairman of the Committee on Appropriations said a few moments ago that it was not in its nature an urgent deficiency. In some sense that is true, but in a broad sense it is not exactly true. This is in the nature of an anticipatory appropriation, and if made now will prevent the expenditure of money after the beginning of the next fiscal year for automobiles, a thing we have already authorized in the legislative appropriation bill which we passed this session. The legislative appropriation bill, which I now understand to be a law, under the head of "contingent expenses of the executive offices," includes stationery therefor, as well as record books, telegrams, telephones, books for library, furniture and carpets for offices, horses, carriages, harness, automobiles, expenses of stable, including labor and miscellane-ous items, to be expended in the discretion of the President, $25,000.

Now, if this appropriation goes in this urgent deficiency bill, we will have purchased the automobiles we have already authorized to be purchased, and will not need to expend any of that $25,000 in the next fiscal year appropriated to buy automobiles. So in that sense it may be called "urgent deficiency."

Now, it is not worth while, Mr. Speaker, to here discuss the question as to whether the next President of the United States is in favor of automobiles at his stables rather than horses and carriages, for we all know the automobile has come to stay. And I agree with the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Clark] that if we appropriate in this bill, as we have already appropriated in the legislative appropriation bill, for automobiles, we will keep appropriating for them for the Presidents through all time. I do not think that there is any economy in refusing the appropriation now, as we simply give in advance of the next fiscal year automobiles to the President of the United States and prepare for the next fiscal year, and we will therefore curtail the expense, so much desired by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK], and do it a little in advance.

Somebody has said that the next President of the United States does not believe in horses and carriages. He is a horseman. He is able to ride a horse, I think, as well as some of the rest of us on this floor; and I do not know whether he would take a hundred-mile test ride or not, but he would be likely to try to do it if anybody bantered him.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield half a minute to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Clark].

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, in view of the numerous explanations that have been made on the other side and the luminous explanation made by my friend from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD], I withdraw the motion to concur in the Senate amendment.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I would like to renew it.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Sims].

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, it is not with myself a matter of chinquapin economy or anything of that sort. I have no objection to Mr. Taft riding in an automobile, if he is willing to take the risk, while he is a private citizen, but when he becomes the President of the United States the whole country has got an interest in him, and we all know that the automobile is a dangerous method of travel, not only to the people who occupy it, but to everybody along the line of travel. They are a firstclass, all-around, genuine nuisance in a thickly settled city, and rather ought to be prohibited by Congress than encouraged. I am opposed to Congress ever going on record as favoring the automobile as a means of travel in a crowded city, and especially in the capital of the United States, that we hold up as a model to all the other cities of the United States.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman think the President ought to be required to use Tennessee mules?

Mr. SIMS. I do not ask the President, nor would I require him, to use Tennessee mules, nor do I propose to prohibit him from using them.

Mr. MANN. He might do worse. Mr. SIMS. I propose to prevent a congressional mandate requiring him to use automobiles. We know that the executive departments, as a rule, wherever we authorize an expenditure for a certain purpose and leave it to their discretion, that they consider it mandatory to so use the appropriation. Now, there is this appropriation made of $12,000 for automobiles from the 4th of March to the 1st of July, and he will feel that it is mandatory upon him to use an automobile when he rides from the White House, and thus it becomes of interest to all I want to protect him from the implied command of the legislative body to adopt a dangerous method of traveling, not only to himself, but to the people among whom he would travel. This automobile nuisance is simply getting more intolerable every day. When a street car stops to take on or let off passengers, an automobile is right there and dashes by without waiting for passengers to get out of the way, and a man can not get on or off a street car in our city without taking a very great chance of being struck by or run over by an automobile. I know of a man not much less in body than the Presidentelect who while getting off a street car came near being run over by an automobile, and I happened to be the gentleman. [Laughter.] I have, therefore, a personal interest in this matter. I do not want by congressional action to say to all the automobile fanatics in this country that we hereby encourage you to go on with your reckless disregard of comfort and human life. Let us act boldly and vote down this item and not intimate that we are trying to put the responsibility off on Mr. Taft. He is a large man physically as well as mentally; he is equal in his physical powers to his size, and he rides horses gracefully and safely; I have seen him ride them; he is not afraid of them; but he can get into a carriage if he wants to; and if he can not, we will build a platform and take him in on that.

Mr. MANN. We got a big enough platform for him last summer.

Mr. SIMS. But you are trying to get him off by putting him on a platform that may destroy him.

Mr. MANN. You tried to last summer, but never could get him off. [Laughter.]

Mr. SIMS. You are trying to help us destroy the man as well as the platform. Now, we have got too much interest in the next President to require him to use a machine that will endanger his life or some of the people who have elected him to be their President.

Mr. OLMSTED. I would like to ask the gentleman from Tennessee, a pretty well-developed man, if he does not think that he would be safer riding up Pennsylvania avenue in an automobile of his own than he would be on horseback among automobiles of other people? [Laughter.]

Mr. SIMS. I think he would, especially if the other people who use them are of the Washington school.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.
Mr. TAWNEY. I move the previous question.
Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I want to ask the gentleman a question or two. I want to know if the gentleman declines or not to give me a piece of information that I am trying to get at?

Mr. TAWNEY. I beg your pardon. I wanted to close debate. I will give the gentleman any information I have.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I want to know, do you propose, if you get automobiles, to keep these 12 horses at the expense of the public?

Mr. TAWNEY. Well, I have answered that question so often.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. There was so much confusion in the Chamber I did not hear the gentleman.

Mr. TAWNEY. There always is when the gentleman takes the floor.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I would like to know what is going to be done with those 12 horses.

Mr. TAWNEY. The Committee on Appropriations was informed before this provision was recommended that the incoming President does not propose to use horses for his personal use.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Will they use those horses nevertheless'

Mr. TAWNEY. We do not provide for the horses in this provision for the remainder of this fiscal year. They have been provided for in the current appropriation bill, adopted last year. Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. And we are to give him automobiles in lieu of the horses? Mr. TAWNEY. We give him the automobiles in lieu of the horses. Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. This is in lieu of the horses. Is that the programme?

Mr. TAWNEY. That is the programme.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. And that is what you propose to make law?

Mr. TAWNEY. Yes, sir.

Mr. EDWARDS of Georgia. How many automobiles do you propose to buy

Mr. TAWNEY. I am unable to answer that question.

Mr. EDWARDS of Georgia. To whom is it to be left to buy

Mr. TAWNEY. They will be bought under the direction of the President. I withhold the motion for the previous question, and yield one minute to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. KÜSTERMANNI.

Mr. KÜSTERMANN. Mr. Speaker, I consider this appropriation which is asked for automobiles a very reasonable one if it includes the furnishing of gasoline at the present price. [Laughter.] If petroleum and gasoline are placed on the free list, as they should be, we can then reduce the appropriation for the automobiles a few thousand dollars. [Great applause.]

Mr. TAWNEY. Now, Mr. Speaker, I demand the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Sims] to concur in the Senate amendment.

Mr. TAWNEY. I hope that will be voted down.

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. SIMS) there were-ayes 27, noes 185.

Accordingly the amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. TAWNEY. Now, Mr. Speaker, I ask for a conference. The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, a conference will

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for further consideration of the bill making appropriations for the army (H. R. 26915).

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the army appropriation bill, with Mr. Perkins in the chair.

Mr. PARKER. May I be indulged in stating to the Chair certain facts that I learned about these automatic machine guns since last night? I find that this appropriation is not at all intended for automatic machine guns to go upon a carriage or a support or tripod, or for any fixed position, but for automatic guns of another kind that are entirely portable. This gun is practically a larger rifle. Instead of being carried on a tripod, it is carried on the shoulder when the soldier goes into action, although it is carried on a mule on long marches. It weighs 22 pounds, instead of 160 or 180 pounds, as the other machine guns do. It is fired from the shoulder. Of course, being longer, so that it can not be held up by the arms, it is sighted over a sand bag or an intrenchment, or on level ground. It is supported on two short prongs that ordinarily lie along the barrel, but can be extended and make a crotch on which the gun rests, while the soldier lies down or sits and fires the gun with the butt against his shoulder. It is simply a larger rifle, and is so used.

I have here photographs showing tests of this rifle, which I send to the Clerk's desk. One shows the mule carrying the rifle and ammunition. A second shows the soldier hurrying forward with a rifle upon his shoulder, carrying a can of ammunition in his left hand, and another man following with more ammunition. A third shows the soldier lying down and sighting his gun over the crotch, right on the open plain. The fourth shows the soldier sitting up, the crotch being high enough to enable him to fire from that position. The fifth shows the soldier lying down, resting the gun upon a sand bag.

Now, there has been no deception and no endeavor to get the best of this House in the estimates that were sent here. This is a portable rifle that can be carried upon the shoulder, and can be made to deliver hundreds of shots in a minute, because it loads itself automatically by the force of the discharge.

In view of these facts, it is beyond all question an ordinary portable instrument of warfare, to be used by infantry and cavalry, and is properly within the jurisdiction of the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. DAWSON. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. PARKER. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. DAWSON. Does this automatic gun have wheels on it? Mr. PARKER. None at all, and no tripod; and it is going to be made at Springfield, where the regular rifles are made.

The CHAIRMAN. There has been an interesting discussion in reference to the gun that it is desired to appropriate for. The Chair thinks, however, that the question which has been discussed is hardly before the Chair at present. The Chair can only consider the wording of the bill. For many years an appro-priation has been carried in the fortification bill in the precise wording of the paragraph to which the point of order is now made "for the purchase, manufacture, and test of machine and automatic guns, and so forth." The only change was that that provision also included the manufacture. Whatever may be the question of jurisdiction that might arise in reference to the gun, to the kind of machine gun that has been discussed in com-mittee, it seems plain to the Chair that the provision in the shape in which it now is would cover any sort of a machine gun, a Gatling gun, or any class of gun which has been appropriated for by the Appropriations Committee, and therefore the Chair must sustain the point of order.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, to come in after line 19, page 45, of the bill:

Insert after line 19, page 45, the following: "Automatic rifles: For the purchase, manufacture, and test of automatic rifles, including their sights and equipment, $200,000."

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I desire to make a point of order against this amendment. It is manifestly an attempt, as I think, on the part of my friend to avoid, at least, the last ruling.

Mr. HULL of Iowa, Mr. Chairman, it is, without doubt, a manifest attempt to equip the cavalry and infantry with a gun that has never been made or used in the army before. The gentleman from Iowa's committee has never reported in favor of such a gun. This is really a new gun they are proposing to introduce in the cavalry and infantry. It is really a large rifle. It fills the chamber by its own discharge, the same as the little rifle does, only it is of larger caliber.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Has there been any recent change in the type of this automatic gun?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. My understanding is that this improvement has only been made very recently.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I submit to the gentleman that this is identically the same gun for which the appropriation has been made in the fortification bill, without any change whatever.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. The gentleman from New Jersey is fully informed in regard to that. I think the gentleman from Iowa is mistaken.

Mr. PARKER. I want to say that I saw the Chief of Ordnance to-day and yesterday evening. He tells me that the Maxim gun weighs 160 pounds, and is carried sometimes on a carriage and sometimes on a tripod. What he proposes now is a rifle that weighs 22 pounds, that can be carried on the shoulder, and is fired with the butt resting against the shoulder. When it is being used the end, or muzzle, is supported by a rest, and it is proposed to manufacture them at the Springfield Armory, as I have already explained.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I can not challenge the statement of the gentleman from New Jersey, but General Crozier went before the Committee on Fortifications and stated that he had himself decided to transfer this appropriation for automatic and machine guns to the army bill, and made no suggestion that there was the slightest change in this gun from that gun which has for years been provided for under appropriations in the fortification bill.

Mr. PARKER. This new amendment will allow it to be done, at any rate.

General Crozier intends to give the infantry and the cavalry, not a gun of the old style, but a rifle that can be carried on a mule, because it weighs too much for a long march, but when they go into battle it can be fired from the shoulder.

We have limited the appropriation so as to cover his inten-The Committee on Military Affairs urges the House to furnish a weapon which was used by Japan in the Russo-Japanese war, which is in the Danish army and in constant use, and which ought to be in our army in order to enable us in case of necessity to pour in shots at the rate of two or three hundred a minute right from one rifle. That is all I ask for.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I want to call the attention of the Chair to the fact that this is the first time the request has ever been submitted to Congress for the arming of the cavalry and infantry with this improved arm. The evidence before us in the beginning was that it was substantially a large rifle. The committee probably made a mistake, certainly so in view of the decision of the Chair, in adopting the old language, but now the language of the amendment specifically limits this improved arm to a rifle type of a gun-that is to say, a large rifle. The old guns weighed, as has been said, 160 pounds. With their equipments it required a pack train to carry them, With these, one animal carries to the scene of action two or more of them, and then they are unloaded and carried by men to the place of action. It is understood that it is for the use only of cavalry and infantry, and I want to call the attention of the Chair to his language just a few moments ago in making his statement, that he was bound by the language of the appropriation and could not go beyond it. We have fixed the lan-guage of the appropriation so that it covers only what is for the mobile army-cavalry and infantry. It is not intended to trench upon the Maxim guns or other guns they have been carrying. It is for new arms of the service, and I am informed by the gentleman from New Jersey an arrangement is being made whereby in a short time these will be manufactured at the small-arms factory, so that it is entirely within the juris-diction of the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, two or three years ago a provision was inserted in one of the appropriation bills prohibiting the reporting of a bill in any different form by a committee having the authority to appropriate money than had existed up to that time. These particular guns, or guns of this char-

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman mean to say that an act of Congress provided the form in which a committee should report a bill to the House?

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is my recollection. It was done after the Committee on Indian Affairs had completely recast its bill. My recollection is that a provision in one of the appropria-tion bills requires the committees to report bills in the form in which they had been the preceding year.

Mr. MANN. Certainly no such bill would be of any value if it were passed, or any such law, because Congress can not determine the rules of the House. The Constitution provides that the House shall make its own rules.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman says we could not adopt rules of the House in that way, but we have by law provided for the manner in which the rooms shall be disposed of in the new Office Building, and they are purely within the control of

Mr. MANN. We put them by law under the control of the House, and without the law they would not be under the control of the House. An office building is a public building, and under the law that we passed we make it under the control of the House. Without that it would not be under the control of the House.

Mr. FITZGERALD. At all events, if my recollection be correct on this, the committee would not be permitted to report a provision which heretofore had been reported by another committee. That being so, it seems to me the committee has no power to offer as an amendment a provision that it could not have reported. I have sent for the act which I have in mind and hope to have it within a few moments.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would suggest to the gentleman that this is not offered as an amendment to a provision. It is offered as a new provision. The provision was stricken out on a point of order, and now the gentleman from Iowa offers a new provision, which is the one we are considering

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is true. My contention is that the committee would not have the power to have reported this particular provision in its bill. Therefore it is not permissible to offer it on the floor as an amendment. It is a matter that belongs to another committee. This committee can not in this way, not having jurisdiction, avoid the point of order simply by offering it at this time instead of reporting it from their

Mr. MANN. Of course if they could not offer it from the committee, they could not make it in order in the House.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I mean report it from the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I would like to read the testimony of General Crozier taken before the Fortifications Committee, in order that it may be understood distinctly what is shown in this matter, and with that I am done:

is shown in this matter, and with that I am done:

General Crozier. I call your attention to the fact that there is omitted this year the estimate for machine and automatic guns, which has usually come first in the bill.

Mr. Smith. It was recommended to be dropped out, and I supposed that was your own recommendation.

General Crozier. Yes, sir; I submitted that estimate with reference to the army bill instead of with reference to this bill. We have gotten all of those guns and a good many more than necessary for the coast fortifications, and all of those which we expect to get hereafter will be for the use of the mobile army. They are very closely allied to the musket in the character of their fire. They use the musket ammunition and deliver what might be considered a concentrated infantry fire, and in accordance with the tactical organization which is in existence now and in accordance with the scheme which is in contemplation this will form a part of the infantry and cavalry troops. They will be handled by subordinate organizations, which will be component parts of regiments of infantry and cavalry. For these reasons I shifted the estimate over to the army bill; but I wanted to call your attention to it and to tell you about it. The army bill has not yet been reported.

Mr. SMITH. There are no machine guns used by the army except those carrying the regulation infantry cartridge?
General Crozier. Those are the only ones.

In other words, it is no new thing that these guns fire in-

In other words, it is no new thing that these guns fire infantry ammunition. All the guns that in recent years have been bought under the fortifications bill have been rapid-fire guns discharging infantry ammunition, so that it is not claimed by General Crozier that he has transferred these estimates, and thus changed the rules of the House, because they could not have a machine or automatic gun firing infantry ammuni-tion, because that was the kind of gun they were always using, but he says that he has transferred them because the army is supplied with a sufficient number for the defense of the seacoast fortifications. Now, it makes little difference to me what happens to this item, but if the House is to adopt a policy that even as high-minded an officer as General Crozier can, by simply transferring the estimates from one committee of the House to the other, change the rules of the House, it seems to me we ought to know that we are recognizing that authority. guns we have here are rapid-fire rifles and are no different in that respect from other modern automatic and machine guns that have been used for years. I simply wanted the Chair to understand this situation, and with his ruling I will be content.

Mr. PRINCE. Mr. Chairman, just a word or two on the point of order. It is without question that the Committee on Appropriations are contending rightly so far as the machine gun weighing 160 pounds or thereabouts is concerned, and with-out question the Chairman has properly ruled on the point of order so far as the language that has been stricken out is concerned. But here is a new section, a new section with reference to a gun that weighs 22 pounds that is not part of the fortifications, that is not made stationary as the guns heretofore appropriated for and of a like character that must now be appropriated for by the Committee on Fortifications. tionary gun belongs to them. This is a gun that is a rifle that weighs 22 pounds, that is shot like any other rifle by the infantryman or cavalryman, that goes with him as a part of the mobile army. It is one of the kind of guns that is used by a modern army, and clearly it seems to me it falls within the purview, so far as appropriation is concerned, of the Military Committee, which has to deal with the army and its equipment and prepare for it or make appropriations for the necessary arms for a mobile army. I think the chairman of the committee has put it fairly to the House and is not seeking by indirection to do that which by direction we are not entitled to do as the Military Committee of the House. Now, as to the other question that an officer of the Government by a change of language can change the rules of this House, it seems to me that is not worthy the consideration of the House. He is not seeking to do it. He is telling us here is a particular kind of gun, and it is clear that one kind of gun belongs to the Committee on Appropriations, for it is stationary; the other kind of gun belongs to a mobile army, and the mobile army receives its appropriations from the Committee on Military Affairs, and, therefore, it seems to me, the new provision is in order.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I have the act to which I referred, if the Chair wishes to hear it. It is the legislative act approved June 22, 1906, and it provides, among other things, Committees in Congress in reporting general appropriation bills shall, as far as may be practicable, follow the general order and arrangement of the respective appropriation acts for the year preceding.

My contention is that automatic machine guns have been carried on the fortification bills for a number of years. The provision in this bill was also a provision in the current fortifications bill, which provides for the purchase, manufacture, and tests of machine and automatic guns, including their carriages, sights, and implements, but it could also, Mr. Chairman, provide for the purchase and manufacture of the guns without including their other equipment. The mere fact that this pend-ing provision eliminates some of the equipment that is necessary does not change either the character of the gun or the jurisdiction of the committee. My contention is, under this provision of the legislative act the Committee on Military Affairs could not have jurisdiction to report a provision which heretofore has been carried in another bill, and if they do not have the authority to report such a provision, such an amendment would not be in order if offered upon the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule.

It does not seem to the Chair that the provisions of the bill which have been referred to by the gentleman from New York [Mr. Fitzgerald] control the question that is now before us. A new provision is offered, a provision in form which was not contained in any other prior bill, and it seems to the Chair that the question of jurisdiction is fairly presented. The gentle-man from Iowa is doubtless right in saying that no officer of the Government, by changing the committee to which he made his application, could change the rules of the House. But to which committee, under the rules of the House, does jurisdiction of this particular item belong? It has been long held that the jurisdiction of field guns belongs to the Committee on Appropriations, and not to the Committee on Military Affairs. might be said there was a certain incongruity in that, because the result is that a regiment of infantry, for instance, is equipped with rifles that have been purchased under the jurisdiction of the Committee on Military Affairs, and a hundred yards from them, in case of battle, would be a company of cavalry whose weapons of warfare had been purchased under the jurisdiction of the Committee on Appropriations.

But that is neither here nor there. We have now a further question presented, in reference to the automatic rifle, that has een described before the committee, and the question is, Is that a weapon the jurisdiction of which naturally and properly belongs to the committee that has charge of the army or to the committee that has charge of fortifications? We all know that the ordinary rifle carried by an infantryman is equipped with balls of a certain character. He carries it upon his shoulder. The guns for which appropriation is now sought to be made are to be used by the same men, by the infantry and cavalry, whose arms are provided by the Committee on Military Affairs. are to be used, and used exclusively, by the mobile army.

It would certainly seem a somewhat incongruous result if the gun that the man was carrying on his shoulder was under the jurisdiction of one committee and the gun that was carried with his company, to be used at the same time by the same men, was under the jurisdiction of another committee-a committee having charge of a fortification that might be situated 500 miles from the field of battle. Indeed, the only substantial difference between these different classes of rifles seems to be that the one can be carried by a man and the other is carried by a mule, at least on the march, though not necessarily in the battle. And it does not seem to the Chair that the fact that a weapon is carried by a mule, or by a jackass for that matter, gives exclusive jurisdiction to the Committee on Appropriations. The Chair therefore overrules the point of order.

The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL].

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to. The Clerk read as follows:

Sales of ordnance stores are authorized to civilian employees of the army under such regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order against that provision.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I would like to ask the gentleman what stores of the army the Red Cross would desire to purchase?

Mr. MANN. First, Mr. Chairman, I ask to have a letter read which was received from Miss Boardman, who is an active official of the American National Red Cross.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

NATIONAL HEADQUARTERS, Washington, D. C., January 21, 1909.

Hon. JAMES R. MANN,

House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. MANN: We have received letters from our Illinois Red Cross Branch, who are organizing a Red Cross First Aid Column, and who have been desirous of procuring certain "first-aid pouches," made at the Rock Island Arsenai, at the price of 14 cents each, which are used in the Regu-Island Arsenal, at the price of 14 cents each, which are used lar Army.

It is impossible for the Red Cross to purchase any of such military stores without the consent of Congress. I understand that the sale of such military stores is permitted to the National Guard, and as the American Red Cross has also an official standing under the charter granted by Congress, and one of the purposes for which it is created is, as stated, to act in matters of voluntary relief between the people of the United States and the army and navy, it would seem right and proper that such legislation should be passed as would enable it to purchase the military stores necessary for the carrying out of the duties for which it was created.

I have asked the chief of ordnance in regard to this matter, and he tells me that, as far as his department is concerned, such an act would be approved.

I understand that the army appropriation bill is now before the House, and, therefore, such suggested legislation as may be necessary would have to be offered from the floor as an amendment.

With many kind remembrances,

Yours, sincerely,

MABEL T. BOARDMAN.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I understand that the only thing the Ordnance Department has which these people desire is the packet in which the first-aid pouches are carried. As a matter of fact, those are manufactured at the arsenals, and they desire an opportunity to purchase those for proper use.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I have no objection to the amendment.

My understanding was from some letters that they sent me re-cently that they desired the "first aid to the wounded." This, of course, is not that. That is under the Medical Department.

Mr. MANN. I understand.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. This is simply, I understand, the pouch in which the "first aid to the wounded" is wrapped up.

Mr. MANN. As I understand it, that is the case.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

Mr. DRISCOLL. Before that is voted on, I would like to ask the Chairman what kind of stores may be sold to civilian employees under this paragraph?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. They can sell revolvers and rifles, any ordnance stores, under it. They can sell them to teamsters, and to those who may have to defend themselves and who want something to defend themselves with.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Do these men have to buy them themselves?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. They have to buy them themselves. Mr. DRISCOLL. Out of their own money?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Out of their own money.
Mr. DRISCOLL. They are not provided for by the Government?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. They are civilians, and the Government does not authorize the issue of any arms to civilians. As originally submitted to us, it covered Members of Congress, but we thought Members of Congress had better buy from private individuals than the Government. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Articles of ordnance property may be sold by the Chief of Ordnance to officers of the Navy and Marine Corps, for their use in the public service, in the same manner as these articles are now sold to officers of the army.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from Iowa-

Mr. DRISCOLL. I first reserve the point of order on that

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I would like to ask the gentleman from Iowa if he would object to amending that paragraph in this way: "Provided, That the Secretary of War shall, thirty days before the date of the sale, furnish Members of Congress and Delegates a list for distribution of the things to be sold."

Now, here is what I have in mind. I am informed that a great many of these things are sold—while valueless to the Government for war use, that they are valuable for use by private individuals and for ornament—and they are sold as "junk."

Mr. HULL of Iowa. There is a law now for the sale of condemned property, including all kinds of things-horses, harness, and ordnance-and I would not like to undertake to change that law just now. I hardly think it would be advisable, when ordnance is condemned, to send to every Member of Congress, any more than the rest of the people of the United States, a list of all they have for sale.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. The very reason I would have them send it to Members of Congress and Delegates is so as to get the information before the people, who would only be too glad to buy the condemned horses, pistols, cannons, and so forth.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. That is all advertised if they are condemned. A board is organized to condemn the property

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Will the gentleman tell how this occurs?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. By first having it condemned by a board

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I understand that.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Then it is advertised for sale.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Where?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Anywhere where the property is. We recently had a sale of condemned horses at Des Moines.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. How do they advertise? Mr. HULL of Iowa. In the newspapers in the locality in which the property is condemned.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Including guns and pistols?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. How would you advertise a sale of a lot of guns and pistols? They are scattered all over this country.

I should object to any change of the law at this time.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Why not let anybody buy it?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. They can now if it is condemned property. The gentleman from Tennessee is talking about condemned property.

Mr. DRISCOLL. What articles of ordnance may be sold to the officers of the Army and Marine Corps under this paragraph?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. The army officers now have the right to buy their side arms, pistols and belts, and rifles, if they want one of the kind used in the army. These are not condemned guns, but good guns, modern guns of the type that is used. Now, the navy and Marine Corps have no manufactory of guns as has the army. This gun is manufactured for the army. This provision is simply intended to allow officers of the navy and Marine Corps to buy these supplies, and it is recommended by the Secretary of War in a letter of January 6 that the same right be extended to the two other arms of the service that the army officers now have by law.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Is it supposed that they will buy these cheaper than upon the market?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. The gun made by the United States Government is not in the market. They can not buy a United States rifle in the market.

Now, it is subject to a point of order, of course. If the gentleman would like to have the letter read, I will be glad to have it read for his information.

Mr. DRISCOLL. I should like to hear it.
Mr. HULL of Iowa. I ask, then, that the letter of the Secretary of War be read. There is no mystery in this. It is simply to let the officers of the navy and Marine Corps have the same rights to purchase these arms that officers of the army now

The Clerk read as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT, Washington, January 6, 1909.

The CHAIRMAN,
Committee on Military Affairs, House of Representatives.

Sir: I have the honor to inform you that this department is in receipt of a communication from the Secretary of the Navy, in which this officer recommends that officers of the Navy and Marine Corps be granted the same privilege as officers of the Army in purchasing arms and equipments from the Ordnance Department. The regulations of the Marine Corps provide that the horse equipments for mounted officers shall be identical with those of officers of the same grade in the army, which equipments are, in the main, manufactured at the Rock Island Arsenal and sold to officers under authority of law.

It is therefore recommended that the following provision of law be incorporated in the bill providing for the support of the army during the next fiscal year, viz:

"Articles of ordnance property may be sold by the Chief of Ordnance to officers of the Navy and Marine Corps, for their use in the public service, in the same manner as these articles are now sold to the officers of the Army."

Luke E. Wright,

Secretary of War.

LUKE E. WRIGHT, Secretary of War.

Mr. DRISCOLL. I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I renew it for the present, because I think there is merit in my proposition, which I want added to the one in the bill.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. The gentleman's proposition deals with condemned guns and has nothing to do with this paragraph. I can not consent to the gentleman's amendment. If he desires to make a point of order, he must make it.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. No; I do not want to throw out a good thing. I want to make it better. What objection has the gentleman to putting in a provision authorizing the Secretary of War to send to each Member of Congress, thirty days in advance, a list of the articles that are to be sold, so that the Member can hand it to the newspapers in his district, and thus inform would-be purchasers?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. If the gentleman will permit me, I will try to save him a little trouble

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I want a list of things to be sold sent to Members, Delegates, and Senators, so that they can give the list to the newspapers in their neighborhood. They will publish it, and the people in every part of the United States, in every district, can send and buy cannon or guns or pistols or the things to be sold; and the gentleman knows that all of these implements of war are very much sought after, both for the use of private citizens and for ornamenting the corners of our streets and as relics.

Mr. DRISCOLL. They get the cannon for nothing now, for ornamental purposes.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I had a great deal of trouble in getting two, and the gentleman helped me to get both of them; but the law has been recently changed, and it is easier to get them now.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. In the first place, condemned cannon are not sold at all. If they are not donated by Congress, they are generally melted up.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. What is sold?
Mr. HULL of Iowa. Small arms, when condemned, are sold.
Now, if the gentleman will write to the Ordnance Department he will receive a list of all the guns that are for sale. It does not require an amendment to get a list; and if the gentleman will write to the Quartermaster's Department, requesting to be notified when any horses are to be sold, he will receive that information also.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I do not want any horses

Mr. HULL of Iowa. But to make officers of the army become an information bureau before they can sell anything, notifying every Member of Congress, is to my mind not very good legislation.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Does the gentleman think it would be a menace to the people if he should consent to an amendment providing that lists of the guns and other firearms to be sold be sent to Members of this House and Members of the Senate for them to give out the information?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Every Member of Congress and every private individual can get that information if he will write and ask for it. There is nothing secret about it.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. How can the people in my State telephone here and find out what property Secretary of War Wright has to sell?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. General Wright does not sell anything. Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. If they would send me a list of the things, I would hand it to the local papers, and they would publish it, and the people would send here and buy, instead of letting the articles be sold at 20 or 10 per cent of their

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman think it more important to make it easy for the people to buy firearms than it is to buy blankets, boots and shoes, or other articles of ordinary necessity?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. No; I do not. I have seen people in this town cold for the want of a blanket and for the want of shoes, right in the shadow of the Capitol.

Mr. MANN. Yet the gentleman's only proposition is to make it easier for the people of the country at large to buy guns with which to shoot each other.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I am sure the gentleman from Illinois will be very glad to have in his town one of these same guns that is useless to the Government.

Mr. MANN. They do not sell those.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I understand they do. Mr. MANN. The gentleman is mistaken. Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. The cannon are not sold, but the other guns are.

Mr. MANN. I will say to the gentleman that, if I can prevent it, no amendment will be adopted here which will give people a chance to buy condemned guns or anything of that kind to carry around for the purpose of "raising Cain."

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I think the people generally would like to have some of these historic relies; but if the gentleman from Iowa thinks it is objectionable, I will withdraw the point

The Clerk read as follows:

That all material purchased under the provisions of this act shall be of American manufacture, except in cases when, in the judgment of the Secretary of War, it is to the manifest interest of the United States to make purchases in limited quantities abroad. Such material purchased in limited quantities shall be admitted free of duty, as shall other military material similarly purchased, or furnished without charge.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order against the paragraph just read.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. This is practically the identical provision that has been carried many years in the fortification bill. On page 11, of the fortification bill for this session as reported, you will find it. It has been in repeated bills. The chief of ordnance claims that it is a matter of economy when ordering from abroad and having the Government pay the duty and then be reimbursed. It is to facilitate business and is a matter of economy. It is what the fortification bill has carried for years in identically the same language. It is subject to a point of order, and I do not care to discuss it.

Mr. MACON. It strikes me that if we pay the duty on these articles imported it will be simply taking the money out of one pocket and putting it into the other.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I make the point of order.

Mr. MACON. I have made the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.
Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return to page 32, line 3, to make a verbal correction. In an amendment I offered yesterday, I inadvertently wrote the word infantry" in the wrong place.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the proposed amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, Hereafter one of the companies at the recruiting depots shall have the organization of infantry bands to which recruits showing an aptitude for music may be attached for examination and instruction before assignment to organizations in the army.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to return to a former section of the bill in order to make the verbal correction which has been read. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The amendment was agreed to.
Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment as a new paragraph.

The Clerk read as follows:

"No part of any appropriation made herein shall be expended in the purchase of powder except powder for small arms at a price not in excess of 64 cents per pound."

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I raise a point of order on that. It should have been offered at the time the question of powder was up.

Mr. FITZGERALD. This refers to all appropriations in the

Mr. HULL of Iowa. It is intended as a limitation, but it seems to me the proper place, for that was where the appropriation was made for such purposes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It might apply to that particular provision, but this is intended to apply to every provision that may be available for the purpose. It is of the same form and character'as in a general limitation.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I think in Hinds's Manual will be found almost, if not a similar, case. The gentleman from Maryland offered an amendment at the end of the bill, and the language was "appropriations made in this bill" for a certain object "shall be limited" thus and so. I tried to find it in the manual last night, but did not succeed. almost certain that I have read such a decision. I am almost certain that it referred to the whole bill and was held to be in order, though offered at the end of the bill. The amendment is clearly in order; it is a limitation on all the appropriations in a bill on the particular kind of powder.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. On page 43 we had ammunition, targets, and so forth, and we passed that. That is the only place where I think it would apply at all. There was no suggestion of any amendment at the time or any limitation, although the gentleman from Tennessee addressed the House very eloquently on this subject without offering any amendment. Now, after the bill is practically completed, it seems to me it is out of order to make a limitation to apply to another part of the bill. The item that this amendment applies to has been passed.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, this is a limitation on every appropriation in the bill that may be utilized for the purpose specified. It seems to me the House has the power to make such a limitation. I have not looked up the precedents, but my recollection is that similar limitations have been held in order at other times. Powder is provided for in several places in the bill.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I want to suggest to the Chairman this thought: Here is a specific item that this limitation would refer to. Members who are interested in the question for or against it have left the House, and then to have it come up out of order at the end of the bill does not seem to be proper.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The mere fact that it will suit some gentlemen's convenience to have it in one place or another in the bill should not control the Chair in ruling upon the question as to whether the amendment is in order. The question is whether this limitation can be made at this time. I am indifferent to whether it suits the convenience of Members or not.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I would like to ask the gentleman from Iowa if he does not think it more convenient to have this limitation in four or five words at the end of the bill than it would be to put the limitation in every other place throughout the bill wherever the subject might be provided for?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. There is only one provision in the bill in reference to this limitation.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. It seems to me that it would be more convenient than to put the limitation in at every place where the question comes up.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. There is only one section that this would be germane to.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, if you could put a limita-tion upon each particular paragraph, it is appropriate to put one general limitation upon all the appropriations. The particular form in which it is done is immaterial. The question is, Does it limit the expenditure of money in the bill? That is the only question involved.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair can not agree with the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD]. It seems to the Chair that the rule is well settled that an amendment offered, or a provision made, must be germane to the portion of the bill then under discussion. Specific appropriation has been made for the manufacture and purchase of powder, and that has been passed, and since then specific appropriations have been made for many other subjects. It seems to the Chair, under the procedure of the House, that the point made that this amendment now offered is not in order is well taken, and the Chair must sustain the point of order.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I do not know which particular paragraph the Chair thinks I should offer this amendment to, and I do not know whether the Chair has in mind the particular paragraph that I may have in mind. This is an independent provision. It is not offered as an amendment to the paragraph just read. It is a general limitation upon all the appropriations in the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would only suggest that if an amendment had been offered to the provision that provided for the manufacture and purchase of powder for small arms, it seems to the Chair a different question would be presented.

Mr. FITZGERALD. This can not possibly relate to the manufacture of powder for small arms, because it specifically excludes it. I am inclined to believe that the Chair has in mind something that is not in the mind of the proposer of the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Section 3 of the act of February 14, 1903, shall be amended to read

Section 3 of the act of February 14, 1903, shall be amended to read as follows:

"The General Staff Corps shall consist of 1 Chief of Staff and 2 general officers, all to be detailed by the President from officers of the army at large not below the grade of brigadier-general; 4 colonels, 6 lleutenant-colonels, and 6 majors, to be detailed from the corresponding grades in the army at large, under such rules for selection as the President may prescribe.

Mr. OLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against this section.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I concede the point of

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Chairman, I rose for the same purpose of making the same point of order, but pending the decision of that point of order, instead of delaying the House with an explana-tion of the duties of the General Staff and the reason why I think it is none too large for its work as it is now constituted, I would like to have unanimous consent to print in the RECORD a statement that I have received as to the General Staff and as to the various duties of the various officers.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. It comes from the General Staff? Mr. PARKER. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey asks unanimous consent to print certain documents in the Record. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. The point of order is sustained.

The documents referred to by Mr. PARKER are as follows:

ARMY WAR COLLEGE.

ARMY WAR COLLEGE.

In addition to duties stated above, the second section performs all the duties connected with the administration of the Army War College, including the instruction of the student officers.

In general terms the present course consists of—

1. Exercises in issuing verbal orders.

Object: To shorten the time usually devoted to estimating military situations and to give practice in dictating orders as well as giving verbal orders, which, as is generally conceded, would be the rule in the field for commands not larger than a brigade.

2. Tactical instruction by conferences.

At these conferences papers prepared at the college on The Tactical Use of the Several Arms are read and discussed.

3. Tactical rides.

Object: To transfer the tactical studies from the map to the terrain.

4. Strategical and tactical exercises with the map.

These include, together with map maneuvers, exercises based on historical examples, the object of which is to point out changes in tactica required by modern conditions, and to discuss the strategical principles involved; also to add realism to the work. They include continuous situations involving the operations of the larger units, the object being to introduce the usual features of combined operations with the consequent modifications in logistics; naval cooperation exercises which involve combined operations between the army and navy, such as would occur in joint expeditions; study of supply questions, involving the arrangements to be made both in the immediate vicinity of the combatant troops and on the line of communications; study of signal questions, illustrating communication to be established by the Signal Corps with an army in the field; study of medical questions, illustrating the various considerations affecting the location of dressing stations, field hospitals, etc., and the methods to be adopted for the removal of the word of the term of the case of a great battle; study of signal questions, involving the movement of a large force on two or more roads an

This includes a course on subjects of military importance, delivered by members of the faculty and distinguished officers of the army. Lectures are to cover the development of modern war, tactics, strategy, campaigns of the civil war, international law, naval war, administration and supply.

8. Campaign studies and staff rides.

8. Campaign studies and stair rides.

Under this subject will take place the study on the ground of some of the great campaigns of the civil war. These campaigns will first be studied at the college with the aid of the best histories and maps; the officers will then ride over the terrain covered by the campaigns, study the ground, and make solutions of military situations connected therewith. The student officers will have for the object the tactical and strategical application of modern methods to historical situations.

9. War studies.

These studies involve the passage of the country from a state of passage.

These studies involve the passage of the country from a state of peace to a state of war.

This officer is also recorder of the Board of Ordnance and Fortification and as such disburses the funds, keeps the records, attends to the correspondence, and conducts such investigations, experiments, and tests as that board may direct.

GENERAL CONSIDERATIONS.

The above shows that the work performed by the officers named is of importance and of such magnitude as to tax the energy and ability of most men.

The policy of our Government, if it can be said that the Government has ever had a policy on military matters, does not recognize the necessity of maintaining administrative units for field work larger than a

Importance and of such magnitude as to tax the energy and ability of importance and of such magnitude as to tax the energy and ability of its polysist of maintaining administrative units for field work larger than as ever had a policy on military matters, does not recognize the necessity of maintaining administrative units for field work larger than a strength of the control of wars.

As one of the many instances showing the necessity for such work may be cited the fact that during the campaign of General Taylor in the Mexican war he was obliged to leave of his 12,000 men 6,000 behind, owing to lack of transportation and the uncertainty in regard to supplies that might be drawn from the theater of operations.

In reference to this instance, General Emory Upton states: "The lack of transportation developed in a striking manner the want in our War Department of a bureau of military statistics."

General Jessup, the Quartermaster-General at that time, wrote to the Secretary of War: "As to the complaint in regard to the want of land transportation, it is proper to remark that there was no information at Washington, so far as I was informed, to enable me or the War Department to determine whether wagons could be used in Mexico."

When it is remembered that practically all agencies devised and developed by man find their uses in war the volume of detail in the military information committee is more apparent.

In this connection it is proper to state that the military information committee of the General Staff has prepared and published, for the information of the army and national guard, military maps and pamphlets upon professional subjects, as follows:

The world is progressing so rapidly in all fields of human endeavor that it is difficult at best to keep Informed of this progress, but such is one of the duties of this committee, which not only must take the steps necessary to secure the information, but must digest it, index it, and file it, thus making it available, part for the immediate use of the army, the national guard, the service schools, and the staff departments, the remainder for use when war is upon us.

All obsolete data must be cut out and the up-to-date be substituted therefor. This office has been so short handed in the past that it will require from two to three years for the present force to catch up.
The field is so wide and varied that a much larger force could be used to the better advantage of the Government.

Many important problems relating to a state of war are yet untouched, and others, though solved, require more revision than it is possible to give them to keep them up to date.

To sum up, the second section has therefore the duty—

(1) Of obtaining and making easy of access all information that may be required by the armies of the United States in any theater of operations; and operations; and

(2) Of making from such information plans of campaigns that may take place in any part of the world.

Moreover, such plans must be kept up to date, revised and revised as the relations between the military powers vary and as the internal conditions of such powers vary.

The 17 officers of the second section are not able to perform all of the above duties in a manner due the country.

The student officers of the Army War College are, therefore, called upon to assist them, and this, of course, is done in addition to the work they must perform while undergoing instruction.

It is submitted that every officer of the second section of the General Staff is required for the work outlined above, and, further, that the time will probably come when it will be realized that the country's interests would be better served if more officers were available for such duty.

All officers detailed in the General Staff Corps shall be detailed therein for periods of four years, unless sooner relieved. While serving in General Staff Corps officers may be temporarily assigned to duty with any branch of the army. Upon being relieved from duty in the General Staff Corps officers shall return to the branch of the army in which they hold permanent commission, and no such officer shall be eligible to any detail until he shall have served two years with the branch of the army in which commissioned, except in case of emergency or in time of war.

Mr. OLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I make the same point of order against that provision.

Mr. DAWSON. Will the gentleman withhold it until I can ask a question of the chairman of the committee?

Mr. OLCOTT. I am willing to reserve the point of order.
Mr. DAWSON. I want to ask my colleague from Iowa in charge of the bill whether the preceding paragraph intended to reduce the membership of the General Staff?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Yes; it cut off 26. Mr. DAWSON. Has it been found that the present staff organization is large or cumbersome?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. This is no time to discuss that. The Committee on Military Affairs, by an overwhelming majority, thought yes, and I think yes, if the gentleman wants my opinion about it. I think the General Staff is so large and it has laid out so much work that it has enough to keep itself busy, as will be seen when the gentleman reads in the Record to-morrow morning the papers inserted by the gentleman from New Jersey.

I want to say for the benefit of the House that after they have read those papers if they know what they mean they know more than I do. I believe in the General Staff for purely general-staff duties, and I think there is a lot of work for them to de, but I do not believe they ought to go into the administrative work. They have more men than they need for general-staff purposes.

Mr. DAWSON. My question was prompted by the fact that the question of the staff in the Navy of the United States is one that is now being given some attention, and I think the committee which is in charge may draw some lesson from the history of the General Staff of the Army.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I want to say one word as to the provision that is now subject to the point of order. That does not affect the General Staff, its members, or its duties, but it does deal with some of the detail provisions. I want to say to the House that the habit has grown up in the department of officers coming to Washington and serving probably four years in one detail, and then, if aids to a general, the general retiring puts his men in the General Staff. Then they serve four years and are redetailed either there or some other place, and we had one case of a man last year who had been on detail for fourteen years, and the Committee on Military Affairs believed that if the detail system is to be kept up that part which provides that they are to serve in the line of the army ought to be enforced. Service in the line is of very great importance.

Mr. DAWSON. Is that the result of the establishment of the General Staff?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Not entirely.

Mr. PARKER. I hope the gentleman from New York will withdraw his objection to that.

Mr. OLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I have no particular objection to withdrawing the point of order, except that I feel that the provision that is inserted in this is a matter rather of administration by the War Department.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I do not care to take up a minute's time on that, but I will merely say that within a short time we will bring in a bill that will deal with the whole question in a way that no point of order can be made against it.

Mr. OLCOTT. I will withdraw the point of order. Mr. HULL of Iowa. If the point of order is withdrawn, Mr. Chairman

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Chairman, I would like to renew the point of order.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. There is no question about its being subject to the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York make the point of order? Mr. PARSONS.

Mr. PARSONS. I do. The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order. Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment as a separate paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert at the end of the bill as a separate paragraph:
"That all war balloons, material, and maccinery for balloon experimentations provided for herein when imported shall be entered free of duty."

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, the information we have here is that a balloon when imported costs about $15,000 duty. I understand it costs that much to bring in a balloon such as we propose to bring in here and experiment with. Now, why should we do that? We appropriate here so much for balloon experimentations, and instead of saving the $15,000 to experiment with the balloon, after we get it we take $15,000 of it to pay duty on it. We take it out of one pocket on one side and put it in another pocket on the other.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. MANN. As I understand the effect of the gentleman's amendment, it is not to impose the tariff upon balloons imported. Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. On war balloons and material used for them, and so forth.

Mr. MANN. And yet upon an objection on that side of the aisle—I do not say an improper one—a similar provision applying to all imported articles purchased-

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Yes, and I am in favor of that and wanted to amend by striking out the words "in limited quantities," and then to strike out again the words "in limited quantities" in lines 12 and—

Mr. MANN. It is impossible for this side of the House to understand what the other side of the House wants. If we put it in they want it out, and if we do not put it in they want it in.

The question was taken and the Chair appropried the poes

The question was taken, and the Chair announced the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, division.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, may we have the amendment reported again?

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be again reported.

There was no objection.

The amendment was again reported.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 48, noes 33.

Mr. PARSONS. Tellers, Mr. Chairman.

Tellers were refused.

So the amendment was adopted.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill and amendments to the House with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. Perkins, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 26915, the army appropriation bill, and had adopted certain amendments, and had directed him to report the same with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and amendments to its final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment?

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a separate vote on the amendment increasing the appropriation for the Signal Corps $500,000 with which to buy balloons.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. It does not specify that.
Mr. TAWNEY. No; but that is the purpose.
The SPEAKER. What is the number of the amendment? The Clerk read as follows:

On page 5, line 11, increasing the appropriation for war balloons from $250,000 to $750,000.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota demands a separate vote. Is a separate vote demanded on any other paragraph?

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Speaker, I demand a separate vote on the last amendment adopted by the committee.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call the attention of the Chair to the fact that the Clerk did not report properly the amendment. That amendment was to strike out the word "two" and insert the word "five" in the clause for the Signal Service for the army. As he reported it, he made the $700,000 apply to only one thing, whereas many things were carried in that.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk did not read the whole paragraph. He called attention to the amendment. The only amendment the Chair finds on examination of the paragraph is as reported by the Clerk, namely, striking out "two," in line 11, and inserting "seven," so as to make it read "$750,000" instead of "$250,000." That is the only amendment to the paragraph.

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Speaker, I demand a separate vote on the amendment which provides that all materials for constructing balloons shall be brought in free of duty.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any other amendment? If not, without objection the amendments other than the two specified are agreed to. [After a pause.] The Chair hears no objection.

The question now is on agreeing to the amendment, which the Clerk will again report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 5, line 11, strike out "two" and insert "seven," so as to read "$750,000."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the "noes" seemed to have it.

nces" seemed to have it. Mr. HULL of Iowa. Division, Mr. Speaker.

The House divided, and there were—ayes 60, noes 87. Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and navs were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 91, nays 162, answered "present" 1, not voting 132, as follows:

The SPEAKER. The Chair will say to the gentleman from New York that if the gentleman in charge of the bill desires to move to recommit, he is entitled to first recognition.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I move the previous question on that. Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman had yielded the floor, because the Chair started to put the motion.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has not yet put the motion. Mr. FITZGERALD. The Chair had started to put the question, and the gentleman from New York, having attempted to obtain recognition, the Chair again intimated to the gentleman from Iowa that he had overlooked something.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not reproach himself with any manifestation of impropriety touching this matter. House, by voting down the previous question, can attain the end that the gentleman desires. Mr. FITZGERALD. I simply wish to suggest to the Chair that the minority should not be compelled to compete not only with the alertness of the gentlemen on the floor, but with the astuteness of the occupant of the chair. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The present occupant of the chair repeats that he has nothing to reproach himself with in the premises.

Mr. FITZGERALD. If the previous question be voted down, will it be in order to amend the motion so as to recommit with instructions to limit the price paid for powder?

So the previous question was ordered.

The following additional pairs were announced:

For the session:

Mr. MUDD with Mr. TALBOTT.

Until further notice

Mr. LANGLEY with Mr. RUCKER.

Mr. TAWNEY with Mr. RAINEY.

Mr. OLMSTED with Mr. Moon of Tennessee.

Mr. LORIMER with Mr. Kipp. Mr. LAFEAN with Mr. HAMLIN.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan with Mr. Cockran. Mr. CALDER with Mr. CARLIN.

Mr. Burton of Delaware with Mr. Broussard.

Mr. BARTHOLDT with Mr. BOWERS.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded. The SPEAKER. The question now is on the motion of the gentleman from Iowa to recommit.

The question was taken, and the bill was passed.

On motion of Mr. Hull of Iowa, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 27053) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1910. And pending that motion I would like to inquire of the gentleman from Virginia how much time he can occupy.

Mr. LAMB. We would like to have three hours, but we can

Mr. SCOTT. Then, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that general debate may occupy five hours of time, to be equally divided between the two sides of the Chamber, one half to be controlled by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. LAMB] and the other half by myself.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent that general debate be closed on the agricultural appropriation bill in five hours, one half to be controlled by himself and the other half by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. LAMB]. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The motion of Mr. Scorr was then agreed to.

Accordingly, the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. FOSTER of Vermont in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the agricultural bill. The Clerk will report the bill.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, reserving until the last hour of general debate whatever remarks I may have to make in submitting this bill, I now yield one hour to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER].

Mr. KEIFER, Mr. Chairman, I thank the chairman [Mr. Scorr] of the Committee on Agriculture for his courtesy in giving me the floor at this time.

Important as the pending agricultural appropriation bill is, I shall, as is usual here in general debate, address my remarks to another bill having no provision in it relating directly to agriculture, yet a bill which, if enacted into law and its ultimate purpose is carried out, will do more to promote agricul-ture in the United States than any appropriation act ever passed by any Congress.

I shall speak to-day in support of a measure of the first importance to the general prosperity and future growth of this Though the improvement sought to be initiated may appear to be of local importance, yet a brief consideration of it will show that it will be, when completed, of universal importance to all parts of the Union. It has no partisan or sectional character in it. If made, it will install a new era in American trade and commerce and greatly stimulate industries of all kinds.

The bill (H. R. 25813) I advocate is offered in response to a general demand which increased and increasing business has forced upon our people, as is shown by memorials and resolutions of the most remarkable gatherings of the ablest and most earnest business men of the United States. It is time the Congress of the United States was listening to the summons to duty, coming from congresses of governors and of leading men from all parts of our Union, and from associations of men who are deeply interested in cheap transportation, and who sound the alarm of business stagnation for the want of it.

IMPROVEMENT PROPOSED.

But first as to the bill and its purposes. Its title expresses its object to be:

To authorize the appointment of a board of engineers to make a pre-liminary location, survey, and plans for a ship canal connecting the waters of Lake Erle and the Ohio River on the line of the Miami and Erle Canal from Toledo to Cincinnati, Ohio, and to estimate the cost thereof.

The principal purpose expressed in the bill is to have a preliminary survey for a ship canal on the line of the Miami and Erie Canal as nearly as practicable, and a report from a competent and skilled board of engineers, consisting of three persons appointed by the Secretary of War, upon its location, feasibility, advisability, and practicability of construction, operation, and maintenance, which, of course, includes a report as to whether or not a sufficient supply of water can be obtained and made available for its successful operation and maintenance if constructed.

The bill also requires other important and minor matters to be reported upon, such as whether or not it would probably be practicable to construct and operate in connection therewith another like canal, also the probable water supply for power in manufacturing and for other purposes which could be utilized in case of the construction and maintenance of the proposed ship canal; also detailed plans for and an estimate of the cost of such canal and the probable time within which it could be constructed.

The plans and estimates are to be for a canal of such dimensions in depth and width for water as to contemplate the passage of steamboats such as may navigate the Ohio and Mississippi rivers and of ships such as usually navigate Lake Erie and the other Great Lakes connected therewith. The report is also to include the cost of dams, reservoirs, locks, and of all other necessarily incident things.

The canal sought to be built does not contemplate a ship canal capable of being navigated by the largest ships, but by the more common classes of vessels, including barges, which now generally navigate the seas and lakes. Its dimensions should only be limited by the available water supply. Some of our seaports only have water in their channels of entrance and at their docks permitting vessels of a draft not exceeding 10 or 12 feet. Ships such as are usually engaged in ocean coast trade could pass through the canal contemplated.

In estimating the cost of the canal the board of engineers is required (section 4 of the bill) to exclude the value of so much of the Miami and Eric Canal, including its branches and water rights and privileges, reservoirs, dams and appurtenances, and the branches thereof, and all the real estate and other property of whatever character connected, used, and utilized therewith, owned by the State of Ohio, that can be adapted to and included, used, or utilized in the location, construction, and maintenance of the proposed canal.

This last provision is on the assured assumption that the State of Ohio, the owner of the Miami and Erie Canal and the important rights connected therewith, will transfer it and such rights, free of cost, to the Federal Government, which would go far toward reducing the cost of constructing the proposed canal.

The construction of the Miami and Erie Canal was commenced in 1825 (parts under different names) and completed in 1845, and it has been operated by the State of Ohio in whole or in part ever since. This canal is 244 miles in length of main line from deep water in the Maumee River to the Ohio Its general termini are at Toledo, with Lake Erie, and at Cincinnati (249 miles), with the Ohio River, and it passes through a generally level, rich, and alluvial country, easy of excavation, and through Napoleon, Defiance (about 60 miles from Toledo), the cities of Piqua, Troy, Dayton, Hamilton, and other important places in Ohio.

By an act of February 4, 1825, Ohio authorized the building of the Miami Canal along the Big Miami River from Cincinnati to Dayton, about 66 miles, and later (March 3, 1834) authorized the construction of the Wabash and Erie Canal (67% miles long) from Toledo to a junction with the Miami Extension Canal (114 miles long) from the Miami Canal at Dayton to the junction of the Maumee and Auglaize rivers. The Miami Canal was constructed with a minimum water-surface width of 40 feet, a bottom width of 26 feet, and a depth of 4 feet; the Wabash and Erie with a water-surface width of 60 feet, a bottom width of 46 feet, and a depth of 6 feet; and the Miami Extension Canal 50 feet wide at the top, 36 feet at the bottom, and 5 feet deep. Some portions have since been enlarged.

By act of the legislature of Ohio of date of March 14, 1849, the three canals previously known as the "Miami Canal," the "Miami Extension Canal," and the "Wabash and Eric Canal" became known as the "Miami and Erie Canal." It has one summit, the Loramie Summit, which is 374 feet above Lake Erie and 516 feet above the Ohio River at Cincinnati. From the lake to the northern end of Loramie Summit is 124.75 miles, thence across the summit level 24 miles, and thence to the Ohio River 100.11 miles, making the total length of the Miami and Erie Canal 248.86 miles.

The ride cuts, feeders, and so forth, connected with this canal were the Wabash and Erie Canal from the junction to the Indiana state line, 18 miles; Sidney feeder, 14 miles; Grand reservoir feeder, 2 miles; Loramie feeder, one-half mile; Hamilton side cut, three-fourths mile; Middletown feeder, one-half mile; Dayton feeder, one-third mile; the total being about 36 miles in length.

The main streams of water supply for the Miami and Erie Canal are the Maumee, the St. Marys, and Auglaize rivers, and other tributary streams, and the Big Miami River with its principal branches and its many important tributary streams confluent therewith, including Mad River at Dayton, about 60 miles north of Cincinnati.

There are still maintained by the State of Ohio the reservoirs as feeders of the Miami and Erie Canal, located on the divide between Lake Erie and the Ohio River. One is known as the "Grand reservoir" (or "St. Marys"), located in Mercer and Auglaize counties westward of the main line of the canal, and one commonly called "Lewistown reservoir" located in Logan County, Ohio. This one feeds a branch lying east of the Miami and Erie Canal at Port Jefferson, which branch passes through Sidney and connects with the main line at Lockington, north of Piqua, Ohio. There is also the Loramie reservoir, located in Shelby County, eastward of the main line of the canal. These reservoirs are of varying but of large area and capacity, and are located on the summit level where the waters gather and from which they flow to the Ohio River and Lake Erie.

There are other feeders, some natural, for the canal and other reservoirs of large capacity to conserve the water are reported by competent engineers as practicable; and it is, as has frequently been reported on examination, almost certain that an ample supply of water to maintain a canal of a depth of at least 15 feet of water will be found to exist and be available.

Those who oppose such improvements exaggerate the quantity and the depth of water required, and they also minimize the water likely to be available.

An outline map, which I ask leave to print, showing the location of the Miami and Eric Canal, its branches, reservoirs, and feeders, herewith follows:

Some of the existing ship canals help us to know the depth of water required in a ship canal for its successful operation. The Sault St. Marys (ship) Canal (2 miles long), connecting Lakes Superior and Huron, has a navigable depth of 18 feet; Spurgeon Bay and Lake Michigan Canal (14 miles long), from

Green Bay to Lake Michigan, 15 feet; Welland Canal (261 miles long), in Canada, connecting Lakes Ontario and Erie, 14 feet; and the Harlem River Ship Canal (8 miles long), connecting the Hudson River and Long Island Sound, 15 feet. These and others are used by ships and barges of considerable tonnage and displacement, and over them an immense commerce is carried on. The Welland Canal (14 feet deep) is a throat for the commerce of the Great Lakes, the St. Lawrence River, and the Atlantic Ocean.

The Harlem River Ship Canal (15 feet deep), though not completed, has a traffic over it exceeding that over the River Seine, Ships engaged in coast trade and other seagoing vessels pass through it.

The people of New York only recently (1903) voted $101, 000,000 3 per cent bonds to be used to construct a ship canal (commonly called "the Barge Canal") to be of 12 feet in depth of water, to follow, in the main, the Erie Canal and the Oswego and Champlain canals, from Buffalo to Albany—Lake Erie to the Hudson River—387 miles in length. A ship canal with a greater navigable depth of water than most of the canals named, it is confidently believed, can be successfully built and maintained over the Miami and Erie Canal.

LOCAL IMPORTANCE.

The Maumee and the Miami valleys and the whole territory traversed by the Miami and Erie Canal on both sides are not excelled for richness and productiveness of soil by any other region of the world. Of the products of the soil, consisting of wheat, rye, oats, corn, and other grain, and also of staple vegetables of all kinds adapted to the climate, there is more surplus produced, or capable of being produced, than in any other equal area of the earth.

The cities already named, located at the termini and along the line of this canal, are, some of them, populous, and all are growing rapidly in population, and most of them excel in manufacturing industries of almost all kinds, and their demands for coal for fuel and for iron, lumber, and other material for use in building and manufacturing and otherwise are very great. There is more paper produced on the line of this canal than in any other region of the world. The shipments of surplus grain or the products thereof and of other growths of the soil, and including cattle, hogs, and other domestic animals, and the shipment of manufactured articles is now, and will always be, There are extensive stone deposits and forests of very great. timber, valuable for building and other purposes, near and along the line of the canal, which can be better and more cheaply transported by water than by rail.

Most of the articles and commodities referred to are of the kind, in general, that should be transported by water, because heavy and bulky, at cheaper than railroad rates.

The water power that will be conserved along the canal will add greatly to the industries pursued and to trade and traffic over it; and its leased value for varied uses will go far toward defraying the expenses of maintaining the canal and paying a good interest on the prime cost thereof. There are many other things than those named that would add largely to the local business of a deep-water canal.

The city, village, and urban population, including Cincinnati and Toledo, residing in close proximity to the canal numbers about 2,000,000, unexcelled for intelligence, energy, industry, and business enterprise. The canal, if in operation, would draw to it still greater population, stimulate agriculture and mechanical industry, develop natural resources, promote more and enlarged enterprises requiring untold capital, and it would generally result in increased business and wealth to be enjoyed by all classes of people.

CANAL INTERSTATE AND INTERNATIONAL.

However large the local business of the proposed canal might be or become, it would still be of minor importance compared to its other business.

I assume this Government would not construct a ship canal anywhere the business of which would be solely or even prin-cipally of a local character and importance, and it may be doubted whether it has the constitutional power to do so, although the practice has grown up, and latterly has hardly been doubted, to improve rivers and harbors and to make other improvements at the expense of the United States, which are located wholly within a State and the business of which is local in character. The right to do this, it is asserted, is derived from Article I, section 8, paragraph 3 of the Constitution, granting Congress shall have power to regulate commerce with foreign nations, among the several States, and with the Indian tribes.

It is also contended that clause 1 of the same section and article of the Constitution, which empowers Congress to "provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States," authorizes the General Government to make internal improvements, though this is not universally conceded to be a sound interpretation of the power granted by the clause.

The right to make internal improvements at the expense of the Federal Treasury was first proposed to be exercised in Jefferson's administration, March 29, 1806, when commissioners were authorized by Congress to be appointed by the President to lay out a road from Cumberland, Md., to the Ohio River, and when a like road was projected through Georgia to New Orleans, and another later from Maysville, Ky. While none of these roads were ever completed, the Cumberland road was in time surveyed and projected through Ohio, Indiana, and Illinois to St. Louis, Mo., and it was completed under the authority of Congress about 1839 as far west as Springfield, Ohio, and much work was done on the line laid out still farther west.

Those who maintained that Congress had power to build this road put the right to do so mainly on the interstate-commerce clause of the Constitution and not alone on the general-welfare clause. I have in a former Congress (February 2, 1907) discussed this and kindred questions relating to the power of Congress to make internal improvements.

It may, however, be said that there is little, if any, room to doubt the constitutional right of the United States to improve rivers and harbors and to construct and maintain deep waterways or canals wherever they will obviously be of an interstate character and importance or will build up and substantially increase commerce between States of the Union. true test of constitutional power is not alone where the proposed improvement is to be located, but what its character and effect will be when completed. The hundreds of millions of dollars that Congress has appropriated in the one hundred and twenty years of the constitutional existence of this Nation for river and harbor improvements, and the like, can only be regarded as warranted by such test. Most of these millions have been spent to improve harbors located on seacoasts and lake shores, each wholly within the boundary and jurisdiction of a State.

The growth of this Nation has moved its center of population west (Columbus, Ind., 1900 census) of the improvement proposed in this bill, and its center of business (Mansfield, Ohio) is near it, especially that concerning interstate transportation

The canal sought to have surveyed with a view to its construction is both interstate and international in character. It will directly affect "commerce with foreign nations" as well as "among the several States."

Its northern terminus (Toledo) opens into Lake Erie, giving access and egress to and from the canal for all the commerce flowing to and from the American lake ports in the States of Wisconsin, Illinois, Michigan, Pennsylvania, and New York, all of which ports now draw commerce from the other States and from foreign ports; also access and egress for all vessels, foreign or not, from and to all the Canadian ports bordering on these Lakes, and likewise from the Erie Canal across New York State, the St. Lawrence River, and for ships entering via the St. Lawrence through the Welland Canal from foreign countries. The ores of the iron mines, the most important and extensive of any in the world, found mainly on the shores of Lake Superior. and the other great mineral resources of the lake regions would be transported to the large furnaces, mills, and other establishments in the States over the proposed canal.

It is vain to try to estimate the tonnage that would inevitably be carried over it. To merely mention the traffic which would be carried through the canal to and from our own great American cities, and to and from Canadian cities, such as Toronto and Quebec, suggests a trade condition almost impossible to be overestimated. The whole of the trade or traffic is interchangeable and reciprocal and almost directly concerns all our people. canal would form a link connecting the waters of the Lakes and the Gulf of Mexico and through the most populous parts of our Nation, touching the interior cities and the ports already named and all cities and places along the Ohio River from Cincinnati and the Mississippi River to New Orleans and the Gulf of Mexico, and thence in direct line, with or without transshipment, to the soon-to-be-completed (as our Republic's greatest world enterprise) Panama Canal, the most colossal work ever undertaken and consummated by any nation in the world's history.

Through it would sail vessels carrying from the United States the surplus agricultural products and articles of all kinds manufactured by our people. The upper Ohio and Mississippi and the Missouri rivers and others would be accessible and tributary to the trade over the canal. There is no region of the world where more surplus agricultural products grow to support humanity than in the region of the United States comprised in the Ohio, Missouri, and Mississippi valleys and in the region of country immediately and naturally connected therewith. From these regions people of this and other lands must receive grain, meats, and other articles of food to sustain life.

The improvement of the Ohio River, new happily in progress, and of other navigable natural water courses accessible from the proposed canal insures a successful interior water traffic over them. The commerce of the Great Lakes is the first, and that of the Ohio River, with its tributary and other connections, is the third in importance in the United States.

The distinguishing and exceptionally important feature of the canal, I reiterate and emphasize, will consist of its forming a link uniting the navigation of the Great Lakes on the north with that of the great rivers flowing south through the interior of this country to the Gulf of Mexico, a result never heretofore achieved.

NECESSITY FOR THE IMPROVEMENT.

Cheap transportation, only obtainable by water, is now and will continue to be an absolute necessity, and without it our producers must largely curtail their efforts, and natural consumers, whether our own citizens or those of the teeming millions of other nations, must correspondingly suffer.

It is impossible to exaggerate the importance of the improvement proposed, and what I have already said as to its necessity and permanent value to our country and to the human race is only a statement of some of the most patent, though not all of the most important, reasons for its consummation.

The obvious wisdom and the ultimate necessity for connecting the waters of the Great Lakes and the interior navigable rivers flowing to the Gulf of Mexico were pointed out by George Washington, also by Thomas Jefferson, in the eighteenth century, soon after the cession (1784) by Virginia of the Northwest Territory and before the ordinance of July 13, 1787. The prescient wisdom of each led him to suggest the line for the location of the connecting canal over which it is new proposed to locate a ship canal. The possibilities of the West in material growth, since realized, was a dim prophecy to the early fathers of our Republic. Neither Washington, Jefferson, nor the early Adamses, nor probably any other of our Revolutionary patriots, ever saw or possibly dreamed of a steam or other railroad for the transportation of man or for commerce, nor had they any adequate knowledge of steamships or steamboats and but little of steam power. They knew nothing of electricity as a propelling power. Ben Franklin succeeded (1750) in attracting electricity from the clouds by a kite, a wet tow string, and a key; yet neither he nor his generation could capture or harness it for use, as now. Telegraphy (1832), telephones (1877), and X rays (1895) were each unknown to them. Wireless telegraphy (1902), so recently a means of saving human life after a collision of passenger vessels on the sea (Republic and Florida, off Nantucket) by those in distress being able to summon through the trackless air other ships to their rescue, was to them an unrevealed mystery of God's creation. They, notwithstanding, had the common sense and wisdom to foresee the wants of the generations to succeed them.

Governor De Witt Clinton, of New York, a profound student of economic and practical industries, himself engaged in promoting canal construction in New York, and for a long time president of its board of canal commissioners, and who once visited Ohio on a tour of inspection of her resources, wrote, November 8, 1823, to Micajah T. Williams, one of Ohio's canal commissioners, a prophetic letter on the subject of the importance of connecting the waters of the Lakes and the Ohio River. I quote pertinent parts thereof:

The projected canal between Lake Erle and the Ohio River will, in connection with the New York canals, form a navigable communication between the bay of New York, the Gulf of Mexico, and the Gulf of St. Lawrence; of course it will embrace within its influence the great part of the United States and of the Canadas. The advantages of a canal of this description are so obvious, so striking, so numerous, and so extensive that it is a work of supererogation to bring them into view. The State of Ohio, from the fertility of its soil, the benignity of its climate, and its geographical position, must always contain a dense population, and the products and consumptions of its inhabitants must forever for a lucrative and extensive inland trade, exciting the powers of productive industry and communicating aliment and energy to external commerce. But when we consider that this canal will open a way to the great rivers that fall into the Mississippi, that it will be felt, not only in the immense valley of that river, but as far well as the Rocky Mountains and the borders of Mexico, and that it will communicate with our great inland seas and their tributary rivers, with the ocean in various routes, and with the most productive regions of America, there can be no question respecting the blessings that it will produce, the riches that it will create, and the energies that it will produce, the riches that it will create, and the energies that it will real

Next to New York, Ohio will be the most populous State in the Union. She is susceptible of a population of twelve and one-half millions, contains 39,000 square miles, and has every facility for carrying the pursuits of productive activity to the highest pitch of improvement.

In one word, sir, all that is necessary to complete this great enterprise is the will to direct it. Considering, as I always have, that it is only a continuation of the Eric Canal, that it will promote corresponding advantages, and that it is identified with the stability of our Government and the prosperity of our country, I own that I feel a more than common solicitude on this subject.

What was to Governor Clinton a vision of prophecy eighty-five years ago as to Ohio's future is, in some respects, a reality now; but the canal he then contemplated is no longer equal or suitable to meet present demands nor in harmony, as to capacity or usefulness, with the Erie Canal, with which he coupled it so long since. It should now be enlarged to at least correspond with the barge canal in process of construction from Buffalo to Albany, N. Y., before mentioned.

Railways came first in the United States in 1827, and in time promised to provide the needed transportation for our commerce, intrastate and interstate; but numerous and enterprising as they have been, and still are, they confessedly fail now to meet the requirements of commerce; and their vast equipment is now, and will always be, inadequate to do the business of the country. Great railway magnates admit this and join in the general demand for more and cheaper interior water transportation routes. The railway freight rates are so high, and probably, all things considered, necessarily so, as to amount in many cases to a confiscation of the goods transported; and when not so bad as that, they are still so high as to leave little profit to producers and shippers and to augment unreasonably the cost to consumers.

The necessity now for deep waterways or ship canals is not only conceded by the great railway men of the United States, but by other critical students of the present commercial conditions of our country. Of course our future transportation requirements will increase in proportion as our country grows in population and in wealth. The material cheapening of transportation of our commodities and manufactured goods will necessarily cheapen them and do more to hasten and secure universal prosperity than any other thing possible to occur.

The awakening of the most enterprising business men in all parts of the United States to the necessity of more transportation facilities at greatly reduced rates, especially for the heavier and bulkier freight, is sufficient testimony in favor of early action. These men are united in the opinion that only through deepwater canals and by improving the natural navigable streams can this necessity be met. We have heard the views of these great thinkers in congresses and in assemblies largely attended here in the Nation's capital and in principal cities—and through business men's associations in all sections of the United States. No such universal interest has been taken in our history as has recently been shown and is now being taken in the matter of developing deep waterways for transportation. Other countries have led off in providing such transportation and are now far in advance. Some of us have borne our testimony on this great question, but it behooves us to now act in response to the universal cry of our people for early relief.

I present for consideration an initial improvement of the kind so much needed and so earnestly demanded, as we have seen. It has not only the merit of shortening routes of transportation, but it opens an absolutely new one, by water, through which commerce may pass to all parts of the world. Its consummation will not, as has been feared by some, reduce the natural flow of water into Lake Erie and the Ohio River.

I do not stop to discuss the importance of a ship canal connecting the waters of the Great Lakes and the Gulf of Mexico in case of war, though great statesmen and patriots have advocated its construction on that ground, they believing that though by treaty neither the United States nor Great Britain maintains war ships on the Great Lakes, yet, in case of war with Great Britain, the United States would be unable to take them there, while Great Britain might do so.

But this is an era for ship canals for trade and commerce, and why should the United States be behind her sister nations in the enterprises of peace?

Our iron and steel mills, shops, arsenals, navy and ship yards have been for years past, and will for years to come, be noisy and busy in preparation for war, and especially in the making of small arms, guns of large and small caliber for use on land and sea, and in building battle ships, torpedo boats, and in other warlike preparations, to enable our country to show a formidable readiness for war and to display a monster navy on the ocean able to cope with that of any other great world power or war power. Some of this may be attributed to pride or ambition alone, rather than to a fear of a foreign foe. But whatever motive or feeling prompts Congress, the fact is that many millions of dollars are expended annually for new battle ships, for changing and repairing those we have, for fortifications, and for the maintenance generally of our army and navy, though no real war cloud hangs over the Republic. A fraction of the money so expended would build several self-sustaining deep waterways of the importance and character of the one I advocate.

An era of universal peace has been entered upon, we sincerely hope and pray. The two battle ships this House has just authorized to be constructed will, when armored and equipped with modern guns and appliances necessary to a complete armament, cost about $26,000,000, a sum sufficient, I believe, to construct a ship canal over the Miami and Erie Canal.

The investment in battle ships and the like promises no return, but it will become an absolute ultimate total loss, whether we have war or continued peace, and, in either event, we shall have annually to expend about $500,000 to make changes and repairs on each of the largest ones to keep it in commission, and, in but a few years, as experience has recently shown, the best of them will go into the scrap pile or out of commission because out of date, or for other cause.

What I here advocate is a permanent improvement, good in peace and war, and to be maintained forever, bringing perennial prosperity and blessings to the human race; likewise to be self-supporting through traffic charges, water power, and other leases, and so forth, in addition to paying a good interest on, and most likely in time, fully reimbursing the Government for the cost thereof. The United States has already, through land grants to the State of Ohio, invested about $3,500,000 in the Miami and Eric Canal

A ship canal, it should be observed, from Lake Erie to the Ohio, would cut transversely all east and west trunk railway lines and others, and it would thus be able to deliver freight to, and to receive it from, each and all of them.

Cincinnati, on the Ohio, is the first or second; Toledo, on the lake, is the third; Dayton, on the line of the canal, is the fourth or fifth cities in population and industries in the State of Ohio, and each is an important railroad center.

PRACTICABILITY

Something more should be said here about the practicability of constructing a ship canal on the route proposed. It need not necessarily be on the exact line of the present canal. The bill undertakes to appropriate $25,000 for a preliminary survey, and for a report "as to the feasibility, advisability, and practicability of its construction, operation, and maintenance," which, of course, involves, as the bill provides, an inquiry as to there being an ample supply of water available for its successful operation. The board of engineers is therefore left to determine all these important matters before a final decision to construct the canal is made. If it is not practicable for any reason, it will not be built.

The existing Miami and Eric Canal makes the survey comparatively easy, and the question of water supply also easy of solution. This canal was completed, as already stated, in 1845, and it has since been in operation as an ordinary canal. Many parts of it are at present in good operating condition; the reservoirs are still maintained in a useful state, and others can be constructed if found necessary.

The available supply of the water has been tested in all seasons, and the capacity of all the existing reservoirs, natural lakes, and feeders of the canal have likewise been long since shown. The average quantity of annual rainfall and of available water in the rivers, and the capacity of the reservoirs and other feeders for the canal no longer have to be ascertained by mere estimates, but all these important things are now matters of knowledge and ascertained facts.

The original surveys, and a later one (1894-1896) by competent engineers will be accessible to the board of engineers, and in other ways the work of the board will be cheapened and facilitated. There is therefore little danger of mistakes in the survey. The topography of the line to be surveyed presents no serious engineering difficulties.

So far as I can learn a scarcity of water has never been suggested; on the contrary all who are possessed of skill and knowledge of the natural water supply say there will be ample water to operate and maintain a ship canal of suitable dimensions, and larger than the canal about to be constructed across New York. The competent engineers who made the 1894–1896 survey so reported, though they were only required—

To report as to the feasibility and advisability of widening such canal to 70 feet at the water line and deepening the same to 7 feet, and by constructing new locks not less than 150 feet in length and 21 feet in width, with a capacity for vessels of at least 280 tons burden.

The probable cost of the ship canal is also left to be estimated and reported by the board of engineers. A former board of engineers estimated (1896) the cost of enlarging the Miami and Erie Canal at $24,000,000. While that estimate was made for a smaller canal than the one now desired, yet it was made before modern improvements in machinery for excavation work were discovered, before steam shovels of large capacity were in use, and before experience had developed improved methods of removing and disposing of excavated material rapidly and cheaply. Little rock will be found requiring removal. The work can, with these improved methods, be accomplished in much less time than formerly and by the employment of fewer laborers and at greatly reduced cost. The experience acquired in rapidly removing the vastly more difficult deposits encountered in the construction of the Panama Canal can be availed of in enlarging the Miami and Erie Canal. Much of the machinery, such as steam shovels, engines to work them, and other important tools now so successfully used in excavation and otherwise on the Panama Canal are built at places near the Miami and Erie Canal.

It will be seen by the fourth section of the bill that in estimating the cost of the proposed canal the board is required to exclude the value of the Miami and Erie Canal, its branches, water rights and privileges, reservoirs, dams and appurtenances, and all real estate and other property, rights, and interests connected, used, and utilized therewith, owned and controlled by the State of Ohio, that can be utilized in the construction, operation, and maintenance of the ship canal. The State of Ohio will donate the Miami and Erie Canal and all its rights connected therewith, in value many millions of dollars, thereby greatly reducing the cost of the improvement. No other such opportunity to construct a ship canal of national importance is likely ever to be presented. The existing reservoirs, covering large areas, and their and other water connections are of such substantial character that there will be no danger of mistakes as to the water supply or in the manner of conserving it.

The bill provides for an appropriation to defray the expense of the board in making a preliminary survey and report. It can have the advantage in making this survey and report of original and later surveys, and hence its work can be more cheaply and speedily done. The practicability and feasibility of the proposed improvement will be more readily and accurately ascertained than if no canal had been constructed and operated over the route proposed.

The survey, already referred to, authorized by a provision in the river and harbor act of August 17, 1894, required, at an expenditure of $20,000, a board of engineers appointed by the Secretary of War to survey and report upon—

The feasibility and practicability of enlarging both the Miami and Erie and the Ohio canals and their branches and such river and stream channels as may, in their judgment, form available portions of a continuous canal connecting the waters of Lake Erie with the waters of the Ohio River through the State of Ohio.

As only local trade was mainly possible over the then contemplated enlargement of one or more of the canals, because it was not contemplated that steamboats or ships would enter it, the report of the board attracted little attention, though it reported each route examined as feasible and practicable, especially the route over the Miami and Erie Canal. This survey was actually made over three routes—an eastern, Cleveland to Marietta; a central, Sandusky Bay to Portsmouth, and a western, Toledo to Cincinnati (Miami and Erie). The board of engineers, with assistants, were engaged about two years, the cost of the survey being as stated. With but one well-defined line, though detailed plans and estimates may be required, it is believed that the survey can be made speedily and that $25,000 will suffice for the preliminary work of the board of engineers and their assistants.

Of course, the ultimate object sought is the decision to construct a ship canal in the interest of interstate and international commerce; yet there is no desire to attempt so important an improvement save after a most thorough scientific investigation, and such a one as will result in demonstrating that it can be made and successfully maintained.

The sum asked for the preliminary survey and report is comparatively small, and the passage of this bill does not commit the Federal Government to the improvement, nor to any particular plan, not even if the report required is found to be satisfactory.

On February 7, 1907, I offered an amendment to the then pending river and harbor bill, requiring a survey of the same route and a report on its practicability, utility, and cost if a ship canal could be constructed thereon. This was before the general awakening in the United States on the subject of deep waterways and their necessity to meet the present and future demands of trade and commerce.

Obviously, there is not time now or here to further even summarize the arguments, recite the facts, present the reasons, or demonstrate the necessity for interior deep waterways. it possible to here reproduce the conclusive universal testimony of our most thoughtful, scientific, experienced, and observing business men on the economic question involved and the general good that will inure to the people of our whole country if such improvements are made. The conservation of the waters now flowing wastefully to sea and lake is involved. Not only muchneeded cheap transportation but cheap power for all purposes will be secured by the proposed improvement.

The recent report (January 11, 1909) to the President, transmitted by him to both Houses of Congress January 22, 1909, of the National Conservation Commission, the outgrowth of a conference held in Washington last May, and which has had the unanimous approval of said commission and the governors of States, state conservation commissions, and committees of large organizations of eminent citizens, among other important things considered the necessity of improving inland waterways. The report on the subject says:

Within recent months it has been recognized and demanded by the people, through many thousand delegates from all States assembled in convention in different sections of the country, that the waterways should and must be improved promptly and effectively as a means of maintaining national prosperity.

President Roosevelt, in his message of transmittal, says of this part of the report:

I urge that the broad plan for the development of our waterways, recommended by the Inland Waterways Commission, be put in effect without delay. It provides for a comprehensive system of waterway improvement extending to all the uses of the waters and benefits to be derived from their control, including navigation, the development of power, the extension of irrigation, the drainage of swamp and overflow lands, the prevention of soil wash, and the purification of streams for water supply.

The work of waterway development should be undertaken without delay. Meritorious projects in known conformity with the general outlines of any comprehensive plan should proceed at once. The cost of the whole work should be met by direct appropriation if possible, but if necessary by the issue of bonds in small denominations.

From the report of this great commission on the subject of water and its conservation as particularly of interest I quote further:

The sole source of our fresh water is rainfall, including snow. From this source all running, standing, and ground waters are derived. The habitability of the country depends on these waters. Our mean annual rainfall is about 30 inches; the quantity about 215,000,000,000,000,000 cubic feet per year, equivalent to 10 Mississippi rivers.

Of the total rainfall, over half is evaporated; about a third flows into the sea; the remaining sixth is either consumed or absorbed. These portions are sometimes called, respectively, the "fly-off," the "run-off," and the "cut-off." They are partly interchangeable. About a third of the run-off, or a tenth of the entire rainfall, passes through the Mississippi. The run-off is increasing with deforestation and cultivation.

Of the 70,000,000,000,000,000 cubic feet annually flowing into the sea, less than 1 per cent is restrained and utilized for municipal and community supply; less than 2 per cent (or some 10 per cent of that in the arid and semiarid regions) is used for irrigation; perhaps 5 per cent is used for navigation, and less than 5 per cent for power.

Water is like other resources in that its quantity is limited. It differs from such mineral resources as coal and iron, which once used are gone forever, in that the supply is perpetual, and it differs from such resources as solls and forests, which are capable of renewal or improvement, in that it can not be augmented in quantity, though like all other resources it can be better utilized.

It is now recognized by statesmen and experts that navigation is interdependent with other uses of the streams; that each stream is essentially a unit from its source to the sea; and that the benefits of a comprehensive system of waterway improvement will extend to all the people in the several sections and States of the country.

It is also recognized, through the unanimous declaration of the governors of the States and Territories adopted in conference with the leading jurists and statesmen and experts of the country, that in the use of the natural resources the independent States are interdependent, and bound together by ties of mutual benefits, responsibilities, and duties.

The permanent welfare of the Nation demands that its natural rebe conserved by proper use

The National Rivers and Harbors Congress (Washington, D. C., December 9-11, 1908) by resolution recommended, among other things, that Congress should at its present session authorize the issuance of bonds * * * in such quantities as may be necessary, the proceeds thereof to be used exclusively in the payment for waterway improvements, and it further urged this Congress to adopt such new projects as are shown to be important. President Roosevelt, in his message at the opening of this session of Congress, speaking of inland waterways, said:

Until the work of river improvement is undertaken in a modern way, it can not have the results that will meet the needs of this modern Nation.

ern Nation.

These needs should be met without further dilly-dallying or delay.

President-elect Taft, in an address before the convention of the Lakes-to-the-Gulf Deep Waterway Association (October 21, 1908), among other things said:

My own judgment is that every improvement like that of the Lakes-to-the-Gulf, like that of the Ohio River, like the Atlantic Seaboard Inland Waterways, should be treated by itself as one great enterprise, just as we have treated the Panama Canal, and that provision should be made by bonds or otherwise for the setting aside of a fund sufficient to complete it as rapidly as possible.

Andrew Carnegie, in an address before the Rivers and Harbors Congress (December 9, 1908), said:

It has been proved, and it needs no more proof, no more contest; we are as certain as that the sun shall shine to-morrow that the improvement of our waterways will give back to this country tenfold the ex-

It will be noted that the President recommends that "the work of waterway development should be undertaken without delay," and that "meritorious projects in known conformity with the general outlines of any comprehensive plan should proceed at once."

But it is not my purpose to pursue here the subject of conservation of water. It is unneccessary at this late day, and besides common-sense, plain people understand its necessity without resorting to scientific investigation or erudite discussion.

The proposed Michigan and Erie Canal, connecting Lake Erie with the southern extremity of Lake Michigan, or Chicago, or both, is projected in part over the Miami and Erie Canal Toledo to near Defiance, Ohio. If this line is built it will be shorter by about 65 miles if a ship canal should be first constructed over the main line of the Miami and Erie Canal as contemplated by this bill. The Michigan and Erie Canal, if constructed, will not only be a short cut-off water transportation line from Chicago and Lake Michigan to Lake Erie and eastward, but it will become a part of a primary line extending from the waters of Lake Michigan to the Ohio River, thence by the latter and the Mississippi to the Gulf of Mexico, and connecting with the many interior points in the United States. the projected ship canals are built a vessel could sail from Chicago, laden with freight, and pass, as just indicated, to the Gulf of Mexico, and its cargo could be transported thence by water to and through the soon-to-be-completed Panama Canal to the Pacific Ocean, to Hawaii and to our Philippine island possessions, and to other parts of the Orient, and by other routes across seas to any port of the world. So as to all the many other ports of the Great Lakes, whether important or not.

It is said by some that the revenues of the Government will not allow expenditures for ship canals. There might be a curtailment as to other and less important and less pressing things. taliment as to other and less important to pay for purely present I would not mortgage the future to pay for purely present benefits, but I would leave future generations to pay a fair share of the cost of improvements they are to enjoy. This and share of the cost of improvements they are to enjoy. This and a recent generation have borne the burden of the battles for the preservation of the Union and the expense thereof, and they have otherwise builded for the future. By wise planning and building in this generation we will secure to ourselves and the millions to come after us blessings commensurate with the demands of trade and commerce.

The founder in England of Sabbath schools said he "builded for eternity," having reference, doubtless, to the temporal as well as the spiritual good that was to be attained thereby. If we build now on a scale certain to meet our own present pressing necessities and to anticipate the growing wants of the generations to succeed us, we will, at least, build for eternity in a material sense. By thus building we will surely advance our own civilization, promote our general prosperity and happiness, and transmit the same blessings to those who are to succeed us.

We can not now stop in our progressive course and rapid growth in population, with its corresponding requirements, and in our material advancement and refuse to maintain and to adequately sustain them; nor can we falter in answering the de-mands of our high civilization, which has been attained largely-through recent and marvelous discoveries in science and art and by a universal education of our people mentally, morally, and religiously; nor do we dare "mark time" as a nation while the other great nations of the world "quickstep" to accomplish all that is possible to outstrip our free Republic.

France, Germany, and other European countries have long led in canal improvements by expending millions, and Canada, on our north, has already projected a ship canal from Georgian Bay to Toronto, to improve its interior and to control and short-cut commerce.

We are leading the way in building the Panama Canal to short-cut the commerce of the world from the Atlantic to the Pacific Ocean, and this at an ultimate cost of probably $300,-000,000, a sum quite adequate to construct many interior ship canals such as is here proposed, although the immediate and prospective benefits to be derived by our people from the Panama Canal are hardly likely ever to be equal to the benefits that would come from the canal I here advocate.

The fact that this Republic will own and operate the Panama Canal when completed augments the necessity for an open waterway from the Lakes on the north through the interior of our country by which commerce to and from all parts of the earth may go and come.

We are prone to minimize our own commercial transactions, especially those of the interior of the country of the more local kind, and to regard only ocean ports as of great and national importance. A few statistics would suffice to show that our interior transportation transactions by rail principally, or by water, far exceeds those on the high seas, and that those on the Lakes and navigable rivers alone are equal, if not in excess, of those of the Atlantic Ocean and of the Gulf of Mexico. The tonnage carried through the Straits of St. Clair to, from, and by, the city of Detroit, Mich., far exceeds that which enters and departs from New York Harbor.

There is, however, no necessity for pursuing a comparative commercial or business history of the different sections of our country.

Representatives of western and interior States have uniformly voted annually large appropriations for harbor improvements on the sea and Gulf coasts, and they will continue to do so in the interest of interstate commerce regardless of local benefits, and they only expect and now appeal for reciprocal appropriations in a like interest. The commerce clause of the Constitution, already quoted, grants to Congress the right to regulate commerce over fresh as well as salt water.

Surrounded as the States of this Union and the continental Territories thereof are by ocean, gulf, and lake, forming a coast line one and one-third the distance around the earth at the equator, on which are many great commercial cities with important harbors, yet its principal industries and activities are mainly interior, and for want of reasonably cheap and ample interstate and foreign transportation facilities they are now checked and in a large sense paralyzed. The most extensive lumber-producing forests; the richest soil and the most productive agricultural lands; the largest deposits of coal, iron, and other mineral deposits; many of the most populous and most enterprising cities and a very large part of the most desirable manufacturing and other enterprises are in the interior of the country, inaccessible by sea, or by lake alone, yet nature has provided therein an abundant water supply for adequate navigation facilities if we do not lie supinely by and allow it to go to wanton waste.

The interior of our country is now much like an unhatched egg, ready to burst its shell, needing only vigor to do so. The ship canal I advocate will become an artery for the circulation of the now stagnated business life of the Nation, and it will contribute largely to that vigor essential to its early bursting forth and to giving a new prosperity and a full-fledged life to our constitutional union of States.

A few words only as to how the expenditures for such improvements are to be provided for and I am done.

Already a bill has been introduced for the issue of $500,000,000 of 2 per cent coupon or registered bonds of the United States as required and necessary, not exceeding $50,000,000 per year in denominations of $20 or some multiple thereof, payable after ten years and to mature thirty years from their date. This accords with the President's plan already referred to, and contemplates an early entering upon the work also urged by him. That bill should be promptly passed.

Another bill has been introduced to create "a waterways commission," to exist three years, composed of four members of each House of Congress and seven others appointed by the President "to investigate questions pertaining to water transportation and improvement of waterways, and to suggest to Congress such legislation as it may deem best upon these subjects," its annual expenditures to be $100,000 besides the salaries of its members—not Government officials—at $4,000 each per year and their traveling expenses. The wisdom of creating such a commission I do not now care to comment on at length. It at least should not have the effect of further postponing an improvement of obvious and pressing importance.

The three years' delay that would result from such a commission and the cost thereof, reaching about $500,000, might be time and money misspent, and serious doubts arise as to whether its report would furnish anything new or any information at all on which Congress would or could act. The money expended would pay the expense of 20 such surveys, with detailed plans and estimates of the kind contemplated over the line of the Miami and Eric Canal, each of which would give Congress exact information of substantial value, while the commission is only required to "suggest to Congress such legislation as it might deem best."

Congress does not want mere suggestions—they are seldom acted on here—it wants concrete facts. Further, mere superficial surveys and speculative reports will prove, as in the past, to be vain, and to only further postpone the long-needed improvement of waterways for the purpose of navigation.

Unless separate, well-defined projects are agreed upon, each on its own merits, there will be nothing accomplished. Owing to the diversity of interests and remoteness of location of the many proposed projects no united general plan will be possible. Those who are lukewarm toward or who are opposed to deepwaterway improvements are likely to advocate commissions and universal plans which will result in no such improvements being made. If many projects are coupled together, all will inevitably fail. If it were even possible to agree upon a general plan of improving waterways, including the many proposed projects, the construction of each could not be prosecuted at the same time and all would fail, or at least be delayed in completion beyond the time when this generation of people could possibly hope to enjoy any benefits therefrom. No two projects are of equal merit or promise the same measure of relief. I implore Congress to act speedily in favor of the most central and, I believe, the most important waterway improvement yet suggested, and this I do in the name of the 100,000,000 of our people whose interests and prosperity would be promoted thereby. [Loud applause.]

Mr. LAMB. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Ansberry].

Mr. ANSBERRY. Mr. Chairman, I listened with attention to the able argument of my distinguished colleague [General Keifer] and was instructed and entertained by him. I am much interested in the proposed legislation, for the very good reason that this waterway traverses the district that I have the honor to represent, and its enlargement is of vital interest to the great State of Ohio. Then, again, on the 16th of December, 1907, I introduced a resolution appropriating sufficient funds to procure a survey and report as to the practicability of canalizing the Maumee River from Toledo, Ohio, to its headwaters at Fort Wayne, Ind., and thence to construct a canal large enough to accommodate lake freighters to a point on Lake Michigan opposite the city of Chicago. Many other similar resolutions were introduced, and all were referred to the Committee on Railways and Canals, and, after numerous hearings, this committee, on the 12th day of May, 1908, reported favorably on the resolution of Mr. Gilhams, of Indiana, and recommended the appropriation of $100,000 to procure a survey of the route and a report as to its feasibility. Since that time the House has taken no action, and the bill is on the calendar awaiting the decision of those in authority as to whether or not it will be passed upon by the House or, at noon of March 4, when this Congress expires by reason of law it, too, will pass to that bourne from whence no good bill ever returns.

I desire, while there is yet time, to add my testimony as to why this measure should be favorably disposed of. This country is committed to a policy of internal improvement of existing and the construction of new inland waterways. This is evidenced by the public statements and official utterances of those whose duty it is to voice the needs of the country. The President of the United States and the chief executives of all of the other States of the Union who have been heard on this allimportant subject are favorably disposed toward it. Then, again, the recent Deep-Waterways Convention, held in Washington in December last and which had delegates from every State in the Union, voiced the sentiments of the people they represented, and without a dissenting voice they recorded themselves as favorable to a scheme of improvement of waterways the cost of which staggers the imagination. So that it can be conceded that it is our fixed policy as a nation. This question having been disposed of, the next questions to be determined are the important ones of obtaining the money necessary to do this great work and the selection of the different proposed waterways to be improved. These propositions at first blush would seem to be almost insurmountable, but a little reflection will unquestionably dispose of both these apparently immovable obstacles.

These great public improvements are, of course, for the benefit of posterity, not that they will not be of value to the present generation, but the largest and greatest beneficiaries will be generations yet unborn, and of course those generations should help pay the cost. At our present pace we are expending a little more than our income, and quite naturally at this rate it would be a problem to provide the $500,000,000 necessary to carry on this work. We can sell bonds to that amount from time to time, as they are necessary, bearing interest at 2 per cent, and then the annual charge would be but $10,000,000 per year, a mere pittance when we take into consideration the annual creation of new wealth and the savings in transportation effected by these improvements. Then again, if we are willing as a people to issue bonds to build the Panama Canal, in which we are no more vitally interested than any of the other great world powers, for stronger reasons we should be willing to sell bonds for the promotion of the prosperity of our own people. As to the order of taking up these propositions, it seems to me that we can safely proceed to procure a survey, which requires the expenditure of but a small amount of money, comparatively speaking, and then from the reports of the engineers and the comparative necessity or good that the proposed canal or improvement will accomplish, determine the order in which construction will be begun.

With reference to the two propositions that I desire to be heard on I am willing to leave the merit of them to this House or a committee of this House, knowing full well that their merits can not be questioned by any one honestly desiring to ascertain truth.

Mr. Chairman, canals have been used as a means of transportation as far back as history takes us. During the rapid development of this country railroads have, to a great extent, superseded and taken the place of canals, and in the minds of many people canals, for practical use, have become obsolete. During the last few years, however, people most interested in the ways and means of transportation have again turned their thoughts to the development and improvement of waterways. It is agreed by these people that to make a waterway adequate and profitable it must not only be large enough to accommodate the present traffic on its line, but must anticipate the increasing traffic and size of vessels for the next twenty-five years.

I wish to call your attention to a few of the possibilities which nature offers for the construction of such a waterway between Lake Erie and Lake Michigan. Leaving Lake Erie at Toledo, following up the Maumee River by slack-water navigation to a point near the state line of Indiana; thence across the northern part of Allen County to a chain of lakes which cross the summit in Indiana; from the western end of these lakes down Turkey Creek to the Elkhart River; down Elkhart River to Goshen, Ind., at which place it would leave Elkhart River and follow parallel with it to the city of Elkhart; thence south of the Big St. Joe to South Bend; from this point across to Michigan City, which is 20 miles across Lake Michigan to the city of Chicago.

Anticipating the construction of a canal between Lake Erie and Lake Michigan, in 1829 surveys were made by Mr. Stanberry, United States engineer. The route selected by him was from Lake Michigan, through the Kankakee swamp, by way of the Tippecanoe to the Wabash River; thence by way of Wabash and Maumee rivers to Lake Erie. The only data that I have been able to obtain as the result of Mr. Stanberry's work are a few elevations given by him on this route.

This work was again taken up in 1833, when two lines were run from Lake Michigan; one by the Kankakee to the Wabash River, at the mouth of the Tippecanoe; the other from Michigan City, by way of the Big St. Joseph and the Elkhart rivers, to Fort Wayne.

As a result of these surveys the Indiana legislature, at its session in 1836 and 1837, authorized the construction of a canal from Michigan City to Fort Wayne. This will be referred to further on in this article.

During later years some attention has been given to a route through southern Michigan from some point on Lake Erie or the Detroit River to Lake Michigan.

It will be evident that a discussion of this question involves everything north of the Wabash and Maumee rivers between

The elevation at Lake Erie is 573 feet above tide water. following the route of the old Wabash Canal from Toledo to the the Tippecanoe River, we would cross the first summit at Fort Wayne, where it was 194 feet above Lake Erie; from there down the Wabash to the mouth of the Tippecanoe, it descends until we find the junction of the Wabash and Tippecanoe rivers 57 feet below Lake Erie. Passing back up the canoe we find the divide between it and the Kankakee 137 feet above Lake Erie, while the Kankakee at this point is 87 feet above Lake Erie, with the lowest summit between the Kankakee and the Calumet 144 feet above Lake Erie, while Lake Michigan is only 12 feet above Lake Erie. There is no point at which it would be possible to carry a canal across the country from the Wabash to the Kankakee swamp, between Fort Wayne and the mouth of the Tippecanoe River.

It will be seen by looking at the map that this route is much longer than the one I have mapped out.

I have not given the careful attention to the routes through Michigan that I have been able to give to the territory in Ohio and Indiana, but I find that it would be necessary through one of the three southern tiers of counties in Michigan in order to avoid the watersheds leading to the Saginaw Bay.

The highest summits which form the watershed between Lake Erie and Lake Michigan start in at the northern part of Hillsdale County; we find by taking 11 points on the railroads in this county that the average is 518 feet above Lake Erie. The average elevations in Jackson County are 441 feet above Lake Erie. It will be seen from this that the watershed in southern Michigan can not be crossed without reaching elevations of at least 450 feet above Lake Erie, and the chances for maintaining water supply on this summit are very hazardous.

The drainage from this territory would naturally be toward the southwest, but the surface being so nearly level, it has found its way toward the northwest and southeast.

The early surveys through this territory were of necessity made without reference to such careful study of the topography of this country as has been given to it during the last forty

The route selected for the canal which was authorized by the Indiana state legislature started in at Michigan City; thence across to South Bend, following up the St. Joseph River to the Elkhart, keeping up the Elkhart River and crossing the town-ships of Perry, York, Green, and Swan, in Noble County. It is said that over $200,000 were spent upon this work in Noble County. The gentlemen who were principally interesting themselves in this work during this time became interested in railroad enterprises between Chicago and Fort Wayne, which may have had something to do with the abandonment of this work. It will also be seen that the State of Indiana had authorized the construction of a ship canal through its territory, ending at Fort Wayne, Ind., where it would intersect with the old Wabash Canal, where they were entirely dependent upon any action taken by the State of Ohio.

In 1839 at least 40 per cent of Noble County was waste land, the principal part of which was covered by water. The line proposed by the Indiana legislature is 20 feet higher than the route which I propose 15 miles south of it, which is accessible by leaving the Elkhart River at the junction of Elkhart River and Turkey Creek, following up Turkey Creek to a point in Jackson Township, Elkhart County. At this point the creek takes a circuitous route for about 16 miles, it being only 4 miles across at the nearest bends. We would cut across at this point, coming into Turkey Creek again 5 miles from Syracuse Lake, following up the creek to Syracuse Lake, through Syracuse Lake and Turkey Creek into Turkey Lake. Turkey Lake is 9 miles long and of an average width of a mile and three-fourths. and of an average depth of about 85 feet. Following the length of this lake and through a series of 15 small lakes extending southeast from Turkey Lake along the Tippecanoe River, varying in size from 40 to 700 acres. These lakes include Little Turkey Lake, Loon Lake, Tippecanoe Lake, Crooked Lake, Cedar and Round lakes. Syracuse, Turkey, and Little Turkey lakes have their outlets through Turkey Creek and down the Big St. The rest of these lakes have their outlets through Joe River. the Tippecanoe River to the Wabash. The divide between these chains of lakes is a marsh, which is not elevated more than 10

Blue Lake, at the eastern end of this chain of lakes, is several feet lower than this chain of lakes, and has its outlet through Blue River to Eel River, thence to the Wabash. This lake is surrounded by high hills, and, in my opinion, it can be brought to a level with the chain of lakes just described. This chain of lakes comprises the summit level of what I propose as the Erie and Michigan Canal. They extend for 26 miles across the summit of Indiana, being on an average 298 feet above Lake Erie, which would give the summit level of this canal an average width of 2,500 feet and an average depth of 60 feet. At least 12 feet of this summit level can be used for reservoir purposes. To this level can be brought the water from three-fourths of Noble, two-thirds of Steuben, one-fourth of Lagrange, three townships in Kosciusko, and two townships in Whitley County. This territory would comprise over 500,000 The northern part of this territory is on an average 165 feet above the summit level, and has scattered over it more than 100 lakes, varying in size from 20 to 800 acres, all of which are accessible for reservoir purposes, and from 12 to 40 feet of their water at its present level can be brought to the summit level of this canal. Within 10 miles of either end of the summit level of this route, and from there on down, many times more than enough additional water can be supplied to provide for the leakage, evaporation, absorption, and the extra lockage in such a canal.

The average annual rainfall in this territory for eighteen years is 37.90 inches. One-seventh of this rainfall on the 50,000 acres tributary to this summit level would furnish suffi-cient water to operate the canal, having locks 400 feet long and 45 feet wide, once every ten minutes during the year. It would be impossible to take up the details of the question of the water supply further, but my investigations have gone far enough to convince me that the supply is abundant.

From Blue Lake we make a cut east into Eel River Township, Allen County, following Willow Creek to the gorge of Cedar Creek, down this gorge to the St. Joe River; thence across to the Maumee River, at a point near the state line.

From this point down to Lake Erie there are two practicable routes-slack-water navigation by the Maumee River, or the route of the old Wabash Canal, which at the state line is within half a mile of the south bank of the Maumee River. The bed of the old Wabash Canal at the state line is 177 feet above Lake Erie, while low water in the Maumee River is 140 feet. It would be possible to carry this canal across the Maumee River down the bed of the old Wabash Canal to the junction, where it intersects with the present Miami and Erie Canal; from there down the Miami and Erie Canal to Defiance, where we would utilize the slack-water navigation in the Maumee River to

If it seems preferable, the Maumee River can be used from the point at which this canal would cross by the way of Defiance to Toledo.

In order to give a practical idea of the elevations on this line, I will state that the summit level is not quite as high as the observatory on the top of the Masonic Temple in Chicago, and but a few feet higher than the water tower of the waterworks in Toledo, the lake at Chicago being 12 feet above the lake at It would require but little work, other than dredging, to make the Maumee River from Toledo to the foot of the rapids navigable for large vessels. It will be necessary to lock around the rapids to the slack water of the Providence dam. Raising this dam 6 feet and some dredging will give sufficient slack water in the Maumee River to make that river navigable for large vessels from such dam to a point 2 miles above Napoleon. From this point it would be necessary to enlarge the present canal to a point 2 miles below the present Independence dam, at which place a dam can be constructed to raise the slack water of the Independence dam 5 feet higher than its present level, which would furnish slack-water navigation above the mouth of the Tiffin River west of the city of Defiance. Three more dams and the necessary dredging to straighten and deepen the Maumee River would furnish slack-water navigation to a point 2 miles above the east Indiana state line. It will be seen that this route proposes to furnish slack water and lake navigation for more than half of the distance between Toledo and Michigan City, by the use of which it will not be necessary to restrict the speed of boats.

To secure a 20-foot channel on this route there is no rock work between Toledo and Michigan City, excepting that at the Providence rapids. For anything over that it would be necessary to make the additional excavations out of the rock for 6 miles down the Maumee from the point at which this canal would enter it. The other excavations are confined to drift and wash.

And now a few words as to the Miami and Erie Canal, which connects Lake Erie and the Ohio River or, at least, extends from Toledo, Ohio, on Lake Erie, to the heart of the city of Cincinnati, Ohio, and which by a bill introduced by my colleague [General Keifer] proposes to eventually connect these two great natural arteries of commerce by the improvement of the Miami and Erie Canal. This canal was begun on the 21st day of May, 1825, and was finally completed to Lake Erie in 1845, at a cost of a little over $8,000,000, and its real-estate value alone is now worth many times the cost of construction and maintenance, and is 244 miles long. In passing, I might add that it was the realization of a scheme that both Washington and Jefferson seriously proposed early in the century. From this source it gradually widened and finally, through a grant of 1,230,521 acres of land by the National Government, private subscription, and state aid, the canal was built; so you see the National Government has a large equity in this waterway, and inasmuch as it would be a part of a great international waterways system it is but meet and proper that it should enter into the general scheme of internal waterway improvement. I am sure that the State would willingly turn this property back to the National Government so that there would be no question on that score. The State of Ohio is not and will not permit herself to be put in the position of a mendicant. We are not asking alms; we simply desire the Federal Government to take this canal and use it in the enlargement of the two great waterways that it controls, and we are not trying to unload a white elephant, for our canals for years were self-sustaining and, more than that, they had accumulated a surplus when the State made the monumental mistake in 1861 in leasing the canals of the State of Ohio to a private corporation, which went into effect when the canals were in a prosperous condition and which marked the beginning of their downfall.

The annual rental was fixed at $20,075, despite the fact that for many years, except during the business stagnation in the years immediately preceding the lease, the income over all expenditures from the canals exceeded the expenditures, including the cost of maintenance, nearly $12,000,000. The Miami and Erie Canal traverses as rich and beautiful a country as exists anywhere upon God's footstool. [Applause.] In the beginning, and before the time of the railroad, it was very successfully used for the transportation of all kinds of merchandise as well as passengers, and it aided materially in developing this great country that it flows through, and the little trading posts along the route have developed into great manufacturing centers. Hamilton, Dayton, Middletown, Franklin, Troy, Piqua, Sidney, St. Marys, Celina, Delphos, Melrose, Charloe, Defiance, Napoleon, Florida, Grand Rapids, and its terminus at Toledo all have been helped materially by the canal, and all can be aided in the future in solving the transportation problems that confront their manufacturers and shippers as well as the consumers who live in these and other places and the country contiguous to them along this canal; and, of course, if you help the local people it follows that you materially aid the people scattered all over our broad land with whom they have business relations. So with this existing canal, with a watershed that has countless millions of gallons of surplus water in the driest of seasons, connecting up with the other proposed route that I first spoke of, at Defiance, for Fort Wayne and Chicago, and easterly from Defiance of the now existing canal to Toledo, with millions of industrious people to serve in transporting the products of their fertile farms and their busy factories, there is every reason why this should be one of the very first propositions to be started; but, of course, nothing can be done until a survey is had, and it needs but the consent of this House, expressed by the passing of the resolu-tions of my colleague [General Keifer] and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. GILHAMS], to bring this about.

But, to continue, eminent authorities have examined and passed judgment on these propositions. Mr. M. E. Ingalls, who has probably done as much for Cincinnati as anybody in it, who has revived the old Chesapeake and Ohio Railroad, who revived the Big Four Road, competing from Cincinnati north with the Miami and Erie Canal, has expressed similar views. Railroad men naturally favor canal construction, because they can not afford with profit to carry the short-haul freight, but can carry at a profit the long haul, the finished product.

The great advantages of the western route are its superior water supply, its important terminal points, and the magnitude of its local traffic. [See Exhibit J.] Its principal drawbacks are its length, lockage, and original cost. A consideration of importance in favor of this route arises from its relation to the old Wabash and Erie route, and particularly to the project advanced many years ago, and lately being brought forward again, to connect the west end of Lake Erie with the southern end of Lake Michigan. The junction of this route with the Miami and Erie Canal is a little south of Defiance, in the Maumee Valley. Whatever doubt may exist as to its value as against the lake route between Chicago and Lake Erie points, there can be no doubt that as part of the route from the Ohio River to the southern end of Lake Michigan it may yet be of much importance. For instance, coal en route to Chicago would have the following advantage in time by the canal route over that by the Lakes: From Defiance Junction to Chicago by way of Fort Wayne there are 140 miles of canal, 420 feet of lockage, and 38 miles of lake, making an equivalent of forty-eight and three-tenths hours time. By way of Toledo the canal distance would be 64 miles, lockage 150 feet, lake distance 691 miles, and time one hundred and thirty-three and six-tenths hours. The possible development of such a line is a point in favor of the Miami and Erie route, and in the present surveys the existing line through Defiance was for this reason adhered to, although a saving in distance of 15 miles could be secured by cutting across the angle between the Augiaize and the Maumee rivers.

Let me cite you, without reading it, page 69 of this same re-

Let me cite you, without reading it, page 69 of this same report, in which the paragraph begins:

It is a recognized fact among the best railroad authorities that free water competition, instead of being a detriment to the railroads, is a benefit to them. The classes of freight that can be carried most economically by water are those that are carried with least profit by the railroads.

I have here a newspaper clipping of my dear old friend Murat Halstead, which I shall, with your permission, read into the RECORD, because Murat Halstead was a thinker:

With the canals of Ohlo made ship canals, especially if one of them—the one of the Miamis—we could compete successfully in the transportation of iron and coal and wheat with marvelous advantage, especially to the State of Ohio. The cost of converting the almost abandoned and despised canals, making them equivalent to the navigation of the Ohio, would not be half the sum that would be demanded for the enlargement of the Erie Canal, and we would truly want two ship channels across the State.

Now, Mr. Chairman, answering your question directly, let me read you what is said by Lyman E. Cooley, who is a greater authority than I am or ever dared to be, because I quote him as my authority. I wrote him a letter, and he replied, highly commending it, and I want to quote this:

As part of my studies of a related deep-waterway system, I have become familiar, in a general way, with the available water routes across the State of Ohlo between Lake Erie and the Ohlo River, and in 1902 I addressed the joint assembly, advocating that the state waterways be retained until such time as their relation to a waterway system could

From all the information which I have gathered, I believe it to be feasible to produce a water supply sufficient to feed a waterway 16 feet deep by the Miami and Erie route.

The good to be derived from the construction of such a waterway would be the further development and improvement of the territory immediately along the line of such a canal by giving it better facilities for navigation, drainage, and water power. Other and greater reasons for the construction of such a waterway would be the shortening of the distance between Lake Erie and the southern end of Lake Michigan to 204 miles, whereas it is now 820 miles (a difference of 616 miles), giving the Government a waterway between Lake Michigan and Lake Erie wholly within the territory of the United States, and the lengthening of the season of navigation at least one-third. The money now invested in vessels, docks, and other facilities for lake navigation, which would be brought into use one-third longer during the year than they are at the present time, is at least five times the amount necessary for the construction and completion of such a waterway.

Time forbids a further discussion of the details of this route or the many reasons that might be given for its adoption in preference to the other routes which have been under consideration.

It would be idle to discuss the details of the question of cost until the most careful surveys have been made and accurate data obtained, but it is sufficient to say, in regard to cost, that this route offers water connection between Lake Michigan and Lake Erie at the lowest possible expenditure of money.

Mr. Lyman E. Cooley, in referring to this project, said:

At that time I discovered that the existing commerce of the Great Lakes was 29½ per cent, measured in ton-miles, of all the railways of the United States; that the domestic commerce of the United States the United States; that the domestic commerce of the United States carried by water was about 87 per cent (in ton-miles) of that carried by all the railroads; that the over-sea tonnage, measured in ton-miles, of commodities in the foreign trade was about 123 per cent of that of all the railroads of the United States, and that the aggregate service of water to the United States as a means of transportation was about 2.1 times of that by rail. That is sufficient reason to justify consideration of these matters.

We want to join up with that maelstrom of commerce, Chicago; we want to hitch up with Fort Wayne, that enterprising town which I am always pleased to visit; we want to see not only canal boats of 75 tons, we want to see the large canal boat that can be loaded at Duluth, can be taken to Toledo, to Cincinnati, to the Ohio River, and on to the South. I may be a dreamer. dreamer discovered America; a dreamer made the steam engine; a dreamer made electricity. We all scoff at the dreamer while he dreams, but when he is dead we build on his dreams and the world, after all, in its great progress, its great advancement, in its vast achievements, is the fruit of dreams. [Applause.]

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I wish to yield twenty-five minutes to the gentleman from Porto Rico [Mr. LARRINAGA].

Mr. LARRINAGA. Mr. Chairman, I rise to make a few remarks on a point connected with the tariff. Four years ago I introduced a bill, which was referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, in order that Congress should place a tariff on coffee. Coffee is the poor man's industry: it is the poor man's crop. When it was known that I had introduced such a bill the most important newspapers in this country came out with long articles opposing the measure. I think I answered satisfactorily every one of their arguments. The question was dropped for the time being, because we Porto Ricans thought that it was not fair to ask Congress to take up at that time the subject of the revision of the tariff to protect our industry, although it was the most important problem of the island. But now the time has come when Congress has taken up that question. On November 19 the people representing the coffee interest of Porto Rico and of Hawaii appeared before the Committee on Ways and Means and asked for a duty of no less than 5 cents on coffee. The arguments there presented seemed to have impressed favorably the general public.

The same papers which four years ago had gone to the extreme in deprecating my views of the matter all came out with not only pays ten millions taxes to Brazil, but also a much articles which, in general, seemed to approve the action of Congress in case it saw fit to impose a duty on coffee. For about a month things went that way. I expected, nevertheless, that the interests which were to suffer by the measure would come out in opposition. They had experienced what a man experiences when he receives a blow. Reaction was to be expected, and reaction came; and they are now out in full force, bringing forth every argument they can devise, and even abusing those who are in favor of the measure.

Mr. Chairman, I believe that it is a fact worthy of notice that those on the field opposing the measure, trying to prevent Congress from getting from forty to fifty million dollars of revenue for the Federal Treasury, are not the consumers. when I am heard to have mentioned this fact, we will see some articles in the press signed "Consumers" or something to that effect; but the fact of the matter is that those who are in the field up to present time are only coffee dealers and a few in number. It seems that a large number of them are patriotic enough to see that there is no better or easier way of bringing from forty to fifty millions into the Federal Treasury than by putting a duty on an article which is about the only one of general use that is not taxed—and one, which, after all, enters for a small quantity in table expenses, for at the present day no more than 103 pounds per capita was used during the last year in the United States. I know some of them who I esteem to be amongst the very best men I have known-honest men who will give you their data and furnish the information you desire.

I believe, Mr. Chairman, that you could find amongst them some millionaires who, although having become such by reason of the free coffee, would yet be willing to admit that a duty on coffee is right. There are a number of dealers who do not feel like opposing the measure and are looking at the fight and sim-You have only to look over the list of coffee dealers ply smile. to find quite a number of millionaires. They are, as a rule, self-made men; they were poor when they began, so I wish to again affirm that I do not mean any reflection on that class. But I am trying to present my arguments, and I am sorry to say that those arguments will have to be against a few coffee dealers who are every day flooding the press with fallacious They have plenty of money with which to carry on arguments. that work. These writers offer three arguments, First, the old

Do not tax the poor man's breakfast table.

There are a good many notions, Mr. Chairman, that have existed for many years in the public mind, without having any shadow of truth that will warrant their existence, and much less their finding favor with intelligent men.

You will find such a false notion repeated every day in every branch of human activity. I could present to you, if I had the time, many of them, even in science—notions empty of significance, devoid of all sense of truth—and when you can find them in science how could you not expect to find them in everyday life? But of all these wrong notions, I have not seen-I have not heard of one that would compare with the old slogan, "Do not tax the poor man's breakfast table." And why should Is it because coffee is the one article used by all poor you not? men? Not at all. I know some poor men who use tea instead of coffee, but nobody can show me a poor man who does not use sugar, and sugar is taxed. You can not show me a poor man who does not use wheat, and wheat is taxed. Sugar, I omitted to say, the poor man uses not only in his coffee and in his tea, but also uses it in his cake, in his pie, in his pudding, in his candy, and so forth. For every pound of coffee the poor man uses he uses 7 pounds of sugar, and sugar is not mentioned as sacred. There is no crime in taxing sugar, there is no crime in taxing wheat, there is no crime in taxing everything else that the poor man uses on his breakfast table but there is crime in taxing his coffee.

There is no crime in taxing the crockery that the poor man uses on his table. There is no crime in taxing the pine wood of which his table is made, while the mahogany table, of which the rich man's table is made, comes in free of duty. It seems, Mr. Chairman, that there is a mystery in this affair. Some newspapers have gone as far as saying, "Do not lay your hands on the sacred breakfast table of the poor man," or something to that effect. I never heard a more foolish notion. In the poor man's breakfast everything is taxed, including coffee, because, Mr. Chairman, no poor man in America has ever had a sip of free coffee in his life. As soon as Congress, in 1872, took the tax from coffee the foreign nations producing coffee placed a duty on it that the poor man is paying to-day. Why do they not tell the truth to the poor man? They speak to him of his free breakfast table, which is really but a myth. The poor man larger tax to the coffee dealers over and above a reasonable When the poor man gets through his breakfast he takes to his only enjoyment, his smoke. The solitary farmer in his little house pulls out his pipe and his tobacco, that weed that allows him to send up volumes of smoke in holocaust to the Treasury of his country. He pays to the Treasury for that weed 350 per cent of the cost of production, or 35 cents a pound. There is no crime in that, Mr. Chairman. He is only too happy. If you look at him you will see that at that moment he is the happiest man in existence, even though he knows he is paying that tax.

Mr. Chairman, it would be an endless task to continue on that argument. I now want to take up the second argument presented against the duty on coffee, which is that the colonies never could produce sufficient coffee for the consumption of the Nation. In the first place, sugar has been protected for many years, and it does not produce to-day one-third of the quantity necessary for the Nation.

The Philippine Islands produced a large amount of coffee in The Porto Rico crop reached 60,000,000 pounds, the old times. and with a little help it will go to two hundred million, and Hawaii about the same. And let me tell you that there are many, many important questions connected with this coffee culture in the outlying territory which I have no time to treat.

Porto Rico and Hawaii within a very short time would supply one-third of the whole consumption of the United States, and the Philippine Islands eight times the quantity necessary to supply the United States consumption, not merely according to my study of the matter or my opinion, but according to the opinion of the American experts who went there six or eight years ago to study those islands. According to those data only ten of the twelve hundred islands could produce 8,000,000,000 pounds of coffee; and, according to their opinion also, the best coffee that could be found in any country. You can find this informa-tion in volume XII of the Cyclopedia Americana. Our opponents object to that by saying that Porto Rico and Hawaii will never furnish the necessary coffee; that the Philippine Islands is a dead dog as far as coffee production is concerned.

It is true, Mr. Chairman, as I have said before, that the bountiful production of coffee in the Philippine Islands is dead. Really the Philippine Islands is a dead dog in this proposition. Hawaii is a dying dog, and Porto Rico is a pretty sick dog as to the matter of coffee production. But in that way, Mr. Chairman, if a power, a trust, legislation, or money go destroying producers, and then calling them dead dogs and offering them as arguments, they might count the latter by the number of dead dogs they will be able to strew their path

Mr. Chairman, I should like to have a little time to touch upon a very important point, and that is with regard to the population of Hawaii and Porto Rico in connection with coffee culture, which, by the way, is the only culture that in Porto Rico and Hawaii a white man takes to. If you want to have in the Hawaiian Islands a pure white population and not Asiatic or other, develop your coffee production and bring in your Portuguese immigrants or some similar race. They will go up to those mountains and produce a great quantity of excellent coffee for consumption in the United States in the same way that we are doing and will do more and more every day in Porto Rico, and you will build up there a Caucasian population who will fight for their homes when the time comes, and not coolies, who will not fight for the sugar plants nor for their boarding houses. [Applause.]

The third argument, Mr. Chairman, that I will also be obliged to touch in the same cursory way is an argument that is used as a kind of scarecrow. It is alleged that Congress should not put a duty on coffee, because somebody is going to make a whole lot of millions by speculating with the tariff, and that as soon as some people find out that Congress is going to do it, they are going to wire to Brazil and Holland and bring in the 7,000,000 bags of coffee that are in storage there and in Europe. Even admitting that Congress would not take some measure that will prevent such speculation, which I hope it does, that speculation is not such an easy thing to carry out unless they are willing to take chances and begin right away.

Seven million bags of coffee of 60 kilograms each, or 132 pounds, make 462,000 tons, which would require about 200 steamers of the average capacity of the regular steamers and tramp German boats engaged in that trade. These 200 ships free at a given moment to go to Rio de Janeiro and Santos, Holland, France, Spain, and so forth, to bring that coffee, if they could be found, would require an average of about two months from the time they are chartered to the date of their arrival in New York. By wiring all over the world this fleet could not be ready to load at the Brazilian port before a month. With the most dexterous work and active measures not one-fourth of that coffee could be brought in time to carry out the scheme, and yet some wise writer says that the whole stock is within a week's time of New York, trusting that the Members of Congress do not know any better. A rapid glance at the report of the Commissioner of Navigation for the year 1906 will convince the most skeptical of the accuracy of my statement and of the material impossibility of bringing that enormous quantity of freight at a short notice. Of course, some speculation will be done, and not only on coffee, but on almost every article touched by the This was the case when the reciprocity treaty between the Hawaiian Islands was before Congress in 1876. The same speculation took place when the Porto Rico bill was being framed in Congress in 1900. The same happens in every country in the world whenever an economic measure of this kind is to be taken. But in the present case, with the great dearth of shipping facilities and the time that the tramp steamers take from New York to Santos (twenty-two days), not onefourth part of the valorized coffee could leave the Brazilian port and reach New York in time to come in free and have the benefit of the tariff. Are the speculators going to take chances before they have a reasonable assurance of what Congress is going to do? Are they going to know what will be the amount of the duty, if any? Can they go blindly at it without knowing the amount of the duty? Are the Brazilian holders going to let them have options at the current prices without asking for their corresponding share in the deal? I know, Mr. Chairman, that they are aware of these difficulties, and they are counting on the European stock mainly.

In their argument designed to prevent Congress from putting on the duty they swell the figures so that, according to them, they are going to gather all the stock they have both in Brazil and in Europe and bring it all in in one day and make $77,000,000 out of it. No such a thing, Mr. Chairman. are only about 7,000,000 bags of which they can dispose at a given moment, of which they could not bring in time more than one-third, or about 2,333,000 bags. It is a very liberal admission to allow that they are going to make $6 on each bag. That would only make, in round figures, $14,000,000. These Brazilians, who are very intelligent and a wide-awake people, are not going to give them their coffee at the current price at which they are getting it now. Many of these gentlemen, who are going to try the scheme at the last moment, are the same people who are opposing a tariff on coffee.

But, Mr. Chairman, is it not better to let them have these fourteen millions, if they can get them, than to send them every two years twenty millions, as we have done for the last thirty-six years, and will continue to do if the duty is not placed. The American people are paying from eight to ten millions into the treasuries of several coffee-producing countries which have an export duty on that article, which ought to go into that building on Pennsylvania avenue, where they belong and where they will be welcome.

Mr. BENNET of New York. Will the gentleman state what is the exact effect on the Porto Rican industry of the export tax which Brazil levies on coffee?

Mr. LARRINAGA. Well, it is very little, because we can not sell coffee in New York at less than 12 cents a pound, and the effect on Porto Rico is nil; the margin is so large that a cent does not make much difference.

Now, Mr. Chairman, before my time is over, I am going to explain to the gentleman from New York what the effect of the American tariff on coffee on Porto Rico would be as a protection. It is going to be practically very little, if any. I suppose that somebody would be ready to ask me, "Why, then, do you want a tariff on coffee if you are not going to derive any profit The reason is this: We sell to-day at 12 cents a pound in New York. They are selling at about six and a half. Five and six and a half make eleven and a half. Therefore they are yet ahead of us in market, and we can not compete with

But, Mr. Chairman, there are times when our coffee goes down, and then if they sell for six or seven plus the tariff we can sell our coffee at about 12 cents and make some profit instead of losing. When cheap coffee sells at prices higher than 12 cents, as it did some time ago, then the tariff would help us, but this is not likely to occur in future.

There are some dealers-for I have told you that I am not speaking against a class-who tell the poor man that the tariff is going to weigh heavily on him. But why do they not tell him that he is paying a tax to Brazil which amounts to about ten millions a year. Why do they not tell him that he is paying a tax to the dealer which varies from 10 to 15 cents on every pound of coffee, amounting on an average to seventy millions a year over and above their fair profit. Coffee bought in New York at 6 cents a pound means 7% after being roasted, with the shrinkage and the cost of roasting. Why should they sell that coffee as they are selling it to-day—at from 15 to 25 cents a pound. Now, Mr. Chairman, in honor to that class I will say that I at times believe they are not such bad men as they may perhaps appear. I believe that they are making this strenuous fight because, perhaps, they have made up their minds to pay the duty out of their large profits, and not charge it to the consumer in case Congress decides to put the duty. Mr. Chairman, I love to think well of others. [Applause.]

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. Foster of Vermont, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the agricultural appropriation bill (H. R. 27053) and had come to no resolution thereon.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. WILSON of Illinois, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that this day they had presented to the President of the United States for his approval the following bills:

H. R. 4931. An act to correct the military record of Corwin M.

Holt: and

H. R. 17572. An act for the relief of George M. Voorhees.

LIFE-PRESERVERS ON MOTOR VESSELS.

Mr. GREENE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 8266) to require lifepreservers on motor vessels.

The SPEAKER. Is it on the Union Calendar?
Mr. GREENE. On the House Calendar.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the following Senate bill on the House Calendar, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read the bill (S. 8266) to require life-preservers on motor vessels.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I should like to ask the gentleman if this act would not require every little motor boat of every kind, no matter the size, to carry life-preservers stowed away, one for each possible passenger?

Mr. GREENE. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Who would enforce the law?

Mr. GREENE. The Steamboat-Inspection Service.
Mr. MANN. So that the Steamboat Inspection Service would have to inspect each of these little motor boats, many of them no larger than rowboats?

Mr. GREENE. I do not know that the steamboat inspectors would. During the last summer in my own city the enforcement of the law in regard to what boats should carry in the way of lights was by a special inspector employed during the summer months to see that parties complied with the law.

Mr. MANN. Does not the gentleman think that if there were an accident on a little boat of this kind, with these lifepreservers stowed away, everybody would jump to get a lifepreserver and inevitably turn the boat over

Mr. GREENE. I can not say about that. cases in my own neighborhood, and I have read of others, some of them in this city, where boats have taken fire and lives have been lost because there were no life-preservers on board. These boats do not always burn up immediately, but they burn pretty

Mr. MANN. I suppose that might happen, but I think there would be so many more lives lost in consequence of the enactment of this bill into law that I shall object. The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

MEASUREMENTS OF VESSEL TONNAGE.

Mr. GREENE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 8460) to provide for the deduction of hatchways and water-ballast space from the gross tonnage of vessels.

The bill was read, as follows:

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 1 of the act approved March 2, 1895, entitled "An act to amend section 1 of chapter 398 of the laws of 1882, entitled 'An act to provide for deductions from the gross tonnage of vessels of the United States," is hereby amended by inserting, after paragraph (h), the following words:

"The cubical contents of the hatchways shall be obtained by multiplying the length and breadth together and the product by the mean depth taken from the top of beam to the under side of the hatch. From the aggregate tonnage of the hatchways there shall be deducted one-half of 1 per cent of the gross tonnage, and the remainder only shall be added to the gross tonnage of the ship, exclusive of the tonnage of the hatchways."

SEC. 2. That said section is further amended by inserting at the end of the fourth paragraph, after paragraph (1), the following words:

"From the gross tonnage there shall be deducted any other space adapted only for water ballast certified by the collector not to be available for the carriage of cargo, stores, supplies, or fuel."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, what is the number of the House bill for this same thing?

Mr. GREENE. It is H. R. 26070.

Mr. BENNET of New York. Reserving the right to object, I should like to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts if this simply changes the method of computation, so that the space for hatchways and water ballast is deducted?

Mr. GREENE. That is all.

Mr. BENNET of New York. Is it recommended by the de-

Mr. GREENE. Recommended by the department.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. What is the object of the bill? Mr. GREENE. The object is to make the laws of the United States conform with the laws of other nations in regard to

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. This does not have anything to do with the number of cubic feet that are set aside for every passenger on a vessel?

Mr. GREENE. No, sir. The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. GREENE. Now I ask, Mr. Speaker, that the similar House bill (H. R. 26070) be laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

There was no objection.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. BENNET of New York, by unanimous consent, was given leave to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, papers in the case of M. A. A. Cervantes, Fifty-eighth Congress, no adverse report having been made thereon.

ADDITIONAL JUDGE, SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF NEW YORK

Mr. BENNET of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 19655) providing for an additional judge for the southern district of New York, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint an additional judge for the southern district of New York, whose length of term, compensation, duties, and powers shall be the same as now provided by law for the judges of powers shall be the same as now provided by law for the judges of said district.

Sec. 2. That that part of section 613 of the Revised Statutes which reads as follows: "and at every such term held by said judge of said eastern district he shall receive the sum of $300, the same to be paid in the manner now prescribed by law for the payment of the expenses of another district judge while holding court in said district," is hereby

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to know why it is necessary to have this additional judge.

Mr. BENNET of New York. The necessity for this judge was indicated by the report of the Judiciary Committee a couple of years ago, when they gave us one additional judge. It arises from the numerous prosecutions of great length and importance that are taking place in the city of New York, the details of which I put in the RECORD on the 8th day of January.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. How many judges have you there?

Mr. BENNET of New York. Three district judges. We are doing our circuit-court work, for which we really need a district judge, by present judges from Connecticut and Vermont and other places in order to keep up with the work.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Is this judge asked for a district judge or a circuit judge?

Mr. BENNET of New York. This judge is a district judge, which is more valuable because he can do district work and circuit-court work.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. How many district judges have

Mr. BENNET of New York. Three district judges in the southern district of New York, and there are four circuit judges for the whole circuit.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Seven federal judges for that New York district.

Mr. BENNET of New York. The circuit covers the whole range of New York, Vermont, and Connecticut.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. You got one additional district judge two years ago, did you not? Mr. BENNET of New York. Yes; three years ago.

Mr. FITZGERALD. What has become of the district judge for the eastern district?

Mr. BENNET of New York. Well, this bill now up for consideration will help out the eastern district, because it provides that the judge for the eastern district shall no longer hold the term which brings him over to our district four terms in a year, each term of which lasts from one to three weeks.

Mr. MANN. Is there any reason why he should not go to New York City and hold court?

Mr. BENNET of New York. If the gentleman will read the report carefully-

Mr. MANN. I have read the report. Mr. BENNET of New York. The $300 applies to only one judge from the eastern district of New York, and he is the only judge in the United States to whom such a provision applies. They are getting in the eastern district so that they need their judge at home all the time. Their judge is human, and as long as he can get $300 a term for coming over to the city in our district four times a year he comes over and gets $1,200.

Mr. MANN. And he gives you that benefit and we get along with two less judges on account of it.

Mr. BENNET of New York. But it deprives the eastern district of his services when it needs him there to do their work. The Judiciary Committee is unanimous in this report, and three years ago they indicated that the one judge which they gave us at that time was not sufficient.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman from New York think that the House now ought to provide an additional judge for this district based on a report made three years ago?

Mr. BENNET of New York. We ask that this bill be passed based on the report as made now.

Mr. MANN. But the gentleman says it was foreclosed by the report three years ago.

Mr. BENNET of New York. It was foreclosed three years ago, when they said that one judge was not enough and that they would have to have another one in a short time.

The judge who was appointed was working with great ability and long hours, to such an extent that twice he has had to go to the hospital on account of serious illness. The work is heavy and the cases are large, both civil and criminal cases. All the judges work there, and they hold criminal terms even in the month of July.

Mr MANN. "Even in the month of July!"

Mr. BENNET of New York. Yes. Our state courts do not. Mr. MANN. Well, you are spoiled. Even our civil courts in Chicago hold their court during the month of July, and the criminal courts hold sessions during every month of the year.

Mr. BENNET of New York. That is exceptional and com-

Mr. MACON. Do they hold two hours in the morning and two in the afternoon?

Mr. BENNET of New York. Oh, no; they start in their calendars at half past 10, and in the federal courts they hold until 5 o'clock in the afternoon, with three-quarters of an hour, I think it is, for lunch.

Mr. MACON. Then they work about five hours a day.

Mr. BENNET of New York. Besides the work they do in chambers before and at the end of the day.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. How much vacation did your federal judges there take last summer?

Mr. BENNET of New York. I would not want to say exactly, but I presume the same as our state judges, and that is July, August, and two weeks in September.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Two months and two weeks' vacation out of twelve, and they want another judge to help them out. Mr. Speaker, I had a bill here last session to create a judgeship for the middle division of Tennessee, which I thought was very much needed. A leading member of the committee stated to me that they were going to take up this question this session and report a bill, or a number of bills, creating a number of judgeships. They have not made that report. There are a number of those cases, and I do not see why we should take up this bill at this time and make an exception of it. So I am going to object.

Mr. BENNET of New York. I am sorry the gentleman places his objection on that ground.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I do put it on the ground of fair dealing with all Members.

The SPEAKER. Objection is heard.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. DAVIDSON, for ten days, on account of sickness in his family.

To Mr. Warson, indefinitely, on account of death in his family

To Mr. FINLEY, for four days, on account of important business.

ADJOURNMENT.

Then, on motion of Mr. Scorr (at 5 o'clock and 19 minutes p. m.), the House adjourned.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, February 3, 1909.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. Edward E. Hale.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on request of Mr. Gallinger, and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Journal stands approved.

ELECTORAL VOTE OF COLORADO.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of State, transmitting, pursuant to law, an authenticated copy of the certification of the final ascertainment of electors for President and Vice-President appointed in the State of Colorado, which, with the accompanying paper, was ordered to be filed.

URGENT DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATIONS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 26399) making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1909, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. HALE. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments and agree to the conference asked by the House, the conferees to be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice-President appointed Mr. Hale, Mr. Gallinger, and Mr. Teller the conferees on the part of the Senate.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. Browning, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 8460) to provide for the deduction of hatchways and water-ballast space from the gross tonnage of vessels.

House joint memorial 6.

House joint memorial 6.

Whereas the growing and shipping of apples is an important industry in the State of Oregon, such that the Oregon apple ranks first for excellence in the markets of the world; and Whereas the fruit growers of the States of Oregon, Washington, Idaho, Montana, Utah, and British Columbia have adopted two uniform sizes of apple boxes, known as the "standard" and "special" apple boxes, containing 2,173.5 cubic inches and 2,200 cubic inches, respectively, each of these boxes containing a bushel according to United States standard; and

Whereas there is now in the Congress of the United States a bill known as the "Porter bill," which attempts to fix the standard for a box of apples at 2,564 cubic inches, to the detriment and injury of the apple growers of the Northwestern States, who now ship more boxed apples than all other States combined: Therefore be it

Resolved by the house (the senate concurring), That the legislative sasembly of the State of Oregon request our Senators and Representatives in Congress to use their best efforts to defeat the bill known as the "Porter bill;" and be it further

Resolved, That the chief clerk of the house be instructed to send a copy of this resolution to each Senator and Representative in Congress from Oregon.

RETIREMENT OF CERTAIN ARMY OFFICERS.

Mr. WARREN. From the Committee on Military Affairs I report back with an amendment the bill (S. 8906) to provide for the retirement of certain officers on the active list of the Regular Army who have been passed over in promotion by officers junior to them in length of commissioned service, and I submit I ask for the present consideration of the bill. report thereon.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be read for the information of the Senate.

The Secretary. The Committee on Military Affairs report to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

That hereafter when an officer of the line of the Regular Army, whose original commission in the army is dated prior to October 1, 1890, and who has been passed over by his juniors in length of commissioned service in the same branch of the line, is retired under existing law, he shall be retired with the rank and pay of the grade which he would have attained if promotion in the several grades from second lieutenant to colonel, inclusive, had been carried out lineally and by seniority in the several branches of the line prior to the act of Congress approved October 1, 1890, regulating promotions: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be construed to mitigate or remove loss of rank which any officer may have suffered by sentence of court-martial, action of examining board, or voluntary transfer: And provided further, That nothing herein contained shall be construed to deprive any officer upon retirement of the rank he now holds, to which he may attain at any future time, or to which he may be entitled by law upon retirement.

Mr. CULBERSON. Before consent is given for the consideration of the bill I should be glad if the Senator in charge of it would explain it.

Mr. WARREN. I think it will take but a moment.

There has been a cause of friction for some years in the army. It came about from changes in the law. For many years promotion was regimental up to the grade of captain. In 1874, and again in 1890, the law was changed. Still later. in 1898, lineal promotion was provided for in each arm of the service all through the army up to and including the grade of These changes in the law affected some 200 or 250 There have been bills before us for our consideration for many years, in the Senate Committee on Military Affairs, undertaking to regulate the rank of all those who suffered by changes in the law. But naturally there is much opposition to lowering in any way the rank and pay of officers who have been raised, even though through unjust or erroneous legislation, or to passing officers of lower rank over those of a higher rank, even to correct error.

Finally, it is the opinion of the committee that by this proposed law, which applies only to 20 officers and applies only then after their retirement, the acute situation is rendered more acceptable to a large class, and it ought to be to all, in that while it does not change the situation as to rank and pay of officers while in active service, it does provide that when an officer reaches the time of retirement he may be retired at the same grade he would have attained if he had been properly promoted up to that time.

It will apply to 9 cavalry officers and to 11 infantry officers, none of whom will be raised at retirement more than one grade, with one exception, where an officer will be raised two grades; that is to say, he will be raised from major to colonel when he The others will go from lieutenant-colonel to colonel.

Mr. CULBERSON. Is the bill reported unanimously from the Committee on Military Affairs?

Mr. WARREN. It is.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to the Senator from Maine?

Mr. WARREN. Certainly.

Mr. HALE. As the Senator knows, our experience with statutes of this kind, passed without discussion, has shown that very important and extensive results come from bills touching the pay of both the army and the navy upon the active and retired lists. I have great confidence in the investigation the Senator from Wyoming would make in any matter of this kind, but we must consider what has been our experience in the past. I know I have found that in the case of bills affecting the pay, rank, and promotion of officers in the navy by a simple bill supposed to affect but very few we have afterwards learned that in operation it affects a great many.

Is the Senator from Wyoming in charge of this bill absolutely certain not only as to the facts and the merits of the officers who will be affected, but that those who will be advanced and their pay increased by the bill are only in number the few whom he has stated? Is the Senator absolutely certain that the bill will not be found to affect a larger number-classes-in the army, and that we shall not discover and he will not discover that it is much wider and more far-reaching than either we should contemplate or he would desire?

As I have said, I have learned to be very careful about bills that change the grade and rank and pay of a few officers. A good many men get in under such a bill afterwards. Has the Senator, if it is necessary, so guarded his bill that no "back pay," as we call it-no increase of pay, no advanced pay-be claimed by the beneficiaries of the bill under its provisions? Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I realize fully the wisdom and pertinence of the inquiry of the Senator from Maine. all liable to be mistaken; but I will say to the Senator and to the Senate that this matter has been studied over more, perhaps, than any other in regard to the army or army pay. It has been under agitation for a number of years. The present Secretary of War and his two predecessors have had it under consideration. It has been referred to the staff for a working out as to how it would apply generally. It was first considered along the lines of reorganizing the entire promotion plan, taking every officer who was affected-some two hundred and odd-and putting all of them, as fast as changes could be made, in the places which they would have attained by application of the straight plan of general lineal promotion. But, naturally, owing to the opposition of those who have gained by the other method of promotion, the difficulty in deciding, and the very danger the Senator from Maine speaks of, that mistakes might be made and those for whom the legislation was not intended might make claims under it, it was finally decided to offer restitution only at retirement, and not before, to those few who could never hope to reach the grade they would have attained through lineal promotion, and who at retirement would suffer the balance of their lives one grade, and in one case two grades, by reason of their having been overslaughed.

The matter has been carefully investigated by expert officers in the War Department, and the names of all officers who have made any claim, and, in fact, all of those who, under figures and dates and records, can possibly have any claim, have been tabu-We have the tabulations in the committee room. seems to me to have been worked out carefully and completely.

I am very willing to state that, as far as I am concerned and my investigations run, I believe the bill will provide for only 20 officers and that it can not exceed seventy-five hundred dollars a year at any time, and will be as much less than that as may be caused through deaths that may occur in the meantime, Mr. HALE. I did not hear the Senator's last statement.

Mr. WARREN. I will say to the Senator and to the Senate that these 20 or 30 officers can get no benefit whatever from this legislation until their time of retirement, say, at 64 years of age. If all of them should retire at the same time and all of them should live, the additional expense to the Government would not exceed $7,500 per annum for the time between their retirement and their death. But of course they retire at different dates and deaths may ensue, so that the total amount can never be very large. It would probably be much less than $100,000 for all during their lifetime, as I figure it on the ordinary tables of mortality. It applies only to these 20 officers, and applies only to those who would otherwise lose at retirement.

Mr. HALE rose.

Mr. WARREN. Excuse me a moment. As to the others, it would not include the 225 or 250. They are suffering injustice to-day. They have been deprived, and they will continue to be deprived, during their active service of one or, perhaps in a few cases, of two grades which they would have enjoyed through lineal promotion. They will, under this bill, reach the same point at retirement and receive the same pay thereafter that they would have received if they had not been overslaughed.

So this applies simply to those officers whom we can not otherwise provide for unless we make an overturning which would result in the displacement of from 200 to 250 officers.

Mr. HALE. Under that statement there would, of course, be no retroactive effect.

Mr. WARREN. Not only that, but it applies only to those who were affected up to a certain date, the legislation of 1890, and it can have no effect as to promotion hereafter, because the law now, and since 1898, has provided for straight lineal pro-

Mr. BACON. I should like to ask the Senator a question, to see if I understand this matter properly. As I understand the proposed legislation, it grows out of the fact that there has been a change in the law of promotion, and under the old law a man's promotions depended upon vacancies in his own corps.

Mr. WARREN. In his own regiment.

Mr. BACON. In his own regiment. When I said "corps," I meant in a generic sense the corps, the organization to which he belonged. I did not mean a corps of the army.

Mr. WARREN. Will the Senator allow me right there to explain one point?

Under the old law promotion was regimental up to the grade of captain, so that a second lieutenant and a first lieutenant in a regiment where there were few deaths, or none, and no resignations, might remain as second lieutenant and first lieutenant until he was perhaps 50 years or more old, while his classmate in another regiment might reach a captaincy at 30 or 35.

Mr. BACON. Under the present law the promotion is regu-

Mr. WARREN. It is now lineal promotion all the way up from second lieutenant to colonel, inclusive.

Mr. BACON. Regardless of the particular regiment to which the officer may belong?

Mr. WARREN. Yes. Mr. BACON. But it is limited to his arm of the service, is it not? In other words, the creation of a vacancy in the cavalry can not promote a man in the infantry?

Mr. WARREN. In a certain way, of course, up to general officers they go together in the lineal list; but it does apply to each line-cavalry, artillery, and infantry-as the Senator

Mr. BACON. Separately? Mr. SCOTT. If the Senator from Wyoming will yield to me, I will say to the Senator from Georgia that he will see the injustice in many cases where officers were retarded in their promotion. By the old regimental plan of promotion a youngster would go ahead of the man who was his instructor at West It is intended to cure that.

Point. It is intended to cure that.

Mr. BACON. And under the change of law such irregularity or injustices, you may say, as were practically accomplished under the old law have been perpetuated in the promotions under the new law

Mr. WARREN. Certainly.
Mr. BACON. And it is designed to correct that inequality?

Mr. WARREN. It is to correct that so far as it applies

To the question of retirement? Mr. BACON.

Mr. WARREN. To the retirement, and to that only. Mr. BACON. I did not catch the statement of the Senator as to the number of officers who would be included.

Mr. WARREN. There are 9 in the cavalry, 11 in the infantry, and none in the artillery, because the addition of extra regiments and additional men has corrected the inequalities in that arm sufficiently, so that at retirement time they will all reach the point they would have reached if they had gone out on the lineal list.

Mr. BACON. The question I wish to propound to the learned Senator is this: There are only a few of these officers, and those few officers are known?

Mr. WARREN. Yes.

Mr. BACON. In other words, their number can not be added to.

Mr. WARREN. No.

Mr. BACON. Would it not be well, in order to meet the suggestion of the Senator from Maine in a practical way, instead of having a general bill, to have a bill which should name those officers, as there are very few of them.

WARREN. We consider it bad legislation to legislate personally for officers by name where it can be avoided, and it is always avoided when possible.

Mr. BACON. I quite agree with the Senator. Mr. WARREN. The report which accompanies the bill, and which I ask may go into the RECORD, gives the names of all of I think it would be bad legislation to put the names in the bill.

Mr. BACON. If the report gives the names, of course that accomplishes the same purpose.

Mr. TILLMAN. Has the report been read?
Mr. WARREN. It has not.
Mr. TILLMAN. I think those of us who have not had an opportunity to examine the bill should hear the report before we are called upon to vote on it.

Mr. BACON. I understand that the report substantially embodies what the Senator from Wyoming has stated.

Mr. WARREN. It does.

Mr. TILLMAN. If it is not very long, I should like to have it read.

Mr. WARREN. It is a report of considerable length. I ask that it be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the report (No. 903) was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

There being no objection, the report (No. 903) was ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 8906) to provide for the retirement of certain officers on the active list of the Regular Army who have been passed over in promotion by officers junior to them in length of commissioned service, has carefully considered the same and hereby reports it to the Senate favorably, with recommendation that it be passed amended as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert in lieu thereof the following, which is practically the same matter in a more condensed form and in language and arrangement approved by the Judge-Advocate-General of the Army and indorsed by the Secretary of War in letter dated January 28, 1909, quoted hereafter in this report:

That hereafter when an officer of the line of the Regular Army, whose original commission in the army is dated prior to October 1, 1890, and who has been passed over by his juniors in length of commissioned service in the same branch of the line, is retired under existing law, he shall be retired with the rank and pay of the grade which he would have attained if promotion in the several grades from second lieutenant to colonel, inclusive, had been carried out lineally and by seniority in the several branches of the line prior to the act of Congress approved October 1, 1890, regulating promotions: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be construed to mitigate or remove loss of rank which any officer may have suffered by sentence of court-martial, action of examining board, or voluntary transfer: *And provided further, That nothing herein contained shall be construed to deprive any officer upon retirement of the rank he now holds, to which he may attain at any future time, or to which he may be entitled by law upon retirement.

In the early history of the army the rule established for promotion of officers was to promote explains and field officers lineally and by seniority in th

A lieutenant was promoted to a captaincy when he became the senior in his regiment.

A lieutenant was promoted to a captaincy when he became the senior in his regiment.

The result of this system of promotion was that in regiments where many vacancies occurred the lieutenants received rapid promotion, but in regiments where few vacancies occurred promotion was slow.

When an officer reached the grade of captain he was assured his promotion when he became the senior of his grade in his arm, but the operation of the law gave promotion from lieutenant to captain such variations that many lieutenants of regiments where promotion was rapid got their captaincy long before others who entered at the same time or before them in regiments where promotion was slow.

An examination of a page of the Army Register of the time would show captains who were commissioned as second lieutenants on the same day standing far apart. For example, take 10 captains who entered on the same day. They might stand 1, 3, 6, 10, 11, 13, 20, 27, 30, 32, and even with wider variations than this.

Frequently some officers reached the grade of major while others who entered at the same time were far down on the list of captains, and not infrequently officers found others who entered years after them commanding a battalion, regiment, or post in which the officer with the longer service served in a subordinate position.

This system always held out a chance for an officer who lost in promotion as a second lieutenant to gain as a first lieutenant all or a part of what he had lost, and he might reach his captaincy in approximately his proper place.

All appreciated that this was the law and abided by it cheerfully, trusting to luck. A regiment that had slow promotion was likely later to his proper place.

All appreciated that this was the law and abided by it cheerfully, trusting to luck. A regiment that had slow promotion was likely later to have rapid promotion. When the statutes were revised in 1874, whether by accident or design, section 1204, regulating promotion, was changed materially in the wording from the older statutes of 1812 and 1814.

The statute of 1812 reads:

"* * That the military establishment authorized by law previous to 12th day of April, 1808, and the additional military force raised by virtue of the act of the 12th of April, 1808, be, and the same are hereby, incorporated, and that from and after the passing of this act the promotions shall be made through the lines of artillerists, light artillery, dragoons, riflemen, and infantry, respectively, according to established rule."

The statute of 1814 reads:

"* * * That from and after the passing of this act promotions may be made through the whole army in its several lines of light artillery, light dragoons, artillery, infantry, and riflemen, respectively; and that the relative rank of officers of the same grade, belonging to regiment or corps already authorized, or which may be engaged to serve for five years, or during the war, be equalized and settled by the War Department, agreeably to established rules; and that so much of the act * * of 1812 * * is hereby repealed."

Section 1204, Revised Statutes, reads:

"Promotions in the line shall be made through the whole army, in its several lines of artillery, cavalry, and infantry, respectively * * * "

The permissive "may" was replaced by "shall" and "course"

War Department, agreeably to established rules; and that so much of the act " of 1812" " shereby repealed."

Section 1003: In the several lines of earlillery, cavalry, and infantry, respectively " 1000 of a rtillery, cavalry, and infantry, respectively " 1000 of a rtillery, cavalry, and infantry, respectively " 1000 of a rtillery, cavalry, and infantry, respectively " 1000 of a rtillery, cavalry, and infantry, respectively " 1000 of a rtillery, cavalry, and infantry, respectively " 1000 of a rtillery, cavalry, and infantry, respectively " 1000 of a respectively" 1000 of a respectively " 10 some of the glaring injustices and inequalities due to regimental promotion:

Major Bishop, cavalry, graduated in 1873; he stands behind Colonels Rodgers of 1875 and Dodd and Parker of 1876, and behind 16 lieutenant-colonels of cavalry who entered, 2 in 1873, 1 in 1875, 4 in 1876, 5 in 1877, and 3 in 1879.

Captain Scott, of cavalry, entered in 1880; he is behind 24 majors of cavalry who entered, 4 in 1880, 7 in 1881, 6 in 1882, and 7 in 1883.

Major Lassiter, of the infantry, who entered in 1873, is behind 14 colonels of infantry who entered in 1874, 1875, 1876, 1877, and 1879, and 33 lieutenant-colonels of infantry who entered from 1874 to 1880, and 4 majors of infantry, all of whom entered the service after him. Others could be cited.

Some officers have been passed over by only 1 or 2 juniors, and this number is graded up to as high as 30 to 45. Of course the great majority can and will reach a colonelcy before retirement, but a few have been passed over by so many younger men that they can not get beyond the grade of lieutenant-colonel, and some the grade of major. These are the ones to whom it is desired to give justice.

As stated above in remarks about the adjustment bills, the number of officers who have been affected by regimental promotion number about 250. They have been passed over by their juniors in numbers varying from 1 to 50. But there are only 20 officers—9 in the cavalry and 11 in the infantry—who have been so seriously passed over that they can never reach the grade which they would have attained if promotion had been lineal since their entry into the service.

The excess of pay—that is, the actual additional cost to the Government provided all these 20 officers should be placed upon the retired list at once—would be not exceeding 87,500 per annum; but as their dates of retirement are distributed through numerous years, this maximum amount will, in all probability, never be reached at any one time.

The maximum pay of the grades affected are:

	Colonel.	Lieuten- ant- colonel.	Major.
Active pay	$5,000	$4,500	$4,000
	3,750	3,375	3,000

It is thus seen that the active pay of a major is more than the retired pay of either a lieutenant-colonel or a colonel.

The following list shows the effect regimental promotion had upon the officers named, indicating the grade they would have attained before retirement had promotion by seniority in each arm of the line obtained prior to October 1, 1890, and the grade in which they must retire under existing conditions unless relief is afforded by legislation:

The following letter states the Secretary of War's views favorable to the proposed legislation. The draft of the bill to which he refers is identical with the bill as amended, which your committee now reports:

WAR DEPARTMENT,

Washington, January 28, 1909.

Dear Mr. Senator: I have the honor to inclose a draft of a proposed bill to authorize officers who have been passed over in promotion by their juniors in length of service to retire with the grade which they would have attained if promotion of lieutenants had been lineal and by seniority prior to October, 1890, when a law was enacted changing their promotion from regimental to lineal.

The question of readjustment of the rank of officers, due to the inequalities in promotion under the regimental system, has been a vexing one for some years.

Last winter the Chief of Staff, under the direction of the Secretary of War, prepared an exhaustive report, giving the history of promotion in the army and showing the inequalities in promotion of officers of equal service and merit. The then Secretary of War (Hon. W. H. Taft), in returning to the chairmen of the Military Committees of both Houses bills looking to the adjustment of rank in the army, strongly urged legislation to effect the adjustment. Realizing that it is difficult to enact legislation for this adjustment, when there are opposing factions among the officers concerned, it is believed that legislation in the form here set forth will give some relief to those officers most seriously hurt in promotion, not while on the active list, but it will enable them to retire with the grade they should, as a matter of equity, have received while on the active list, and with pay on the retired list equal to that of others whose services, merits, etc., were practically the same, but who enjoyed higher rank and pay for many years on the active list. There are but few officers of cavalry and infantry who can not reach the grade before retirement to which their length of service entitles them.

The recent increase in the artillery will enable all officers who were passed over in promotion by their juniors to reach the grade of colonel before retirement.

The provisions of this proposed bill, if embodied as an amendment to the appropriation bill would require no separate appropriation, as the usual appropriation for pay of the army would cover the few cases of retirement under its provisions from time to time, in view of the many and increasing number of deaths of officers now on the retired list.

This seems a just and equitable measure and meets with my approval.

proval. Very respectfully,

LUKE E. WRIGHT, Secretary of War.

The Hon. Francis E. Warren,
Chairman Committee on Military Affairs,
United States Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill reported by the Senator from Wyoming?
There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Committee on Military Affairs, which has been read.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RELATIONS BETWEEN CONGRESS AND THE EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENTS.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, some days ago I gave notice that I would this morning call up Senate resolution 248, for the purpose of submitting a few remarks on it. I ask that it may now be laid before the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the resolution referred to by the Senator from Colorado, which will be read.

The Secretary read Senate resolution 248, submitted by Mr. BACON January 13, 1909, as follows:

Resolved, That any and every public document, paper, or record, or copy thereof on the files of any department of the Government relating to any subject whatever over which Congress has any grant of power, jurisdiction, or control under the Constitution, and any information relative thereto within the possession of the officers of the department, is subject to the call or inspection of the Senate for its use in the exercise of its constitutional powers and jurisdiction.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, in the closing days of the session I should not feel justified in taking up the time of the Senate except upon a matter of some importance. The resolu-tion just read, under present conditions, seems to me to be of such importance to the Senate. I do not intend to spend any great length of time over it, but I wish to call attention to the report which was read in part here the other day, made in 1886 by the Judiciary Committee of the Senate, also to call attended to the Senate at the Sena tion to the report of the Attorney-General, made in 1854, and to make some allusion to the precedents which have been established by the Senate, beginning away back in the early history of the existence of our Government.

Mr. President, I do not contend that precedents made in the Senate are binding upon the Senate as precedents made by the courts of the country are binding on those courts; but precedents have everywhere been recognized as at least of sufficient force to apply on every subject that has been discussed amongst men. A precedent derives its force and importance from those who make it, the conditions under which it was made, and the length of time which has elapsed during which it has been adhered to.

I know very well, Mr. President, that usage can not change a law. It may sometimes establish a rule of conduct, and if continued for many centuries, it becomes, perhaps, of sufficient force to be denominated a law; but usage is certainly to be considered in the construction of the meaning of statutes.

In 1886 a controversy arose in this body, to which the Senator from Georgia [Mr. Bacon] referred the other day, and a very lengthy discussion followed the answer made by the President of the United States to a resolution of this body. not think that that can be cited as a case entirely like unto That controversy arose because Mr. Cleveland, the present. the then President of the United States, had removed a certain gentleman and appointed his successor. From 1867 to 1886 it had been the rule of this body when called to act on appointments made by the President under the statutes of that time to not only look into the question of the fitness of the person nominated, but also into the question of whether there were proper reasons for the removal.

I need not go into any explanation of how this question arose. Everybody who is familiar with the history of this country for the last forty-five or fifty years will be familiar with it. It arose pretty soon after the close of the civil war. It arose out of peculiar circumstances; and I am free to say that I do not believe such an act as that of 1867 could be passed now, nor do I believe it ever ought to have been passed. The controversy really between the Senate and the Executive in 1886 was, more than anything else, as to the power of removal by the Executive. The President asserted that we had no right to inquire why he had made the removal; that we should confine ourselves simply to the question of the fitness of the candidate he had nominated. The report made by the committee in that controversy has been presented to the Senate, and I desire to call attention to it very briefly. I am not going to read the report, and I am not going to spend a great deal of time over the report.

The question presented by the pending resolution I regard as one which ought to be settled, and I believe it has been set-In 1886 I do not think there was really any controversy in the Senate as to the power of the Senate to call for information from every department of the Government, including the President himself, if we so desired. But the question was, Were the papers called for public or private papers?

Mr. President, I am willing to say that, in my judgment, there may be cases where the Senate and the other House might call for information which the Executive would be justified in withholding; but those are the exceptions. The rule may be well stated to be that the President of the United States should give to the Senate, and every head of a department should give to the Senate, the information called for, unless it can be shown to be an exceptional case, one out of the ordinary; and such is the case cited in Report 135, Forty-ninth Congress, first session, which was signed by all the members of the Judiciary Committee, either as a majority report or as views of the minority. There is really no difference of opinion between the majority and the minority, as will be observed if this report is studied, on the question of the right of the Senate to call for such information as is called for in this resolution. The controversy finally went off, upon the declaration of Mr. Cleveland, the then Executive, that the papers filed in the case which were called for specifically were papers not for the public records, but for his own private information, and that the Senate had no control over them.

The majority of the committee asserted unequivocally in their report, as they did on the floor in the debate, that there was no question of the authority of the Senate to call for information on anything within the jurisdiction of the Senate, and that anything the Senate could legislate upon or that it was necessary for the Senate to act upon was a legitimate subject of That was as frankly admitted by the minority as it inquiry. was by the majority.

The Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON] read from the report. I will not now take the time to read the report, as there are other matters pressing on the Senate. I will simply state the conclusions reached. The report declared, as the resolution of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. Bacon] recites, that "every public document, paper, or record, or copy thereof, on the files of any department of the Government, relating to any subject whatever over which Congress has any grant of power, jurisdiction, or control, under the Constitution, and any information relative thereto within the possession of the officers of the department, is subject to the call or inspection of the Senate for its use in the exercise of its constitutional powers and jurisdiction." This resolution is in strict conformity with the rule laid down in that report by both majority and minority.

The committee, composed of very prominent Members of this body, stated the law as is declared in this resolution. The minority of the committee stated with the greatest frankness that they did not controvert that question, but they said the where there are two houses, for each body to act on certain conditions then before the Senate did not fall within that rule.

Mr. Cleveland claimed that the papers called for by the Senate were private papers addressed to him, and not addressed to him in his official capacity; that they were not on the files of the Department of Justice, and were not therefore public papers, and that the Senate could not call for his reasons for removal. I am frank to say that I believe that was the law. I myself very much doubt whether the Senate has ever had the right to inquire of the President why he removed a man from office. Of course if the President should abuse his position to the extent of removing a man without proper cause, I believe it would be in the power of the impeaching body of this Government to bring the President before this body by pre-ferring articles of impeachment, because I think it would be a crime against the public if he should abuse a discretion intrusted to him by the Constitution to make selection of public officials by a mere whim.

In the case which called forth the resolution of the Senator from Georgia, the President of the United States has, in substance, said—I have not his message before me at this moment that we have not the right to call upon the heads of departments for information. He has not exactly followed that with the statement that I suppose he would make if crossexamined, that we were perhaps entitled to that information, but had not gone to the right source for it.

I want to digress a moment and speak concerning the heads of the departments. There are a number of departments created by law. I do not find in any of the laws creating the departments-and I have examined them all-any suggestion anywhere that their heads are to exercise the functions of advisers to the President of the United States, except perhaps in the law creating the Department of Commerce and Labor, where we specifically declared that the Secretary of that department should make certain examinations and report the result thereof to the President of the United States. I do not suppose it will be contended by anybody that because the Secretary of Commerce and Labor is required to report to the President the idea is negatived that he should report to the Senate or to the other House when called upon in a proper case.

There is no provision of law constituting the head of a department a Cabinet officer. I have not found anywhere in any work on constitutional law or practice in this country any sug-gestion that sets apart the Secretary of the Interior or the Secretary of the Treasury or any other public official as an adviser to the President. In the early days of this Government it grew, as I understand, to be a custom-and that is all it is—for the President to have, perhaps not daily, but frequent meetings with certain heads of departments to consider public

At an early day there was some controversy about this, but I can find nowhere that the President is required to consult the heads of departments, and I can find nowhere anything to indicate that because the President may consult them, they are not amenable to the law and amenable to the legislative department of the Government. I believe nobody contends-not even the President, I should judge, according to his statement—that Congress can not call on him for information.

But the present controversy does not arise in that way. am not going to argue that Congress can call on the President for information. I suppose that will be admitted. If by a law we should say that the President should make certain reports to us, I suppose he would be compelled to make them; although I do not mean to say we could either add to or take away from any powers conferred on him under the Constitution; but, as the Constitution provides that he may voluntarily submit information to us, or he may furnish information when we request him to do so, I suppose that question need not be discussed.

The question simply is: Can one body of the National Legislature call upon any of the departments for information? President, it will not be supposed that one branch of the National Legislature would call on the President for information not required in the execution of the functions of that legislative body. We are a legislative body in connection with the House of Representatives; but we act absolutely independent of the House in exercising legislative functions, as the House acts independently of us. We negative the action of the House; the House negatives the action of the Senate. So each body does its work independently of the other, and each body is entitled to such information as will enable it to discharge its duties in a proper manner.

It has been the custom, I believe, in all legislative bodies matters independently of the other. The English House of Commons has always claimed since it has been recognized as a legislative body the right to call upon the Government for information. That right, so far as I know, has never been denied, except perhaps in the very early history of England; and nobody, so far as I can recall, ever asserted in that country that that function could only be exercised by the action of the House of Commons in connection with the House of Lords—the body known as "Parliament."

Mr. President, it would take me two or three hours to take up this question and cite the cases, beginning away back in the days of the first Presidents and following it up year after year, where the Senate of the United States has called upon the President of the United States for information and the President of the United States has replied. There are a few cases in which he did not fully reply to the inquiry; but in such cases he took it out of the rule by showing that the public interests might be injured by such a reply. We recognize that principle when we call upon the President of the United States to transmit information to us "if not incompatible with the public interest," and in practice we leave it to him to say whether such information will be incompatible with public interests. If the Senate is satisfied with that reply the matter ends there. At an early day the Senate of the United States called on the President of the United States to report to it in confidence certain facts. It was proposed to have at Panama a conference, called the "Panama conference," of all the South American It was proposed to have at Panama a conference, Republics, in which we were to take part. The President was asked by resolution of this body to send it certain information, and the Senate added "in confidence." The President re-The President responded that he would reply in confidence, but that it must be left to the Senate itself to determine whether they would observe that confidence; that it must be left to the Senate to determine whether it would treat as confidential the papers that came to it in confidence. The Senate subsequently, after examining the papers, declared that it had a right to publish them without the consent of the President, and did so publish. This case proves that the Senate denied to the President the right to determine for the Senate what should be confidential.

I could read the correspondence in that case, but it is hardly worth while to do so at this time, because this is somewhat of an academic question anyway just now. With the change of administration before us, there may be a change of sentiment on this subject.

Mr. President, I desire to be as brief as possible; but I will call attention now to a report that was read here, in part, by the Senator from Georgia in the remarks which he submitted on this subject some days ago. First, however, I want to go back and call attention to some utterances of Caleb Cushing in an article that he submitted to the President, entitled "Office and duties of the Attorney-General," which was published in 1854, when Mr. Cushing was Attorney-General of the United The older Members of this body-those as old as I am—will have a very clear recollection of Caleb Cushing. Those who are familiar with history which occurred fifty or sixty years ago will also have a very clear recollection of him. That he was a great lawyer nobody ever denied. He was a man who, perhaps, was as badly criticised as any man ever in public life, and yet I believe no man assailed his integrity, and certainly no man assailed his ability. Fifty-four years ago is a good while. He then spoke of what was the law in this country and what had been the law in this country for many years, and what I assert here has been the law ever since, as can be seen by any Senator who will take the Messages and Documents, which, I presume, are in the possession of every one of us, and look over them and see the multitude of cases in which the Senate has called on the heads of departments and the President himself for information. I need not go into any argument to show that if you can call on the President of the United States for information, you certainly can call on the creature that Congress has created.

I wish to call the attention of the Senate to some statements made by Mr. Cushing. This is an opinion which I think every Senator would find useful if he would read it. We annually have read from the desk the Farewell Address of George Washington to the people of the United States. I have sometimes thought that if we would spend a little time in reading some other things the wise men have declared as to constitutional law we might get quite as much value as we can out of that able and interesting address.

Of course, Mr. President, Mr. Cushing was a state rights Democrat, but not more so than very many men who have held that office who were not members of his political organization.

He says, on page 329, volume 6, under the head of "Office and dufies of Attorney-General:"

In the organization of the business of this department by this act facts perculiar as compared with the other two departments are prominent.

I will stop to say that the law creating one of these departments is unlike the other; but there are some things in the act establishing the Treasury Department, it being one of the early acts creating a department, which, I think, are worthy of consideration:

One is that the Secretary of the Treasury, instead of being made subject only to the direction of the President by name, is required "generally to perform all such services, relative to the finances, as he shall be directed to perform;" which phraseology has relation to the provision of the act, that he shall "make report and give information to either branch of the Legislature, in person or writing, as he may be required, respecting all matters referred to him by the Senate or House of Representatives, or [and] which shall appertain to his office."

Mr. President, there are a few cases, and those during Washington's administration, where the head of a department has come before the Senate or House and given information. We have since adopted the other plan, of asking them to send it in writing. But there are a large number of cases, and many of them are within our own knowledge, where heads of departments have come before committees of the House or the Senate and discharged that function of giving information to the committees, and certainly, if they have recognized their responsibility in such cases, much more ought they to recognize their responsibility when the Senate or the House calls upon them for information.

Mr. President, I have marked a considerable number of points here that I desired to read, but knowing that the Senate is somewhat impatient at this time, I am going to skip them and call the attention of the Senate simply to the report and let them read it for themselves.

Speaking of the Secretary of the Interior—the Department of the Interior was created in 1849—and speaking of giving jurisdiction as to patents and general land matters, and so forth—

Mr. OVERMAN. I should like to inquire from what volume the Senator is reading?

Mr. TELLER. Volume 6 of the Opinions of the Attorney-General. By the way, I want to stop just a moment here to say—I will not read it—that Mr. Cushing goes on to state what these reports are. He says, of course they do not have the force that the opinions of courts have, but he says it has grown to be a practice, at least in the departments, that the opinions of the Attorney-General have great force; and that we know. There is scarcely a head of a department who would undertake, if a matter has been submitted to the Attorney-General, as is frequently done, to gainsay the opinion of the Attorney-General on the matter.

This act, it should be observed, does not provide in terms that the Secretary of the Interior shall be subject to the general direction of the President, as in the case of the Secretaries of State, War, Navy, and Postmaster-General.

And yet, Mr. President, everybody will understand and admit, I suppose, that in practice he has been just as much subject to the President's dictation and control as the head of any other department.

On the other hand, none of the acts, except that establishing the Treasury Department, subject the chief executive officers to the duty of responding to direct calls for information on the part of the two Houses of Congress.

As I have read, the law creating the Treasury Department requires him to respond to one House or the other.

This, however, has come, by analogy or by usage, to be considered a part of their official business-

This was in 1854-

And the established sense of the subordination of all of them to the President, has, in like manner, come to exist, partly by construction of the constitutional duty of the President to take care that the laws be faithfully executed, and his consequent necessary relation to the heads of departments, and partly by deduction from the analogies of statutes.

Mr. President, on page 344 of this opinion—it is a lengthy opinion—the Attorney-General sums up, and I can not better explain this matter than to read what he says:

Upon the whole, then, heads of departments have a threefold relation, namely, (1) to the President, whose political or confidential ministers they are, to execute his will, or rather to act in his name and by his constitutional authority, in cases in which the President possesses a constitution or legal discretion; (2) to the law; for where the law has directed them to perform certain acts, and where the rights of individuals are dependent on those acts, then, in such cases, a head of department is an officer of the law, and amenable to the laws for his conduct; and (3) to the Congress, in the conditions contemplated by the Constitution.

The courts have said, under such a condition as that, when a law has declared what the act of the officer shall be, the President of the United States can not interfere with him one way or the other; that the law fixes his duty, and he must discharge his duty according to the statute. That is a plain, common-sense principle, and it hardly seems necessary to cite decisions of the Supreme Court sustaining it. But several might be cited. Mr. TILLMAN. May I ask the Senator from Colorado a question?

Mr. TELLER. Certainly.
Mr. TILLMAN. In the event a President should be inaugurated who would consider it in his power to forbid an Attorney-General to execute an act of Congress, what would be our remedy?

Mr. TELLER. I do not know, because it has never occurred in my experience. I hardly know what I would say to that inquiry, but I think it would constitute a subject for the House of Representatives, and I think if such an order was made by the Executive it ought to result in impeachment resolutions.

Mr. RAYNER. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. TELLER. Certainly. Mr. RAYNER. Is there any doubt in the Senator's mind that in a case of that sort the fact should be certified to the grand jury, under the Revised Statutes of the United States?

Mr. TELLER. I do not know but that it could be done. think perhaps it could. But it seems to me the offense is not in the officer who declines to execute the law so much as it is in the Executive, who forbids his executing the law; and the responsibility ought to rest on the Executive and not on the subordinate.

Mr. President, I have some authorities I meant to read, but I have not brought the book with me. John Quincy Adams sent a communication to the Senate as confidential. The Senate considered it, discussed it, and several days later declared that it would not consider it confidential, and published it. I believe there are at least three cases which can be cited where, in defiance of the Executive, where the Executive has asked the Senate to keep a matter confidential, the Senate has declined to do John Quincy Adams, in responding to a Senate resolution of this kind, left it to the Senate to determine whether it should be published or not, recognizing that the Senate was the body to determine that question.

We had some controversy the other day about this question. I want to say that in 12 Peters there is a case entitled "Kendall v. The United States." Amos Kendall was Postmaster-General. I have forgotten exactly how the controversy arose, and it is quite immaterial; but it was contended before the Supreme Court of the United States that the Postmaster-General was not subject to congressional action or to the action of one body, which in that case was what it was, and the court said most distinctly that they declined to accept that as a proper statement of the law. I thought I had the case with me. It can be found in 12 Peters. I believe I have here a memorandum that will show exactly what the court did say. This is a citation from it. I will read it. In the case of Kendall v. The United States (12 Peters, 612) is found the following:

It was urged at the bar that the Postmaster-General was alone subject to the direction and control of the President with respect to the execution of the duty imposed upon him by this law, and this right of the President is claimed as growing out of the obligation imposed upon him by the Constitution to take care that the laws be faithfully executed. This is a doctrine that can not receive the sanction of this

There is no dissenting opinion in this case-

It would be vesting in the President a dispensing power which has no countenance for its support in any part of the Constitution, and is asserting a principle which, if carried out in its results to all cases falling within it, would be clothing the President with a power entirely to control the legislation of Congress and paralyze the administration of

In another case, which is to be found in Butterworth v. Hoe (112 U. S., p. 50), the court said:

The executive supervision and direction which the head of a department may exercise over his subordinates in matters administrative and executive do not extend to matters in which the subordinate is directed by statute to act judicially.

Mr. President, there is some distinction, I will admit, between asking the President of the United States or the head of a department for his opinion and asking him for information as to facts; and yet there can be found cases where the House and the Senate have respectively, singly and alone, asked the President for opinions in which the Presidents have given those opinions and their reasons for certain acts. If the President of the United States is asked why he does a certain thing, I presume, as a rule, he would be quite willing to state to the Senate or the House, whichever might make the inquiry, why he did it, and justify himself in his act. Possibly he might think it rather beyond our jurisdiction; but when that has been done, I have found no case where the executive officer has declined to act.

Mr. President, I have found a number of cases where the executive officer, sometimes the President, sometimes the heads of departments, has declined to furnish the information. I have found some cases where the House of Representatives has called for information that concerned only the treaty-making power, and the Executive has declined to furnish it. I have found several cases where they called upon the department for matters that touched only the treaty-making power, and yet the department had replied and furnished the information to the House.

I can readily see that in calling upon the Secretary of State for certain information when there were before him negotiations for a treaty or something of that sort there might be a condition where it might not be judicious and wise for him to respond, and I think there are several cases where they have so declined, and in all such cases I believe the House or the Senate has, without question, submitted quietly to that statement. I think there never has been a rule without exceptions. Probably there are some exceptions to the rule that the President of the United States and the heads of departments must reply to an inquiry from the Senate or the House. It is said that exceptions establish the rule. But there is one thing certain, I think, and that is that the Senate or the House will never insist upon the President or the heads of departments furnishing information where the executive officer in a proper spirit replies that he does not think it compatible with the public interest to supply the information. I do not believe there is any danger that the Senate will ever abuse this right or prerogative.

Mr. HALD. May I ask the Senator from Colorado a question?
Mr. TELLER. I yield to the Senator from Maine.

Mr. HALE. Has the Senator found in his investigation of this subject any case where either branch of Congress has called either upon the head of a department or the President for information and the reply has been that the situation involved delicate relations, treaty negotiations with foreign countries, and that the executive branch did not deem it compatible with the public interest to make reply to the interrogatories of either branch, and that response has not been accepted by the Houses of Congress?

Mr. TELLER. No, Mr. President; I have not.

Mr. HALE. But has not the Senator found several cases where the situation is such as I have imperfectly described, where Congress acquiesced in the report from the executive department, and thus in effect, so far as precedent goes, established the attitude of Congress that it will never seek to compel information or papers that involve any delicate relations or negotiations with foreign countries that ought not to be made public? There is no danger of either House taking that attitude.

Mr. TELLER. There is not the slightest danger, as shown by the history of the country. I have found a large number of cases where one House or the other asked for information in which the department from which it asked for it replied that, in the judgment of the department, it would be incompatible with the public interest to furnish it, but the department left that to the Senate or the House. I have found no case where such a response came that the Senate or the House followed it further, showing that we have recognized the right of the department to suggest whether or not it was proper, subject to the right of the Senate or House to determine for itself whether it would insist on the information. The worst case I have found is where the Senate, after it asked for a confidential communication from the President, and the President sent it and said he did not think it ought to be made public, made it public, the Senate not agreeing with the President.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, with the permission of the Senator from Colorado, I desire to state an instance which occurred since I have had the honor of being a Member of this body, showing another way in which the same end has been accomplished.

During the Spanish-American war, at my instance, the Senate adopted a resolution directing the Secretary of War to communicate certain information to the Senate. The then Secretary of War, who was afterwards one of our colleagues, Mr. Alger, did not think it was safe to communicate that information in a way in which it might reach the public. He sought an interview and obtained it with the then chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs of this body, Mr. Hawley, of Connecticut, and stated to him his reasons why he thought it would be imprudent to respond to the resolution. Mr. Hawley communicated to me the reasons given by the Secretary of War.

I recognized the propriety of those reasons, and at my instance the direction was withdrawn by the Senate.

I am simply giving that as an illustration of the temper and purpose of the Senate, which will always animate this body.

Mr. HALE. If the Senator will allow me, that is precisely in line with the thought that animated me in the question I put to the Senator from Colorado, that in a case of that kind it will be so obvious that the information should not be made public that Congress always has and always will, as it did in this case, so pertinently cited by the Senator, recognize the condition.

Mr. BACON. And the Senate itself, at my instance, withdrew the direction.

Mr. HALE. In my mind there is no danger that either HALE. In my mind there is no danger that either House will ever seek to compel information which, by virtue of conditions surrounding it, ought not, for the benefit of the public service, to be communicated. There is no danger of encroachment by Congress upon the powers of the Executive.

Mr. TELLER. I think the history of this country shows the correctness of the statement just made by the Senator from Maine. It is within the moment of most of the interview.

Maine. It is within the memory of most of us that immediately after the war there was a condition which never before existed in this country, and probably never existed in any other, and, I trust, never again will exist; and yet, with all the bitterness that arose out of the war, with the dislike of the Executive, with the intemperate zeal of the House membership, more particularly than in this body, although some of its was exhibited here, this rule has never been violated during the whole time.

I do not believe that ever the time will come when an executive officer, be he President or the head of a department, will declare that in his judgment matter should be withheld or that Congress, or one branch of Congress, will insist upon it being sent, unless it is a very clear case either of incompetency or something worse on the part of the head of a department.

Mr. President, we do not expect those things. We do not anticipate them. We do not legislate or go upon the theory that we will have a President of the United States who is untrue to the obligations he has taken. In the long line of Presidents that we have had we have had some controversy Presidents that we have had we have had some controversy between the legislative department and the Executive, but only once did it rise to an attempt on the part of the legislative body to punish the Executive, and that is within the memory of all of us, when the House of Representatives impeached the then President, Johnson, and sent the case here to this body to be tried; and after weeks of trial he was acquitted. Even in that hour of bitterness and excitement justice was done. I do not hesitate to say that that was the most extreme exposition of political violence and political temper that has ever been exhibited in this country.

Mr. President, I do not believe, nor did I believe for a moment, that the House of Representatives was justified in that impeachment resolution. I know from absolute observation, sitting in the gallery the day it passed, that it was not the deliberate opinion carefully considered of that body, but it was the excitement of the moment which carried the resolution When it came to this body, the prosecution, conducted with the greatest ability by the greatest men then in public life, Members of the House, found in this Chamber men of both political parties who were ready to do justice to the Executive, and he was acquitted.

The verdict of the people then is, I hope, what the verdict of the people would be to-day, and you could not find in this whole land to-day a corporal's guard of people who do not approve what the Senate did when it rendered the verdict of acquittal.

Mr. President, we have gone through perilous times. We went through a war unlike any other war in the history of the world, a war between brothers, a war between Anglo-Saxons. When the war was over there was much bitterness, of course. It could not be otherwise. But there is not anywhere in the history of the world a country where strife of that kind has been settled so readily and so certainly as with us. It has shown the strength of American institutions. It has shown that the people of this country are a law-abiding and a law-observing nation.

Mr. President, it is when you look back to the history of this country and what it has gone through and the tests which have been applied that you may reasonably hope for a long continua-tion of this Government of ours on the principles under which it was originally established.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. FRYE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After three hours and forty minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, February 4, 1909, at 12 o'clock m.

BONDING GOVERNMENT OFFICERS.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 24135) to amend an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1896, and for other purposes," and to consider the same in the House at this time, which bill I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

for other purposes," and to consider the same in the House at this time, which bill I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 5 of an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1896, and for other purposes," approved March 2, 1895, be amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 5. Hereafter the copy of the oath of office of subordinate officers of the customs, required to be transmitted to the Commissioner of Customs by section II of 'An act to amend existing customs and internal-revenue laws, and for other purposes,' approved February 8, 1873, shall be transmitted to the Secretary of the Treasury.

1873, shall be transmitted to the Secretary of the Treasury, bonds of the Secretary of the Senate, Clerk of the House of Representatives, and all such bonds now on file in the office of the Treasury, shall be transmitted to the Secretary of the Treasury and filed as he may direct; and the duties now required by law of the Comptroller of the Treasury in regard to such bonds, as the successor of the Treasury in regard to such bonds, as the successor of the bonds which are not required by law to the filed leswhere shall be filed as the Secretary of the Treasury may addrect.

"Hereafter every officer required by law to take and approve bonds shall cause the same to be examined at least once every two years for the purpose of ascertaining the sufficiency of the surfuse square of the purpose of ascertaining the sufficiency of the surfuse square of the purpose of ascertaining the sufficiency of the surfuse square of the surfuse of public moneys thereunder; and every officer having power to fix the amount thereof and approve on fix said amount at least once in two years and as much oftener as he may deem it ne affect in any respect the liability of principal or sureties on any bond made or to be made to the United States: And provided further, That nothing in this section shall be construed to repeal or modify section 3836 of the Revised Statutes of the United States."

With the following amendment:

Page 3, line 12, after the word "prove," insert "official."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object until there is some explanation of the bill.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Mr. Speaker, the law as it now stands requires all bonds to be renewed at least once in every four years after their dates, so that every bonded officer of the Government must execute a new bond at least once in every four years similar to the bond originally given. In a decision dated June 17, 1899, construing the provisions of the act above referred to, the Comptreller of the Treasury says:

When a second bond is given under the same appointment or commission, without any changes in the duties of the officer, the giving of said bond does not operate to release securities on the first bond as to future transactions, but as to said future transactions, but as to said future transactions the sureties on both bonds are jointly and severally liable.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Is not that a good thing for the Government?

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. The whole purpose and the only purpose of this bill, which has been prepared by the Treasury Department and referred to the Judiciary Committee, which committee authorizes me to present it to the House, is to eliminate future transactions from the old bonds. Under the present arrangement bonds become cumulative. There is an officer in the Treasury Department who gave originally a $100,000 bond, but who now must furnish a $400,000 bond, simply because, under the decision of the comptroller, future transactions are not eliminated, as they ought to be. There are cases where five or six renewal bonds have been required of an officer for various reasons under existing law, all of which are held to be in force, and upon which such officer is liable for annual premiums. These conditions operate to impose great hardship upon bonded officials, all of whom are required to furnish their bonds at their own cost.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Yes.
Mr. UNDERWOOD. Is the effect of this bill retroactive in any respect?

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. No. sir.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The old bonds will all be held liable for past transactions?

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Yes.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. And the bill is so drawn that it will affect only the future?

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. Does it apply to all officers? Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. To every bonded officer of the Government.

Mr. NORRIS. Regardless of the length of term for which they may be appointed?

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. The officer must execute a bond every four years similar to the bond originally given.

Mr. NORRIS. Take the case of a man who is appointed to an office that runs four years, a definite time, do they hold that the boud he has given for that term, if he is reappointed to the succeeding term, will still operate?

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. And you want to eliminate that difficulty? Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. As to future transactions.

Mr. MACON. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question? Is it possible that the bond which has been given four years before may become so dissipated that it would not be worth anything?

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. I did not understand the gentleman.

Mr. MACON. I say, is it not possible that the guaranters on the bond in the first instance might become so impaired in their property to the extent that the bond would not be good for the last period?

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. The law as it now is requires a new bond to be given every four years regardless of whether the officer is recommissioned or not,

Mr. MACON. How is it with those that have to be recom-missioned?

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Then they must give an additional bond.

Mr. MACON. That is all right; that is the point I wished to reach.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. And it continues as to future transactions. This bill simply eliminates that part of the comptroller's decision as to future transactions.

Mr. NORRIS. Then I understand this simply prevents, practically, a duplication of bonds, so that the last bond is the one you rely upon, just as the first bond was the one you relied upon when it was given.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Yes; as to future transactions.

Mr. NORRIS. To what decision does the gentleman refer-to decision of the court?

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. It is the decision of the Comptroller of the Treasury.

Mr. NORRIS. Has the question ever been passed on by a

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. I do not know.

Mr. MANN. I think the gentleman from New York is in error when he inadvertently stated this would apply when a new commission issued. The decision of the comptroller was, where an officer was in office more than four years without a new commission being issued and the law required a new bond to be given at the end of the four years, that that did not relieve the bond first given and that the Government could rely upon both bonds.

Mr. NORRIS. But that decision would not apply where the term expired at the end of four years.

Mr. MANN. It would apply so far as the term expiring, but not if a new appointment was made.

Mr. NORRIS. That is what I understood.

Mr. MANN. The term might expire and the man hold over.

Mr. NORRIS. Or the term expire and the man is reappointed.

Mr. MANN. If the man is reappointed he gives a new bond. Mr. NORRIS. And the old bondsmen are released.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. He must give a new bond every four years whether recommissioned or not.

Mr. MANN. That constantly occurs.
Mr. TIRRELL. I would like to ask the gentleman if, under existing conditions, it does not make a large additional expense upon these men who are bonded being compelled to keep the old bond alive in this way?

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Yes; a very large expense.
Mr. LIVINGSTON. May I ask the gentleman a question?
When he gives a new bond, is that held responsible for anything that happened under the old bond, and vice versa?

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Under this bill the old bond will apply to old transactions. The new bond would hold as to future transactions.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

AMENDING SECTION 2625, REVISED STATUTES.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill H. R. 24337.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 24337) to amend section 2625 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

the United States.

Be it enacted, etc., That section 2625 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be, and hereby is, amended to read as follows:

"Spc. 2625. In the event of the absence of a collector, surveyor, or naval officer of customs from his office, or of a vacancy occurring therein, the duties and authorities vested in him shall devolve on his deputy, if any there be at the time of such absence or vacancy; and if there be no deputy they shall devolve upon such other employee of the office as the Secretary of the Treasury may designate. And the principal and the sureties on the bond of such collector, surveyor, or naval officer of customs shall continue to be liable for the conduct of the office while in charge of any such deputy or employee and for the acts or defaults of such deputy or employee during the continuance of the absence of the principal, or in the case of a vacancy occurring in said office, until the appointment and qualification of a successor to the principal on said bond."

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object, to hear what this is.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Mr. Speaker, I read four or five lines from the report, which explains the purposes of this bill:

The present law provides that the estate of a deceased customs officer shall be liable for the acts of his deputy until the appointment of his successor. It sometimes happens that such officers have no such estate as would afford the Government adequate protection. It is therefore believed that the law should specifically make the sureties on the bond of a collector liable for the acts of his deputy during the collector's absence or in the event of his death, or that the deputy should be separately bonded, or both.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. Under the law as it now exists, where there is a naval officer or some of these other officers, the man himself does not have the appointment of his deputy, and in case of the death of the principal the bondsmen are not liable for the acts of the deputy?

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Not while the deputy holds office after the death of the principal.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. The collector is liable, and his estate is liable after his death. What is the gentleman's question? Perhaps I misunderstood him.

Mr. MANN. The bondsmen are not liable. That is what I

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. No.
Mr. MANN. Now, here is the proposition: Here is an officer whose deputy is selected practically by the Government through the civil-service rules; the principal dies; the sureties may be very willing to insure the Government against loss by the embezzlement of the principal. Would they be willing to insure loss for some unknown person that they had no control over, that the principal himself does not appoint, and selected under civil-service rules? And what would be the effect upon the civil-service rules? And what would be the effect upon the cost of bonds, and who now pays the cost of these bonds?

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Under this bill, if it becomes a law, the Treasury Department can compel the collector to give bond, or the deputy collector to give a bond, as it shall seem proper. The bill allows the bonding of either the principal officer or of his deputy. Under the circumstances, as the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] puts them, it would seem to be very proper that the Government should compel a deputy collector or a collector to give bond, as is done in other cases

Mr. MANN. Of course there is nothing in this bill to require the deputy to give bond to the Government?

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. It says:

It is therefore believed that the law should specifically make the sureties on the bond of a collector liable for the acts of his deputy during the collector's absence or in the event of his death, or that the deputy should be separately bonded, or both.

Mr. MANN. Now, the gentleman is reading from the recommendations of the department and not from the bill reported from his committee, which bill omits the very thing that the department requested.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. The department, under this bill, has it entirely within its control to compel the principal or the deputy to give bond, and I may say that in practice the deputies do give bond, and I may say that in practice the deputies do give bond. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Speaker, I want to inquire whether this bill has had the consideration of any committee?

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. It has had the consideration of the Department of Justice, the Treasury Department, and the Committee on the Judiciary, which reported it unanimously to this House.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Do I understand the gentleman to say that the Department of Justice now holds the bondsmen of the collector responsible for the laches of the deputy?

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. I did not say so. Mr. LIVINGSTON. I understood the gentleman to say so. Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?
Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, I would like to ask a question: Is it within the power of the surety companies, as a condition of the bond, to determine the bond of the original officer in case at any time they so desire?

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. I assume not.

simply requires that the collector give a bond covering himself and his deputy.

Mr. STAFFORD. Then, under this amended bill the surety would be responsible for the acts of other persons ad interim until the next principal was appointed?

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Yes. This would require the bonding company, or whoever the surety might be, to give a bond which would hold after the death of the collector.

Mr. STAFFORD. Hold until a new appointment was made? Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. It might be an indefinite length of time. Does not the gentleman think that would be a hardship on the surety companies?

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. That is wholly a question for the bonding company.

Mr. STAFFORD. Then, you think there will be no hardship

Mr. PAYNE. I understand there is now such a law in regard to the collectors of internal revenue, and it is so stated in the report.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Yes.

Mr. PAYNE. Does the gentleman know whether it has operated in any hardship or friction?

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. I have not heard that it did. Mr. PAYNE. Of course I can see very well how this can be made to apply to new bonds, but it can not be made retroactive.

Mr. MANN. Of course this would require every officer to give a bond.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

BONDS FOR CUSTOMS OFFICERS.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Mr. Speaker, I have another bill, H. R. 27238; I ask unanimous consent for its consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 27238) to amend section 2619 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

the United States.

Be it enacted, etc., That section 2619 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be, and hereby is, amended to read as follows:

"Sec. 2619. Every collector, naval officer, and surveyor of customs shall, before entering upon the duties of his office, execute a bond of the United States in such form and for such amount as shall be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury, with two or more individuals, or a duly qualified bonding company as surety, to be approved by the Secretary of the Treasury and filed as he may direct, conditioned for the true and faithful discharge of the duties of the office according to law, and also conditioned for the safe-keeping, disbursement, and accounting for all public moneys which the Secretary of the Treasury shall cause to be placed to the credit of such officers, or either of them, by virtue of their office, out of any appropriations made or which hereafter may be made, and which it is desirable that such officers shall disburse." after may disburse."

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Mr. Speaker, I will read from the report the purpose of this bill.

from the report the purpose of this bill.

The present law prescribes the form of bond for customs officers and requires the President of the United States to fix the amount of the bond. In all other cases under the Treasury Department the form of bond to be prescribed is left to the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury, so that such forms are made broad enough to cover the maximum requirements which the service demands shall be imposed upon a bonded officer. Because of the fact that the form of customs bonds has heretofore been prescribed by law, it has not been possible to amend the form so as to make the sureties liable for the acts of such customs officer in the performance of duties so closely allied to his office that it is practically impossible to perform them through any other office, and yet which are not all made a part of his official duties under the law; such as the disbursement of funds in connection with the operation of the Revenue-Cutter Service, Marine Hospital Service, Quarantine Service, Preventing the Spread of Epidemic Diseases, Construction of Public Buildings, Repairs and Preservation of Public Buildings, Pay of Assistant Custodians and Janitors, etc., and it has therefore been necessary to require of such officers separate bonds to cover each of said duties which the Secretary of the Treasury has found it necessary to assign to them.

In other words, the form of the bond at present is prescribed in section 2619 of the Revised Statutes, requiring the Secretary of the Treasury to follow the language without deviation, and requiring the President to fix the amount. This bill gives the Secretary of the Treasury the right to fix the amount and to amend the language to cover the performance of other duties closely allied to the office. Under existing law officers have been obliged to give separate bonds to cover the disbursement of funds in connection with the operation of these allied duties.

Mr. MANN. Does it repeal the old law? Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. No.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Chair calls the attention of the gentleman from New York to what seems to be a clerical error in line 8, where the word "of" should be "to;" "bond to the United States" instead of "bond of the United States."

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. It should be "to" instead of "of."

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the bill will be so

There was no objection.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

Subsequently,

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the bill H. R. 24338 will lie on the table, the recommendation made by the committee on the bill just passed at the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. Alexander]. The bill that is passed takes the place of the bill indicated. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

CONDEMNED CANNON FOR ROBINSON, ILL.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the House joint resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 241) to authorize the Secretary of War to furnish one condemned bronze cannon and cannon balls to the city of Robinson, Ill.

of Robinson, 111.

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to furnish to the city of Robinson, Ill., one bronze or brass condemned cannon or fieldpiece, with its carriage and with suitable outfit of cannon balls, not needed for present service, the same to be mounted and used on the public building grounds at said city, and to be subject at all times to the orders of the Secretary of War: Provided, That no expense shall be incurred by the United States in the delivery of the same.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 27051) authorizing the Secretary of War to furnish one condemned brass or bronze "Napoleon" gun, carriage, and cannon balls to the State of Iowa.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to furnish to the State of Iowa one condemned brass or bronze "Napoleon" gun, with carriage and with a suitable outfit of cannon balls, which may not be needed in the service, the same to be placed in front of the new historical building at Des Moines, Iowa: Provided, That no expense shall be incurred by the United States in the delivery of the same.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

GRADE CROSSINGS IN WASHINGTON, D. C.

Mr. WANGER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 23468) to amend sections 11 and 12 of an act entitled "An act to provide for eliminating certain grade crossings on the line of the Baltimore and Potomac Rallway Company in the city of Washington, D. C., and requiring said company to depress and elevate its tracks and to enable it to relocate parts of its railroad therein, and for other purposes," approved February 12, 1901.

The bill was read at length. Mr. MADDEN. I object.

SUBPORTS OF BLAINE AND SUMAS, WASH.

Mr. NEEDHAM, from the Committee on Ways and Means, reported with an amendment the bill (H. R. 24140) extending the provisions of the act of June 10, 1880, concerning transportation of dutiable merchandise without appraisement, which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union and, with accompanying report (H. Rept. No. 2026), ordered to be printed.

RESIGNATION OF JUDGES OF UNITED STATES COURTS.

Mr. CAULFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill S. 4535, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union from the further consideration of the bill and pass the bill with an amendment. The Clerk will report the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 4535) to amend section 714 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, relating to the resignation of judges of the courts of the United States.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the proposed amendment, the bill having been read.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, it would not be intelligent without reporting the whole bill. It is very short.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill with the proposed amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 4535) to amend section 714 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, relating to the resignation of judges of the courts of the United States.

Be it enacted, etc., That section 714 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 714. When any judge of any court of the United States appointed to hold his office during good behavior resigns his office, after having held a commission or commissions as judge of any such court or courts at least ten years continuously, and having attained the age of 70 years, he shall, during the residue of his natural life, receive the salary which is payable at the time of his retirement for the office that he held at a time ten years before his resignation."

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. I do not think the bill is clear. As I understand the proposition that the gentleman desires, it will retire a district judge on the salary of a district judge if he becomes a circuit judge. It does not seem to me that the language of the amendment as presented to the House carries with it that idea.

Mr. CAULFIELD. I will say that the Committee on the Judiciary considered this amendment carefully this morning, and they feel that the language will accomplish what is desired and meet all the objections that were made to the bill when it was up before.

Mr. MANN. Let me say to the gentleman from Alabama that the amendment provides that if a judge be retired he shall receive the salary of the office which he held ten years before his retirement; so that if he has been a district judge and then is appointed a circuit judge and retires, if he was a district judge ten years before his resignation, then he receives the salary that is paid to a district judge.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I understood that was the proposition, and I have no objection to that; but from the reading of the bill, as I heard it from the Clerk's desk in the confusion, I do not understand it at all.

Mr. MANN. I do not wonder. Mr. UNDERWOOD. If there is no objection, I ask that the bill be read again.

Mr. PARKER. I can give the exact language. Mr. UNDERWOOD. I prefer to have the Clerk read it. The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the Clerk will again report the bill as amended.

The bill was again read by the Clerk.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Now, I will say to the gentleman that it appears to me from the wording of the bill that if a judge held the office of district judge for ten years and was over 70 years of age, and was yet at the same time holding the office of circuit judge, he would get the retirement pay of a district judge and the salary of a circuit judge at the same time.

Mr. MANN. Oh, no.
Mr. CAULFIELD. Oh, no.
Mr. CAULFIELD. It is only in the event of his resignation.
Mr. PARKER. The gentleman is confused by the words payable at the time of his retirement." These words were put in to meet a case where the salary of a district judge may have been raised between the time that he sat on the bench as a district judge and the time that he retired. At the time that he retired, if he remained a district judge, he would receive the salary payable at the time of his retirement, and so the words were put in that he shall receive for the residue of his natural life the salary payable at the time of his retirement, for the office which he held ten years before.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will not take issue with the Judiciary Committee of the House, who have studied the bill. Mr. PARKER. We have studied it very carefully.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. But I still question whether if he has retired as a district judge and been appointed a circuit judge he may not receive both salaries.

Mr. MANN. Oh, no. Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will not object, because I defer to the opinion of the gentlemen on the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. MANN. I am not on the Judiciary Committee, but I have read the amendment very carefully.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. It seems to me there is a construction that can be placed on this bill that a judge can retire after ten years' service, being 70 years of age, if on the district bench, and yet receive a circuit judge's salary if appointed to the circuit bench.

Mr. MANN. No; there is no chance for it.
Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I should like to inquire of the gentleman, so that I may be sure that I am right as to the information, if when a district judge has served ten years and is 70 years of age, and becomes a circuit judge and is then retired, is he to get the salary of a district judge, though he retires as a circuit judge?

Mr. CAULFIELD. Unless he has served ten years as a circuit judge, he will receive the salary of a district judge; but if he has served ten years as a circuit judge, then he will retire on a circuit judge's salary.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

RESURVEY OF PUBLIC LANDS.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 24835) authorizing the necessary resurvey of public lands, with an amendment.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior may in his discretion cause to be made, in the manner now provided by law, such resurveys or retracements of the surveys of public lands as, after full investigation, he may deem essential to properly mark the boundaries of the public lands remaining undisposed of: Provided, That no such resurvey or retracement shall be so executed as to impair the bona fide rights or claims of any claimant, entryman, or owner of lands effected by such resurvey or retracement.

The Clerk read the committee amendment, as follows:

In line 10 strike out the word "effected" and insert "affected."

The Clerk also read the following amendment, offered by Mr.

Amend by adding at the end of the bill the following: "Provided further, That not to exceed 20 per cent of the total annual appropriation for surveys and resurveys of the public lands shall be used for the resurveys and retracements authorized hereby."

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I reserve all points of order.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I reserve the right to object. the necessity for making all the resurveys of the public lands? Mr. MONDELL. I do not know whether the gentleman was here the other day or not when this subject was discussed.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not know, either.

Mr. MONDELL. The matter was gone over quite fully, and the necessity for resurveys in many instances was pointed out. There was an objection made at that time, because there was no limitation of the amount of the appropriations that might be used for this particular purpose. The amendment I have introduced is for the purpose of meeting that objection. There are many reasons, as the gentleman knows, why these resurveys should be had.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I have one in mind. The statement was recently made to me that the surveys made by the General Land Office are notoriously bad.

Mr. MONDELL. I do not know who may have said that, but I do not think it is true.

Mr. MANN. That is one of the reasons for a resurvey.

Mr. MONDELL. This matter has been discussed a number of times in the House. There were surveys executed many years ago that were not well surveyed, it is true. In some cases the territory surveyed was of such a character, the country not having been settled, that in twenty or thirty years after the surveys were executed the surveys became obliterated. That is so particularly where the land is sandy or subject to erosion. In some instances surveys well executed are almost obliterated at this time, and it is impossible to dispose of the public land because boundaries are not determinable.

Mr. FITZGERALD. And the purpose of the bill is to make

Mr. MONDELL. Where they are necessary, after careful examination, to provide for the disposition of the public land.

Mr. MANN. I may say to the gentleman from New York that it will still be dependent on the appropriations recommended in the sundry civil bill and enacted by Congress.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman does not mean "recommended," but "decided upon" by Congress.

Mr. MANN. So that the department will be required to show reasons for the appropriation. As it is now, we have to pass special bills.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Who determines whether the survey is necessary or not?

Mr. MONDELL. We are called upon frequently to pass special bills for resurveys. The Committee on Public Lands and the department agree that it is not good practice, and that this is a much better and more economical practice, and more in the interest of the public service.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Is there any danger that by some kind of hocus-pocus they will go to work and resurvey all of the land out there again?

Mr. MONDELL. I think not, unless we get a Secretary of the Interior who is willing to violate the law.

Mr. MANN. There is no danger of that under the amendment offered.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I have known myself that in a great many of the surveys the corner marks become obliterated. The truth is there was a great deal of swindling originally in the public service in this way: Instead of putting a stone or a rock, or something of that kind, down as a monument so you could find it, they undertook to satisfy the law by putting down a match, or something of that kind, and of course they were easily obliterated. There are sections of land in my county that contain 720 acres instead of 640 acres.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. When the bill was up a few days ago there was an objection made-

Mr. MONDELL. This amendment is to meet that objection. Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Now, you say that not exceeding 20 per cent of the total annual appropriation for the survey or resurveys shall be used for that purpose. How much is the annual appropriation?

Mr. MONDELL. It runs from $250,000 to $400,000. Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I think it is a good bill, and I think it ought to pass. I am going to vote for it.
The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

FORFEITURE OF UNUSED RIGHTS OF WAY THROUGH THE PUBLIC LANDS.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 24833) to declare and enforce the forfeiture provided by section 4 of the act of Congress approved March 3, 1875, entitled "An act granting to railroads the right of way through the public lands of the United States," with an amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the bill as it will read when amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That each and every grant of right of way and station grounds heretofore made to any railroad corporation under the act of Congress approved March 3, 1875, entitled "An act granting to railroads the right of way through the public lands of the United States," where such railroad has not been constructed and the period of five years next following the location of said road, or any section thereof, has now expired, shall be, and hereby is, declared forfeited to the United States, to the extent of any portion of such located line now remaining unconstructed, and the United States hereby resumes the full title to the lands covered thereby free and discharged from such easement, and the forfeiture hereby declared shall, without need of further assurance or conveyance, inure to the benefit of any owner or owners of land heretofore conveyed by the United States subject to any such grant of right of way or station grounds: Provided, That no right of way on which construction is progressing in good faith at the time of the passage of this act shall be in anywise affected, validated, or invalidated by the provisions of this act.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?
Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object, and will ask the gentleman to explain the bill.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, when the bill was up for consideration a few days ago objection was made to the proviso on the ground that it might give an additional lease of life, or a new status, to certain rights of way; and as nothing of the kind was intended, the amendment was prepared to meet that objection, and provides that those rights of way that are not canceled by the bill shall be in nowise affected-validated or invalidated.

Mr. STAFFORD. Can the gentleman enumerate the reasons for this character of legislation?

Mr. MONDELL. The right of way act provides for forfeitures, providing certain conditions are not complied with. That forfeiture can not be enforced except by act of Congress or decision of the courts. This is a congressional forfeiture of certain rights of way. The time within which construction must be undertaken or completed has expired, with this exception, that where there may be any equities by reason of the fact that construction is now under way, we do not affect those rights of way. The necessity for this legislation arises from the fact that these rights of way stretch oftentimes for hundreds of miles across the public lands. They are a cloud upon titles, and the right of way is noted on the patent, whether the railway has been constructed or not. Further, if any other rights of way are sought for roads, for irrigation ditches, or other purposes, there is no way in which they can be granted except that the applicant for such right of way shall go into a federal court and have the forfeiture judicially declared. In 1906 Congress passed a bill similar to this, canceling these rights of way where there were no equities up to that time. This bill brings that forfeiture forward to the present time.

Mr. STAFFORD. What about the intervening cases since 1906?

Mr. MONDELL. It would affect the cases where filing was made between June 21, 1901, and a date five years prior to the date when this bill becomes a law.

Mr. STAFFORD. Why was it that the act of 1906 did not apply to those?

Mr. MONDELL. The act of 1906 could not apply to any cases where the limitation had not expired. This covers the cases where the limitation has expired since that time.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause,] Chair hears none. The question is on the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to. The SPEAKER. The question now is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

BRIDGE ACROSS MONONGAHELA RIVER, BROWNSVILLE, PA.

Mr. COOPER of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 26829) to amend an act entitled "An act to amend an act to authorize the Fayette Bridge Company to construct a bridge over the Monongahela River, Pennsylvania, from a point in the borough of Brownsville, Fayette County, to a point in the borough of West Brownsville, Washington County," approved March 7, 1908, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 7 of an act entitled "An act to amend an act to authorize the Fayette Bridge Company to construct a bridge over the Monongahela River, Pennsylvania, from a point in the borough of Brownsville, Fayette County, to a point in the borough of West Brownsville, Washington County," approved March 7, 1908, be, and is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"Sec. 7. That this act shall be null and void unless the construction of said bridge shall be commenced within one year from April 23, 1909, and shall be completed by April 23, 1912."

Sec. 2. That the bridge to be constructed under the provisions of said act shall be constructed in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

Sec. 3. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

With the following amendments:

With the following amendments:

On page 1, in lines 3 and 4, strike out the words "amend an act to," id on same page, in line 8, after the word "approved," insert the llowing: "April 23, 1906, as amended by section 1 of the act approved." following:

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House concur in the Senate amendment.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question? Mr. CRUMPACKER. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. What is the difference between the House bill and the Senate bill?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. The only difference is that the House bill authorizes an issuance of a discharge as of the 18th day of April, I think, 1864, a year before the alleged discharge.

Mr. MANN. I thought maybe it was a matter Mr. HULL of Iowa. It ought to have been 1865 instead of

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 27053, the agricultural appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 27053, the agricultural appropriation bill, Mr. Foster of Vermont in the chair.

Mr. LAMB. Mr. Chairman, I yield one hour to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER]

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, it will be remembered that when this bill was under consideration last year that there was much criticism of it because the amounts appropriated were not more definitely itemized. It was a criticism that appealed to the good judgment of the committee, as a result of which it will be noticed that this bill has been constructed with a view of providing the greatest possible itemization of the appropriations recommended. In the Bureau of Plant Industry, for instance, there are small appropriations, varying in amounts, to cover certain specific lines of work. These appropriations, in other bills, were carried in a general lump fund, and carried on the face of the bill-no information to the House as to the exact manner in which they were to be used. Every bureau, except that of Forestry, and there is good reason for this exception, has had its lump sum appropriated and defined according to the various lines of work being done. I mention this to establish the fact that the committee wisely adopted a policy of itemizing the bill, and to establish the further fact that this itemizing the bill, and to establish the further fact that this policy was pursued consistently throughout the bill, except as to the Bureau of Forestry, as mentioned already, and with the exception of one item, which carries an appropriation of $60,000, in the Bureau of Chemistry. That the committee should have failed to set out this item, that the House might see and understand it, was against my judgment, and members of the committee will remember that I gave notice in the committee that I felt it my duty to call the attention of the House to this failure.

The $60,000 recommended in the bill to which I refer is contained in the lump-sum appropriation for the Bureau of Chemistry and is recommended for the payment of the expenses of the Referee Board of Consulting Chemists, a board whose alleged function is a more thorough enforcement of the pure food and drug act of 1906. As I understand it, this board is a court of final resort to which appeals lie in disputes as to whether or not an article of food is misbranded or adulterated. My first thought in connection with this referee board was that it was only necessary that it should be itemized in the bill-that is, that it should be specifically named and provided with a definite appropriation with which to meet its expenses. The idea had been conveyed to me that the functions of the board were in line with a better and more thorough enforcement of the purefood act. A closer study of its functions and the reasons for its creation and its exercise of its functions convinces me now that it was created without authority of law and in response to the demands of the food adulterators of the country and that instead of providing an appropriation with which to continue it we should now declare, as the Representatives of the people, anxious for a faithful enforcement of the pure-food act, designed to protect the consumer and give the purchaser of an article a pure and wholesome food, a food which is what it is advertised to be, that no part of the money appropriated in this bill for the Bureau of Chemistry shall be used for the payment of any expenses incurred in connection with this so-called "ref-eree board" or any other board, the exercise of whose functions can only have the effect of raising confusion and interfering with the Chief of the Bureau of Chemistry, who alone is charged with the statutory duty of preparing the data upon which the Secretary of Agriculture must act in the enforcement of the pure food and drug act.

For one, I enter my earnest protest against the policy of the creation of boards and commissions by whatsoever authority, whether the Secretary of Agriculture or the President of the United States, and without regard to the motive, which have not been contemplated by the law and which in the case in point are prohibited by the law.

Mr. Chairman, I wish to call attention to what seems to me a most remarkable procedure. And right here I wish to disclaim any intention of imputing improper motives to anyone. for Secretary Wilson I have the most unbounded respect. It is my purpose to criticise the judgment, not the motives, of men. I am confident that this referee board was appointed in good faith, even if without authority of law, with no other purpose in mind than that of making more simple the complex problem of the enforcement of the pure food and drugs act. The motive may have been ever so good, and yet the judgment is undoubtedly ever so bad.

In the act making appropriations for the Agricultural Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1909, an increase over the preceding year of an even $100,000 was given the Bureau of Chemistry. The purpose to which this increase was to be put is best understood by a reference to the examination of the chief of the Bureau of Chemistry at the hands of the House Committee on Agriculture. I read from the hearings of last year, pages 354-355;

year, pages 354-355:

The Chairman. You are asking for an increase of about $100,000 in your lump sum. Can you give the committee some reasons why that increase should be made?

Doctor Willey. A part of that, Mr. Chairman, is for the normal growth of the various divisions of our work. For instance, our work in connection with the other departments is growing constantly. We have now, I suppose, sufficient work all the time to keep four or five chemists busy for the other departments of the Government. That is growing gradually. Then our investigations in various lines are naturally expanding some, but not much. I suppose $20,000 of this increase would be sufficient for the ordinary normal growth in the bureau for the next year. The greater part of it is for the expansion of the service in connection with the enforcement of the food and drugs act. We have a plan to erect five additional laboratories if this amount is given.

I also read from the same hearing, on page 363:

I also read from the same hearing, on page 363:

The CHAIRMAN. What do you pay these inspectors?

Doctor WILEY. The chief inspector, who directs the whole work, gets $2,500.

Mr. POLLARD. The chief inspector here in Washington?

Doctor WILEY. Yes; he is here in Washington. The others get from $2,000 to $1,200. I suppose the average is $1,500. They get all their traveling expenses, of course, when on duty.

Mr. Lever. What portion of this estimated increase is to be used in getting more inspectors for this inspection?

Doctor WILEY. Part of this increase is for the establishment of these additional laboratories where there are none now, and part for the additional inspectors.

Mr. Lever. How many additional inspectors do you want to get?

Doctor WILEY. After we get this increase we will have 10 more inspectors and 5 more laboratories, at least.

Mr. Lever. It seems to me with your present force you can not very well enforce the pure-food act. Here is a great strip of territory up here that is absolutely uncovered.

Doctor WILEY. That is not covered.

Mr. Lever. And here is another strip down here in Texas and New Mexico, and here is a great strip in here uncovered, and it looks to me like you need at least one in every State.

Doctor WILEY. In my estimates to the Secretary I asked for $200,000, but he thought $100,000 would be sufficient. But whatever you give us we will utilize the best we can.

You will notice that the chief of the bureau, in making his estimate for his bureau, had in mind a well-developed plan for which it should be expended, and nowhere can it be found that he ever intimated or gave the committee any idea that any of this appropriation should be used in any other way than that given to the committee as appears in his statement. ture the assertion, without fear of contradiction, that there is not a member of the Agricultural Committee who considered the bill of last year who will rise in his place now and assert that he ever dreamed that any part of the sum appropriated to the Bureau of Chemistry was to be used for the payment of the expenses of a board created at the dictation of the President of the United States and beyond and outside of the control of the Bureau of Chemistry or its chief. If there is such member, I should be glad to have him rise in his place and give the House the benefit of his understanding of the reasons which prompted him in allowing this bureau a hundred thousand dollars increase. The chief of the bureau, Doctor Wiley, could not have had in mind any such idea, and this is established by another reference to his statement before the committee, which precludes the possibility of his having contemplated that any of his appropriation was to be used in the manner which I shall presently recite. (See Hearings, p. 356:)

The CHAIRMAN. Is there any appeal from the decision anywhere

The CHAIRMAN, is there any appeal from the decision anywhere along the line?

Doctor Wiley. An appeal is often made from the decision of the board to the Secretary.

The CHAIRMAN. After the Secretary passes on it, is there then any appeal?

Doctor Wiley. The only appeal that can then possibly be made is to the courts, and no such appeal has ever been made in the six years in which this system has been in operation.

The only intimation found anywhere in Doctor Wiley's statement before the committee that there was in contemplation the possible creation of a commission or a board with final jurisdiction in matters touching the enforcement of the pure-food act is had on page 382 of the hearings, from which I read:

act is had on page 382 of the hearings, from which I read:

The Chairman. Up to this time you do not forbid the sale of these articles of food that have these preservatives in them?

Doctor Wiley. No. The regulation provides that all goods packed during the season of 1907 may go without hindrance into interstate commerce, provided they do not contain more than one-tenth of 1 per cent; but the object of that was to inhibit it in future years. That question is now carried up to another commission, and will be open until that commission makes its decision.

The Chairman. Who constitutes that commission?

Doctor Wiley. As I understand, it has not been appointed yet. The President is going to appoint it.

The Chairman. I thought he had appointed it.

Doctor Wiley. I do not think so. It has not been announced, at least.

I have searched the hearings carefully and this is all that can be found, and I am sure every member of the committee will agree with me that it was not in his mind that he was providing an appropriation which was to be used outside of the Bureau of Chemistry. The first intimation that I had that a Referee Board of Consulting Chemists had been created and that the $100,000 appropriated for the Bureau of Chemistry, in accordance with the suggestions of its chief as to its expenditures, had been diverted to the payment of the expenses of this board came to me in the statement of the chief of the bureau before the committee on January 5 of this year. I think a study of the interrogations and answers of members of the committee and Doctor Wiley on this date will develop the fact that even the chairman of the committee was somewhat surprised at the diversion of this $100,000 appropriation from the purposes for which it was intended. I read from the hearings, page 240:

Doctor Wilex. The previous year we had none. The first year we did not get a case to the courts, and they just began to come in last March. They are now coming in rapidly; we have 60 or more convictions, I could not give the exact number now, and the courts are just getting busy on this matter.

The Chairman, While looking up the allotments of your bureau for the current year, I noticed that $100,000 is set aside for the use of the referee board. Will you give us the names of the members of that board, and tell us how they are paid, and what expenses they incur that calls for $100,000; and also tell us what their duties are?

Doctor Wiley. Mr. Chairman, I am in very poor condition to answer your question, because all I know about it is just the fact that a certain amount of money was set aside for this board, and the disbursing officer informed me of that fact so that I would not be drawing on it for any of the ordinary expenses of the bureau; but I do happen to know the names of the referee board just incidentally, but not officially. Mr. Lever. By whose authority was this sum set aside?

Doctor Wiley. That I could not say. I imagine that the Secretary of Agriculture was the only one who had authority to do it.

Mr. Lever. Did your notice come from him?

Doctor Wiley. No; from Mr. Zappone, the disbursing officer. I do not believe I can give the committee any valuable information on this subject, Mr. Chairman, because I myself am ignorant.

The Chairman, Walley. No official relation to this referee board at all?

Doctor Wiley. None whatever.

The CHAIRMAN. Have you no state at all?

at all?

Doctor Wiley. None whatever.

Mr. Lamb. How many members compose the board?

Doctor Wiley. Five.

Mr. Haskins. Is this the board before whom appeals are brought from your decisions?

Doctor Wiley. Yes, sir; a board which is reviewing the work that we did under the appropriation acts for the last seven or eight years, as I understand it.

Mr. HAWLEY. Under whose direction? Doctor Wiley. I believe they are under their own direction—I really not know Doctor WILEY. I believe they are under their own direction—I really do not know.

Mr. RUCKER. I understand that the board examines into and supervises the work that your department does.
Doctor WILEY. Not at all; they have nothing to do with our work.

Mr. RUCKER. With whose work do they have to do?
Doctor WILEY. As I understand it, Mr. Chalrman, this board is appointed to determine whether or not certain substances added to foods are wholesome or unwholesome.

Mr. RUCKER. Is not that the province of your department?
Doctor WILEY. Well, I could not answer in regard to that.

Mr. RUCKER. I did not intend to be too inquisitive.

Mr. LAMB. Can you give us the names of the members of the board?
Doctor WILEY. I know the names of the board. Doctor Remsen, of Johns Hopkins, is president; Professor Chittenden, of Yale, is a member; Professor Long, of the Northwestern University, of Chicago; Doctor Herter, member of the medical faculty of the Columbia University, of New York City; and Professor Taylor, of the University of California, at Berkeley, constitute the board.

Mr. McLaughlin. In case you seize goods and condemn them, there is an appeal to this board to determine the quality of the goods, and the correctness of your analysis, and something of that kind; is not that true?

Doctor Wiley, L of course know nothing about the work of the is an appeal to this board to determine the quality of the goods, and the correctness of your analysis, and something of that kind; is not that true?

Doctor Wiley. I, of course, know nothing about the work of the board excepting from hearsay, so I am not in a position to give the committee any information at all upon that subject.

Mr. Lever. What I am trying to get at is how it happens that this referee board, appointed by the President of the United States, as I understand, should have its expenses charged against this account.

The Charman. Perhaps I may make this statement in connection with this subject, as a matter of personal information, which I may say I have secured more from newspaper reports than anywhere else. My understanding is that that board was appointed by the Secretary of Agriculture at the instance, of course, of the President of the United States. The appointment was made by the Secretary of Agriculture under authority of the language in the appropriation bill empowering him to employ "assistants, clerks, and such other persons," as he may deem necessary to carry into effect the provisions of the act. The appointments were made, as I understand it, because of appeals which had come to the President from manufacturers who believed that the rulings of the Bureau of Chemistry as to what constituted adulterations in their products were unwarranted. The President, of course, did not know whether they were right or wrong. It was evident that the rulings of the Bureau of Chemistry as to what constituted adulterations in their products were unwarranted. The President, of course, did not know whether they were right or wrong. It was evident that the rulings of the bureau were not satisfactory, and the President believed that the appointment of a board made up of such eminent scientists as the ones whose names have been given by Doctor Wiley, and to which board these questions might be referred, was necessary in order to secure a determination of the matters that would be accepted by the whole coun

Mr. Lever. I was about to suggest that that appropriation of $100,000 should be inquired into, as to the details of expenditure.

The Chairman. Yes; I think the committee feels that way about it. Each of these men, as we all know, is engaged in important work outside of his connection with this board, so that doubtless he can give only a part of his time to the work of the department; so I assume that they are paid a per diem for the time actually employed.

Mr. Hawley. How could they put in enough days—
The Chairman. As this is a rather large expense, amounting to $100,000, I am sure the committee will be interested in knowing the details of the expenditure.

Mr. Rucker. The question arises whether this referee board which is appointed, as I understand it, for the purpose of giving confidence in the enforcement of the law governing the proper analysis of foods, if it does not reach the gentleman in charge, Doctor Wiley, I do not see how very much could be accomplished.

This appropriation was not intended by Congress to be used in any such manner. Every fact and circumstance in connection with the appropriation prove the contrary. Congress thought it was providing for the normal growth of the Bureau of Chemistry and its increased work, due to its duty in enforcing the pure food and drugs act.

Mr. Chairman, an executive officer is charged with the execution of the law according to the terms of the law, but in recent years the legislative and judicial branches of the Government have been almost absorbed by the executive branch, which endeavors to exercise all the functions which hitherto were exercised by the other coordinate and equal branches. And the creation of this referee board, the diverting of this $100,000 appropriation, is but another illustration of this growing and most unfortunate tendency.

The facts leading up to the creation of this board may be interesting. Until the passage of the pure-food act two years ago, conditions had been such that the consumer was entirely at the mercy of the dishonest manufacturer of food products. The use of preservatives and poisonous chemicals in foods sold to the public was well-nigh universal. Embalmed beef is a part of the history of our country. The demand for pure food came up from all parts of the country, and in response thereto the act of 1906 was passed and is now a law. That act provides the manner in which it shall be enforced and specifically names the channels through which it shall be operated and sets out in detail the means of redress which are available to the aggrieved manufacturer of food products. Section 4 of the act of June 30, 1906, provides that-

Examinations of specimens of foods and products shall be made in the Bureau of Chemistry of the Department of Agriculture, or under the direction and supervision of such bureau, for the purpose of deter-mining from such examinations whether such articles are adulterated or misbranded within the meaning of this act.

The law therefore, in terms mandatory, provides who shall enforce it—what bureau of the Government shall deal with it. There is no discretion—the law is specific. There is no evading its letter or spirit, and such evasion amounts to a violation of the law.

The Bureau of Chemistry of the Department of Agriculture is given the sole authority to deal with the enforcement of the act; to pass judgment as to the fact of adulteration or misbranding of articles of food or drugs. The law is plain; the intent of the law is equally as plain, and if there has been created by any authority anywhere in the Government any referee board, or any other board, which, in the exercise of the power conferred upon it in its creation, either hampers, supersedes, directs, or nullifies the action of the Bureau of Chemistry in the exercise of its authority under this act, such a board was created without authority of and is acting in violation of law. I quote again from the act, section 4:

And if it shall appear from any such examination that any of such specimens is adulterated or misbranded within the meaning of this act, the Secretary of Agriculture shall cause notice thereof to be given to the party from whom such sample was obtained.

And here the act sets out in definite terms the remedy which the aggrieved manufacturer has under the law. I read still from section 4:

Any party so notified shall be given an opportunity to be heard, under such rules and regulations as may be prescribed as aforesaid, and if it appears that any of the provisions of this act have been violated by such party, then the Secretary of Agriculture shall at once certify the facts to the proper United States district attorney, with a copy of the results of the analysis or the examination of such article, duly authenticated by the analyst or officer making such examination, under the oath of such officer. After judgment of the court, notice shall be given by publication in such manner as may be prescribed by the rules and regulations aforesaid

And then section 5 provides that the district attorney to whom such report shall be made shall cause proper proceedings in the proper courts of the United States. I call attention to two things provided in section 4.

First. That the Bureau of Chemistry is charged with the collection of the facts as to misbranding or adulteration of food or drugs. No authority is given to any other officials of the Gov-The direction of the law is to the Bureau of Chemernment. istry; that bureau, and that bureau alone, is charged with certain duties named in the section. As to the collection of scientific facts, it is the only source of authority contemplated by the act to which the courts may look. There is nowhere mentioned in the act a referee board or a board of pure food and drug inspection. There is nowhere in the act conferred the power to any person to create such a board or boards; the direction is to the Bureau of Chemistry. That is one fact that can not be escaped.

Second. The other fact is there is no court of appeals from the facts laid down by the Bureau of Chemistry in any given case except a proper court of the United States. out in plainest possible terms the course of procedure in appeals, and the appeal goes to a court of law rather than a specially created court of chemistry, as we now have, under the operation of the so-called "referee board of consulting chemists."

A recital of the history of the passage of the pure food and drugs act will illuminate the attitude and intention of Congress with respect to any commission or board with functions such as are exercised by the referee board.

When the bill left the House it carried a provision for a commission identical in character with the referee board. The Senate struck out this provision and the House conferees agreed to the Senate amendment. The bill as thus reported to the two Houses by their respective conferees became a law and is now the law and the only law upon the subject. There can be no ambiguity as to the intention of Congress in this respect. The referee-board idea was deliberately omitted from the act, and the present board exists to-day in the very teeth of the intention of Congress and in open and flagrant violation of it.

Senator HEYBURN, on the 25th of January of this year, speaking in the Senate on this very matter, says-

Mr. President, a word may not be out of place in connection with this matter, because I think the minds of Senators will be directed to it in the near future. We absolutely refused, in enacting the pure-food law, to consider favorably the proposition of establishing standards by legislation. The difference between the bill that came back to us and the bill that we sent out of this body rested largely on that question, and I am quite jealous that what we declined to do directly we shall not be found to be doing indirectly. It was the spirit of the pure-food bill that the courts should determine these questions and that no other definition than that of the courts should constitute a rule of action under the law; and yet I find every day, almost, some statement in the papers that some board or some committee has issued its edict as to what shall and what shall not be permissible under the pure-food law.

If we sit idly by and allow the practice to drift in this direction, we might as well have accepted that proposition. It was the presence of that principle in the pure-food bill that as much as anything else held it back in Congress for almost a quarter of a century. People would not submit to the proposition that we should establish standards by legislation. The people who intelligently considered that measure demanded that each case should stand upon its own facts, and when the Senate expressed its final conclusion the law was so written. I want to know by what authority this board comes into existence, and I want to know what authority it claims for its conclusions.

I see that the paper says that it will probably result in displacing one of the executive officers of the Government, and that the board will be substituted for an executive officer authorized by law for whom we have been making provision year after year. If that is to be, I think we should take it into consideration when we are asked to open the Treasury of the United States and give them an extra hundred thousand dollars upon a very indefinite statement of the purpose for which it is to be used. We have already given them something over $700,000 in the appropriation for this year, and I may be wrong in thinking that the additional expense has been caused by this unauthorized board, and if it is so, I think the Senate would be

Senator HEYBURN was the leader in the Senate of the advocates of the present pure-food act, and his judgment as to its intent must be given great weight. Here is a man as much responsible for the pure food and drugs act of 1906 as any other man in the country, with the exception of Dr. Harvey W. Wiley, Chief of the Bureau of Chemistry, and he tells us in plain English that such a referee board of consulting chemists was not only not in the minds of Members of Congress when the act was passed, but that such a board was specifically and pointedly excluded from the act, and gives the reasons for its exclusion. This should settle the legal phase of the question as to whether or not there was any intention in the minds of the legislators to lodge a power in some one for the creation of a board which should have authority greater or even equal to that of the Chief of the Bureau of Chemistry, who is charged with the statutory duty of furnishing the data upon which the Secretary of Agriculture is to act and upon which federal courts are to act with respect to misbranding or adulteration in foods and drugs.

I have shown, Mr. Chairman, that the committee which appropriated the funds out of which the expenses of this referee board are being borne was not advised of its contemplated creation. Doctor Wiley, the chief of the bureau from which this sum was taken, it appears, knew nothing about it. pointedly stricken from the bill, preventing the manufacture, sale, or transportation of adulterated or misbranded or poisonous or deleterious foods, drugs, and so forth, before the bill could become a law.

I am not a lawyer, but I am enough of a lawyer to know that every judicial and just interpretation of a statute must follow the lines of common sense and be guided largely by the facts and circumstances, the history, the reasons and in-tentions, and the purposes of the legislative body enacting it. And if this rule is followed in this case, the conclusion is in-evitable that the so-called "board of pure food and drug inspection," within the Bureau of Chemistry, and the referee board of consulting chemists, outside of the bureau, both exercising functions inconsistent with the statutory duty imposed upon the chief of that bureau, have been foisted upon the public without the authority of law and in plain violation of it.

Upon what authority of law is this referee board of consulting chemists predicated? I understand that the Secretary of Agriculture who appointed the board at the direction of the President of the United States relies for his authority upon this language (page 11) of the appropriation act of last year:

Employing such assistants, clerks, and other persons as the Secretary of Agriculture may consider necessary for the purposes named.

That is for carrying into effect the pure food and drugs act, and he further relies upon section 161 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, which authorizes the head of a department to prescribe regulations for the government of his department. The statute reads:

The head of each department is authorized to prescribe regulations, not inconsistent with law, for the government of his department, the conduct of its officers and clerks, the distribution and performance of its business, and the custody, use, and preservation of the records, papers, and property appertaining to it.

As to the first authority relied upon—" for the employment of assistants, clerks, and other persons"—it seems to me, as a layman, that his position is absolutely untenable and does not give him the authority claimed. Lawyers who are listening to me are no doubt familiar with Lord Tenterden's rule of construction, and I place it against the alleged authority for the appointment of this referee board. I read the rule:

Where general words follow particular ones, the rule is to construe the former as applicable to persons or things ejusdem generis. This rule, which is sometimes called "Lord Tenterden's rule," has been stated as to the word "other" thus: Where the statute or other document enumerates several classes of persons or things, and immediately following and classed with such enumeration the clause embraces "other" persons or things, the word "other" will generally be read as "other such like," so that persons or things therein comprised may be read as ejusdem generis with, and not of a quality superior to or different from, those specifically enumerated.

It is my information that this rule is almost universally followed by the courts in the interpretation of statutes, and that the words "other persons" can not be of a quality superior to or different from those specifically enumerated, so that these words in the appropriation act would convey the power of appointment of persons with an authority of like character with "assistants and clerks," and not of a character equal to and even superior to the chief of the bureau, and I think no one will deny the correctness of this position. Almost every bureau in this great department contains provisions for the employment of assistants, clerks, and "other persons," and yet I am sure no one will claim that the term "other persons" gives to the Secretary of Agriculture the authority to appoint persons whose duties and functions are superior to the chief of the bureau. Such an idea is absurd on its face and contrary to every principle of common sense.

These words were not intended to convey any such authority. It was not in the mind of Congress that such meaning should be given them, and I wish to call the attention of the committee to the language of the Supreme Court in the case of Holy Trinity Church v. The United States, as follows:

It is a familiar rule that a thing may be within the letter of the statute and yet not within the statute, because not within its spirit nor within the intention of its makers.

And in the case of the United States v. Palmer (3 Wheat., 601, 631) the court applied the doctrine in this way, and it is an opinion of Chief Justice Marshall:

The words of the section are in terms of unlimited extent. The words "any person or persons" are broad enough to comprehend every human being. But general words must not only be limited to cases within the jurisdiction of the State, but also to those objects to which the legislature intended to apply them.

Does anyone contend that Congress intended the words "other persons" to convey to the Secretary of Agriculture such authority as he has exercised in the creation of this Bureau of Consulting Chemists? The Secretary of Agriculture is not a lawyer, but he is too good a farmer, with too much common sense, to believe himself, in my judgment, that he had such authority, and I am of the opinion that only the positive direction of the President of the United States could have committed him to an act in plain violation of the law.

The question is, Shall Congress stand for any such action upon the part of the executive branch of the Government and shall we permit the emasculation of the pure-food law through the devious workings and windings of commissions and boards which have been appointed in the face of the law?

But why the creation of this board? Why the creation of a board of pure food and drug inspection? When the Chief of the Bureau of Chemistry undertook the enforcement of this act he was evidently guided by the reasons which induced this legislation, viz, the protection of the lives and health of the American citizens against poisonous preservatives and the protection of the American consumer of food products against evils and frauds in the way of misbranding. He must have had in mind the same idea that Congress had, that no chances must be taken with the lives and health of the people in permitting the use of preservatives in foods and drugs. Experts disagree, and for that reason their findings are sometimes regarded by the layman as worthless, but when their disagreement may involve the life or health of a citizen, he is wisest who decides the question in favor of life and health. It was this spirit, the spirit of taking no risk which might jeopardize life and health, that guided the course of that distinguished scientist upon whom the law, by direction, has placed the burden of protecting the consuming public against fraud, against poisonous substances, against rotten food, against insanitary methods of manufacture. He conducted his experiment with great caution and care. His conclusions were irresistible.

He put out of business salicylic acid; he drove formaldehyde out of use as a preservative and tabooed other poisonous substances; and the great scientists of the world, the Imperial Board of Germany, the chemists of all creation, in almost unani-mous voice, said that he was right. The honest manufacturer said he was right, and wished him godspeed in his great work; the press of the country said he was right, and backed him with its great power; the innocent consumers of the country, in every home and hamlet, in mighty accord acclaimed him a benefactor. It was the dishonest manufacturers—those who sent thousands of brave soldiers in Cuba to their deaths with embalmed beef, those who have sold you catsups made from the peelings of rotten tomatoes, those who have jeopardized the lives of children and invalids by selling to them preserved, rotten milk-these are they who have stood in the way of the enforcement of the act, and these are they who whined out when the manacles of the law began to tighten around them. It was in answer to the call of these kinds of adulterators of foods, the malefactor, and the lawless manufacturer that resulted in the creation of that scientific board which we have been appropriating for in the Bureau of Chemistry, known as the "Board of Pure Food and Drugs Inspection."

I understand it to be the duty of this board, and the Chief of the Bureau of Chemistry is its chairman, to collect the facts as to the misbranding of an article of food, or as to the use of preservatives which are either harmful or deleterious to health. And it may seem strange, and it is strange, that one of these eminent scientists, one of these men who are to determine whether copper sulphate is poisonous or not, whether the use of salicylic acid is dangerous, whether the use of benzoate of soda is harmful, whether any of these chemicals used for preservative purposes are likely to produce ill effects—I say one of these experts, one of these scientists-comprehensively familiar with these preservatives and drugs, happens to be a lawyer, who has been in the Department of Agriculture a few years and is now its solicitor; that is, the general-law man of the Department of Agriculture. It may be that he knows the law, and I presume he does, but if any one should tell me that this young lawyer knows anything about chemistry, knows anything about the chemistry of food, I confess that I shall have to be shown the fact. When this board was created, one Doctor Dunlap was appointed associate chemist. Doctor Dunlap is responsible to no one—he is independent in the exercise of his functions. He is of the bureau and at the same time not of it. The Chief of the Bureau of Chemistry has no more to do with the direction of his work than you have, or I, and yet the chief of this bureau is held responsible for the findings or the facts. The majority of this board must agree to the facts certified to the Secretary.

I am not here to say that this board is harmonious or otherwise, but I am here to say that its creation was extralegal, and I fear that it has resulted in seriously hampering the enforcement of the pure food and drug act. This board was created, as I have said, at the behest of the manufacturers. The consuming public cared nothing about the creation of this board; it was satisfied with the manner of the enforcement of the law as was given to it by the Chief of the Bureau of Chemistry. For a while the manufacturers were satisfied with this arrangement, and things rocked along, as far as the public could see, without a jar, and then came the decision of this board that benzoate of soda was a preservative dangerous to health and life. The facts were certified to the Secretary of Agriculture, who published them as provided by law, and then the manufacturers who were using these preservatives swooped down upon Washington, carrying their assault even to the White House. They laid their case before the President, urging that benzoate of soda was not harmful and that certain goods could not be put upon the market without the use of it as a preservative. It was a hard problem. The President did not wish that any great manufacturing establishment should have its doors closed; and when it was alleged that such would be the case if benzoate of soda should be tabooed, he called to his aid his trusted assistants of the Department of Agriculture. I can imagine what happened. In that impulsive way, characteristic of him, he said to the imploring delegation of manufacturers, "I will give you a square deal; I will send for the Board of Pure Food and Drug Inspection and the Secretary of Agriculture." that this board and the Secretary hastened to the White House, and when they walked into the consulting room I can imagine what took place.

I can imagine, Mr. Chairman, that great stress may have been brought to bear upon the President to get him to appoint a referee board. I can well see, also, that in the utmost good faith and believing that its decision would strengthen the law, the President could have been induced to do so. I may picture what possibly might have occurred in his office. Perhaps the Indianapolis, to enjoin the state food officials from doing their duty—for instance, Curtice Brothers, of Rochester, and Williams Brothers, of Detroit, affirm that they could not make a catsup without benzoate of soda, when they knew that some of the largest manufacturers of the country were doing so-may have solicited the protection of the President in carrying on their low-grade business. I can imagine they may have even asked the Secretary of Agriculture to confer with him on this matter and to advise him whether or not these substances are injurious to health, and the Secretary of Agriculture doubtless answered in the affirmative. I can imagine then the President turning to these gentlemen and informing them that if these are injurious substances they should not be allowed to be put into foods. At any rate, however, they seem to have had their way, and it was ordered that $100,000 of the money which had been appropriated to carry out the provisions of this act should be used to pay the experts appointed at the instigation of these manufacturers, who had the instinctive keenness of business to prefer their bills to be paid by the United States rather than by themselves. It was in this way that they deceived the President and secured the services of a very expensive board without spending one cent.

I can imagine that the upshot of this conference was that when the President was informed by Doctor Wiley, Doctor Dunlap, Secretary Wilson, and our young chemico-legal friend, Mr. McCabe, that benzoate of soda was a poisonous substance, deleterious to health and dangerous to the lives of the people who ate food in which it had been used, that he rose upon his tiptoes and bringing his clenched fist down upon the table said, "If this is your verdict, gentlemen, benzoate of soda can not be used in the foods of this country." I do not know that this is a true picture. I can very well imagine how such a scene could happen. Doctor Wiley and his little crew went away happy and content. Time rolled on and then, like the bursting of a volcano, came the announcement that the President had determined to appoint and had appointed, as a court of final jurisdiction, a so-called "Referee Board of Consulting Chemists," which should pass finally and forever upon matters in dispute affecting the use of preservatives in foods. Victory number two was chalked up to the manufacturer. The consuming public was none the wiser.

This illegally appointed board began its investigation February 24, 1908. Exactly what they did is not known, because their report has not been published. Enough has come to the public eye to inform us that they have held benzoate of soda not to be injurious in the sense in which Doctor Wiley held it to be. Following the plan laid down by Doctor Wiley in his investigation, they conducted "poison squads" for a period of two months and found that, administered in small quantities, benzoate of and found that, administered in small quantities, benzoate of soda failed to show any deleterious effect upon healthy young men; but they did find "in some directions there was slight modification in certain physiological processes, the exact significance of which modification is not known." Larger doses of this chemical were given for only one month, and hence the conclusion that this expensive, extra-legal referee board has thrown no light upon the subject of benzoate of soda, and the only result so far from it has been the muddying of the water, the adding of confusion to confusion, and the practical suspension of the operations of the pure-food law as to benzoate of soda. The board has accomplished nothing in the way of good. Its operations have worked harm, and it is but another illustration of a fact which, happily, is dawning upon the country—that the thing most needed at this hour is an Executive whose judgment is guided by the law rather than by his individual impulses.

I do not know whether benzoate of soda is a dangerous or poisonous preservative. I am no more of a chemist than is George W. McCabe, a member of the Board of Pure Food and Drugs Inspection, but I do know that the man whose statutory duty it is to pass upon this matter says that it is dangerous; and although great general chemists differ with him, while all food chemists agree with him, I am willing to take his judgment, for I regard him as the most competent man in all the world to speak upon the subject. And besides that, I wish to guard myself and the public against any risks of endangering life and health; and the very spirit of the pure food and drugs act, if it means anything, it means that the public shall be guarded against risks.

The law of probabilities should have some weight in this connection. If Doctor Wiley has heretofore been right in his decisions touching these preservatives, it is not a great assumpsame parties who appeared before Federal Judge Anderson, in tion to attach the greatest possible consideration to his decision with respect to benzoate of soda. What are the facts? I read from food-inspection decision 76, page 5:

In order to obtain the views of eminent physiologists and hygienists, health officers, and physicians in the United States as to the propriety of using preservatives in foods, a list of questions was sent out from the Department of Agriculture, to which a large number of replies was received. These questions and the replies have been tabulated as follows:

1. Ara preservatives, other than the usual condimental preservatives, namely, sugar, salt, alcohol, vinegar, spices, and wood smoke, injurious to health?

Affirmative	218
Negative	 33
Total	951

2. Does the introduction of any of the preservatives which you deem injurious to health render the foods injurious to health? Affirmative ____

3. If a substance added to food is injurious to health, does it become so when a certain quantity is present only, or is it so in any quantity whatever?

Affirmative _____

4. If a substance is injurious to health, is there any special limit to the quantity which may be used which may be fixed by regulation or by law? Affirmative ____ Negative ____ Affirmative ____ Total _.

It can readily be seen from this tabulation that the opinions expressed point overwhelmingly to the fact that preservatives as a class are injurious to health, and hence their use is, under the act, inhibited.

Again, Mr. Chairman, Doctor Wiley's investigation showing the effect of sulphurous acid and sulphites upon digestion and health was confirmed by the German imperial board of health; health was confirmed by the German imperial board of health; his investigations with respect to salicylic acid and salicylates were confirmed by an almost unanimous opinion of health officers and physicians throughout the country; the results of his borax experiments confirmed by the German imperial board of health; his formaldehyde investigations confirmed by everyone who has ever studied the subject; and it remains for this surreptitiously created referee board of consulting chemists to deny the results of his investigations with respect to benzole acid and benzoates. But even in this one instance, where this new board dissents, it is not supported by the food and dairy experts of the country, who agree with the findings of Doctor Wiley.

Knowing that the members of the executive committee of the National Association of State Dairy and Food Commissioners

National Association of State Dairy and Food Commissioners were men who had given their lives to the study of the effects of preservatives upon health, I addressed a number of them the following telegram:

Does your association oppose the use of all chemical preservatives in foods? Are you personally and officially opposed to the use of chemical preservatives in foods? Will the legalization of an unrestricted use of benzoate of soda result in harm to infants and invalids? Would you favor letting the question go to the courts instead of being officially decided by the Referee Board of Consulting Chemists?

To this telegram the following responses have come:

I answer yes to all questions in your message. Letter will follow at once.

Food Chemist of North Carolina.

Law of Indiana prohibits antiseptics in foods. I am opposed to chemical preservatives and drugs in foods. Legislation of benzoate will open way to unrestricted use. Infants and invalids will undoubtedly be harmed. Question can not be settled by referee board. Decision only complicates mooted questions. Sanitary aspect of use of benzoate is most important and must be fully considered.

Our association does not approve the use in food products of any chemical preservative which has not been proven beyond reasonable doubt by scientific investigation to be harmless to health, or if its use conceals in any way inferiority of product. Have not received full report from referee board, but understand this board restricts its decision to physiological effects on healthy individuals under observation for two months only. Other observations for longer period are to the contrary. This leaves effect of benzoate of soda on healthy individuals doubtful, without consideration of effect on infants and invalids, and does not take into consideration insanitary conditions and inferior products made profitable by its use. Personally, would favor test case in the courts which would bring out all sides of question. In the meantime, the Government should investigate all phases of the question. Our association has had the matter up with the President since referee board's report, and feel confident of this effort in the consumer's interest.

Our association is unalterably opposed to use of all chemical preservatives. Am officially and personally opposed. Harm to infants and invalids. Covers up fraud. Court should interpret law.

Answering your telegram, the Association of State and National Food and Dairy Departments, of which I am president, at its last meeting unanimously passed a resolution opposing all chemical preservatives in foods as harmful and unnecessary. Officially and personally I am opposed to the use of all chemical preservatives in foods. Am convinced that the unrestricted use of benzoate of soda would result in great harm, especially to infants and invalids. Would prefer to have all questions go to the court rather than to have them passed upon by referee board. Letter follows.

These telegrams prove two things—that the food experts agree with Doctor Wiley in his conclusions with respect to the harmfulness of benzoate of soda, and also bring out the fact that somebody blundered in the appointment of the referee board of consulting chemists.

I shall now read a few most interesting letters received in the last few days from various dairy and food commissioners. These letters agree unanimously that the use of benzoate of soda should be prohibited, not only because of its deleterious effect on health, but because—and this is a matter to which I wish to direct especial attention-its use permits the introduction of unscrupulous methods in the manufacture of food and dairy products and the use of inferior and partly decomposed materials.

My Dear Str. Replying to yours of the 30th instant, I would say that the Association of State Food Commissioners, of which I am a member, is emphatically opposed to the use of all chemical preservatives save salt, sugar, vinegar, spices, wood smoke, edible oils, fats, and alcohol. These preparations above enumerated are classed as standard preservatives, and all save vinegar, salt, spices, and wood smoke have valuable food properties. The association is opposed to the use of all chemical preservatives, and all preservatives if poisonous or injurious to health under conditions in which they are used in food products. Among such preservatives we class fluorids, beta-naphthol, formaldehyde, salts of copper, sallcylic acid and its salts, boric acid and its salts, sulphurous acid and its salts, boric acid and its salts.

As a member of the joint committee on standards of the Association of Official Agricultural Chemists and of the Association of State and National Food and Dairy Departments, I take the same ground. I do not believe that chemical preservatives or drugs have any place in food products.

They have no quality which entitles them to any place as a food product. In passing through the digestive track it affords neither heat nor energy; it does not restore waste tissue; it does not build up any new tissue; It does not have any value in increasing or diminishing the saline contents of the blood; and thus can not take any part in osmosis, the great controlling physical factor in life. All of this is especially true of benzoate of soda, which is regarded generally by chemists and physicians as a drug and as such is frequently administered as a medicine. In addition to the question of the injurious or deleterious effects upon the health by benzoate of soda, I believe it should not be allowed in food products, because its use encourages and makes possible the use of poor and unfit raw material, waste products unfit for food, the maintenance of insanitary premises, and car sumed by infants, invalids, and aged people in every wark and condition of life.

The impropriety of allowing a drug, even though that drug may be shown to be noninjurious in minimum quantities under certain rigid conditions of health and strength, can not be questioned. It will be impossible to control its use. Milkmen may employ it in their milk, the butcher in his meats, the packer in his preserves, the canner in his catsup, and the brewer in his beer, and it is certain that under a wide-open policy it will be possible for the consumer to take daily without his knowledge far more than the maximum dose of this preservative.

without his knowledge far more than the maximum dose of this preservative.

The sanitary aspect of the use of benzoate of soda is most important and must be fully considered, and for that reason I do not think the consumer should be compelled to accept a decision by any board of referees which considers only one side of the question. The argument of the manufacturers that they should be allowed to use the preservative is without weight. There is not a single article of food which has been preserved by means of benzoate of soda which can not be preserved and offered to the consumer in perfect condition without the aid of any chemical preservative. This fact has been completely demonstrated in the case of fellies, jams, catsup, preserves, pickles, cider, fruit juices, mince-meat, and other articles of the same character. Yours, truly,

H. E. BARNARD, State Food and Drug Commissioner.

Answering your telegram, the Association of State and National Food and Dairy Departments, of which I am president, at its last meeting unanimously passed a resolution opposing all chemical preservatives in foods as harmful and unnecessary. Officially and personally, I am opposed to the use of all chemical preservatives in foods. The wires being down on account of the storm, your telegram came by wire to Janesville, Wis., and from there by mail, and it was necessary that my telegram go by mail to Chicago and from there by wire.

The resolution unanimously passed by the Association of State and National Food and Dairy Departments at its twelfth annual convention, held at the island of Mackinac, August 4 to 7, 1908, and to which I referred in my telegram, is as follows:

"Resolved, That this association is convinced that all chemical preservatives are harmful in foods and that all kinds of food products are and may be prepared and distributed without them, and pledges its best efforts to use all moral and legal means at its disposal to exclude chemical preservatives from food products, and to this end we ask the cordial support of all national, state, and municipal authorities charged with the enforcement of food and drug laws. And in this connection we desire to express our gratitude for the helpful services of the medical profession generally, and especially to the American Medical Association."

According to the newspaper account, the referee board of scientific with the enforcement of food and drug laws. And in this connection we desire to express our gratitude for the helpful services of the medical profession generally, and especially to the American Medical Associatios."

According to the newspaper account, the referee board of scientific consulting chemists failed to find any deleterious effect upon healthy young men of small doses of benzoate of soda given for a short period of time, aithough they did report: "In some directions there were slight modifications in certain physiological processes, the exact significance of which modifications is not known," when larger doses of this chemical were given for only one month. To conclude from this that benzoate of soda would be a proper ingredient of foods would be extremely danagerous, since its effect upon infants and invalids has not been demonstrated nor even the effect upon healthy adults of oft-repeated doses extending over a longer period of time. The quantity of added bens frequently been found to be greatly in excess of what the referee board calls small doses for adults.

Moreover, this and other chemical preservatives have been found to be entirely unnecessary in the manufacture and preservation of foods when clean, sound raw materials are suitably prepared in clean, sanitary factories. Chemical preservatives make possible and are often used for the purpose of employing partly spoiled raw materials and manufacturing them under insanitary conditions.

If the report of the referee board is to be understood as holding that benzoate of soda when added to food is harmless, and this holding is accepted by the national authorities, and its unrestricted use is to follow in foods such as meats, milk, catsups, preserves, and a host of others, the conclusion is inevitable that we are by one stroke set back to the condition of things as they existed before the enactment of food laws. Such action on the part of the national authorities would prove very obstructive to state dairy and food commissioners in the enforce were

For a certain period of time he fed to one lot of cattle the usual amount of salt, and to another lot he withheld the salt. For a time he was unable to discover any difference and had about reached the conclusion that the feeding of salt to cattle was unnecessary; but he concluded to continue the experiment for another period, and after continuing the experiment for a few weeks longer, the cattle from which the feeding of salt was withheld began to go to pleces and actually did go to pleces, whereas the cattle to which the salt was fed continued strong and healthy. Had he generalized from the short period of feeding the cattle without salt that salt was unnecessary, his conclusion would have been entirely erroneous, as the continuation of the experiment fully determined.

Hon. A. F. LEVER, M. C., Washington, D. C.

Hon, A. F. Lever, M. C.,

Washington, D. C.

Dear Sir: Replying to your message regarding the use of benzoate of soda in food, I will say that the Association of State and National Food and Dairy Departments does oppose the use of all chemical preservatives in food products, and I, officially and personally, oppose the use of them. I believe that the legalization of an unrestricted use of benzoate of soda in food will result in harm to invalids and infants, as well as many others who have weak digestive or other organs. The unrestricted use of benzoates will, in my mind, not only be deterious to the health of many people, but it will make possible and pave the way for a great deal of fraud. With the use of preservatives it would be possible for unscrupulous manufacturers to use in the manufacture of food a great deal of material that is unfit for such use and could not otherwise be used for the purpose. It will permit of the use of insanitary and filthy methods of manufacture, which otherwise will not be possible.

Then there is no real need for the use of preservatives, for all foods are put up and kept in good condition without the use of them. The latter fact may be proved without a doubt.

As to the question of the use of preservatives being settled by a board or by the courts, I hardly know what to say. It seems that by a board would be the logical settlement of such a question. However, it seems to me that it is a proposition that will take long and tedious investigation to reach absolutely correct results. The effect of preservatives in food on the human system is necessarily slow, and, in my opinion, the evil effect might not show itself in months and even in years. I believe the unrestricted use of preservatives is dangerous and being unnecessary, should be prohibited.

House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIB: I received a telegram from you Saturday, which read as follows:

"Does your association oppose the use of all chemical preservatives in foods? Are you officially and personally opposed to the use of all chemical preservatives in foods? Will the legislation of an unrestricted use of benzoate of soda result in harm to infants and invalids? Would you favor letting all questions go to the courts instead of being officially decided by the referee board of consulting chemists? Wire answer and write full particulars at once."

This I answered in the following words, which I now confirm:

"Our association does not approve the use in food products of any chemical preservative which has not been proven beyond reasonable doubt by scientific investigation to be harmless to health, or if its use conceals in any way inferiority of product. Have not received full report from referee board, but understand this board restricts its decision to physiological effects on healthy individuals under observations for two months only. Other observations for longer period are to the contrary. This leaves effect of benzoate of soda on healthy individuals doubtful, without consideration of effect on infants and invalids, and does not take into consideration insanitary conditions and inferior products made possible by its use.

"Personally would favor test case in the courts, which would bring out all sides of question. In the meantime the Government should investigate all phases of the question. Our association has had the matter up with the President since referee board's report, and feel confident of his efforts in the consumer's interest."

As stated in the telegram, I have not received the report of the referee board as to its conclusions on benzoate of soda. I have seen nothing except reports from the papers. If these reports are correct, the referee board comes to the conclusion, after separate experiments on healthy individuals for a period lasting not over two months, that the

When Doctor Wiley first began experiments with preservatives on his squad of young men, the criticism was made that the results might or still the value if the results on the strong young men under observation showed that they were not affected by the use of the preservative. For its control of the preservative is the preservation of the preservative and the preservation of the preservative. For its control of the preservative is the preservative and the preservative is the preservative in the preservative in the preservative is the preservative in the preservative in the preservative is the preservative in the preservative in the preservative is the preservative in the preservative in the preservative in the preservative is the preservative in the preserv

But, Mr. Chairman, the manufacturers, who inveigled the President into the appointment of this referee board, who seduced his judgment and committed him to a plain violation of law and to a policy which must ultimately mean the death of the spirit of pure-food legislation, contended that it was impossible for them to continue their manufacturing operations unless permitted the use of certain of these preservatives which had come under the ban of the Chief of the Bureau of Chemistry. Let me read the telegrams and letters from some of the honest, law-abiding manufacturers of canned goods, catsups, and the like to prove the falsity of this contention.

I sent this telegram to two concerns, and each promptly replied:

Would you wire me if you are opposed to the use of benzoate of soda in foods, and why? Wire answer and write fully. A. F. LEVER.

The following replies were received:

We are opposed to the use of benzoate of soda or any other chemical preservative in food products, upon the ground that their use makes it possible to use inferior and unsound material in the manufacture of foods. Writing.

We oppose benzoate. Much expert opinion is recorded against it. Doubt existing. We prefer safe side. Furthermore it invites employment refuse and waste material, unfit for human consumption, which is principle object of its use.

I now read letters from each of these great packing concerns, which are respecting the law and are not using preservatives with which to palm off on the public rotten and unfit food in order to swell their profits:

Dear Sir: We inclose herewith confirmation of our reply to your telegraphic inquiry of to-day; and in response to your request for a written reply at greater length, perhaps we could give you no better expression of our views and position upon this subject than was contained in an address by the writer before the Society of Chemical Industry at New York in October a printed copy of which we inclose.

We may say further, however, that we believe the real interest of the great prepared-food industry of the country as a whole will be best served by that course of procedure under the law which will most enhance the reputation of American food products. The legitimate preserving industry of the country will not be injured by the prohibition of chemical preservatives, but will rather be brought into disrepute by their toleration through distrust and lack of confidence thereby caused in the minds of the consuming public, both at home and abroad, concerning the materials and methods employed.

Yours, truly,

Hon. A. F. LEVER, M. C., Washington, D. C.

Washington, D. U.

Dear Sir: We have your telegram asking us to wire you if we are opposed to the use of benzoate of soda in foods, and why; also to write you regarding the matter, and have wired you as follows: "We are opposed to the use of benzoate of soda, or any other chemical preservative, in food products, on the ground that their use makes it possible to use inferior and unsound materials in the manufacture of foods." Being without advice as to the object of your inquiry we can only guess at it, and presume that it is your intention to take up the preservative question in Congress. If so, we would state our position in the matter, as follows:

The report of the referee board would indicate that its members con-at it, and presume that it is your intention to take up the preservative question in Congress. If so, we would state our position in the matter, as follows:

The report of the referee board would indicate that its members consider the use of benzoate of soda not injurious in any quantity. This report is based upon the results of experiments on so-called "health squads" or "poison squads," the experiments extending over a period of two months in the case of the small doses administered, and one month in the case of the larger dosage, and the conclusions reached being directly opposed to those reached by Doctor Wiley as the result of similar experiments carried on by him for a period of nine months. We question whether the conclusions reached by the referee board in the one or two months' experiments are entitled to anything like the consideration that should be accorded to the conclusions reached by Doctor Wiley after experimental work of the same kind extending over a period of nine months.

But aside entirely from the question of wholesomeness or unwholesomeness of benzoate of soda itself, we think attention should be given to the possibility of foods being unwholesome by reason of their being made from inferior materials, the use of such materials being made possible by the employment of benzoate of soda as a disinfectant or preservative. We presume that no one but a physician, devoting his attention to internal medication, or a physiological chemist is competent to pass on the question of wholesomeness or unwholesomeness of benzoate of soda, and we would not attempt to do so ourselves, but we feel fully competent from our knowledge of business conditions to discuss the other phase of the question. We know, and every packer of catsup and similar goods knows, that it is possible, by using benzoate of soda, to make catsup from catsup stock or so-called "pulp," made from the waste and refuse of canning factories, instead of from whole, ripe tomatoes, and that it is also possible to use stock in a condition and o sanitary manner, is only possible through the use of benzoate of soda or some other chemical preservative, and the poorer the quality of stock used the greater proportion of preservative necessary.

We are free to admit that we have not always taken our present view of this preservative question. Until a very few years ago no objection had ever been raised to the use of preservative, and packers generally accepted the statements of the chemical manufacturing concerns to the effect that such preservative in common use was salicylic acid, and when the question was raised as to its is juriousness, we were offered benzoate of soda as a substitute, with the assurance not only of the manufacturers, but in many cases of the chemists of the state of the state of soda as a substitute, with the assurance not only of the manufacturers, but in many cases of the chemists of the state of some under the equestion was raised as to its injuriousness, we were offered benzoate of soda and was not injurious in any way. It was the universal belief that a preservative of some kind was absolutely necessary in goods such as we are packing; not so much to prevent fermentation and mold before opening, as to prevent spoilage after the bottles are opened, owing to the fact that from the manner of their use the contents of the bottles are exposed to the air and to consequent contamination from germs in the air for a long time before the entire contents of the bottles are exposed to the air and to consequent contamination from germs in the air for a long time before the entire contents of the bottles are consumed. Consequently, when the question was raised as to the injuriousness of benzoate of soda and all other preservatives, we felt that the life of our business was at stake, and that the position taked by Doctor Wiley in opposition to all preservatives was arbitary and incorrect, and, in common with other packers, the writer fought that produce the preservatives of drugs in foods by many friends of the writer fought that position to all

I will now read briefly from an address of L. S. Dow, of the Heinz Company, before the Society of Chemical Industry in New York on October 23, 1908, as showing the animus of these vicious assaults upon the Bureau of Chemistry and the reasons for the vigorous efforts of certain manufacturers to have a board created which should supersede in authority the present legally constituted authority for the enforcement of the pure food and drug act:

food and drug act:

Having then disposed of some of these leading points that are commonly made against the practicability of a ruling that will prohibit the use of benzoates in tomato catsup, I hope to your entire satisfaction, although we shall be prepared to offer some further and very tangible proof upon the subject right here this evening, the question naturally arises, Why should any reputable manufacturer desire to continue the use of a questionable substance in his product? Gentlemen, that I can not understand, and I have never been able to answer it satisfactorily to myself for some very reputable concerns. Even a cannery by-product, the cheapest and lowest of all raw tomato products, can doubtless be pulped and made into a semblance of catsup without an artificial preservative if it is well enough cared for and properly handled; but apparently the trouble with most of—what I think may be fairly termed without offense—the reactionary interests lies in the fact that it costs too much to properly care for this refuse; that it costs too much to maintain sanitary premises; that it costs too much to product instead of water.

From a pamphet recently issued under the authorship of one of our esteemed competitors, who is present here this evening, and entitled "Thoughts and Suggestions Evoked by Pure Food Legislation," we quote as follows:

"There are two kinds of food and drug producers affected by the quote as follows:

"There are two kinds of food and drug producers affected by the law, i. e., those that believe certain preservatives are harmless, or even beneficial in limited quantities, and those who don't care whether they are or not, as long as money can be made by their use. The moral difference between the two is apparent at a glance, but unfortunately the inhibition of antiseptics in food products has the same effect on both—great injury to or complete ruin of their business.

"The common interest brings them together in opposition to the enforcement of the law according to Dr. Wiley's conception of what the law means, as well as to the details of its enforcement.

"Consequently they would rather have no law, or have it emasculated or nullified, than to lose their business, and the first class mentioned, seeing no escape from Doctor Wiley's opinions or decisions under existing conditions, feels constrained to join issue with the criminal class, excusing themselves by the law of self-preservation."

I wish to read from the Indianapolis News of January 30, 1909, to show the attitude of many manufacturers of legitimate food products toward the question of the necessity of the preservatives:

Legitimate food interests of America have come to the fore to defend Dr. H. W. Wiley, Chief of the Bureau of Chemistry, and to combat the efforts being made by the heretofore dominant element of the trade to defeat the ends to which pure-food legislation has been aimed, namely, the protection of the country's food supply. An organization of manufacturers, opposed to the use of chemical preservatives and colorings in goods, was formed at a convention held this week in the Waldorf-Astoria, New York, pursuant to a call issued by Paul Pierce, editor of the National Food Magazine.

A glance at some of the names of the charter members of this association shows clearly that it is not an organization to be ridiculed. Among the members are: The Shredded Wheat Company, Niagara Falls, N. Y.; Merrell-Soule Company, Syracuse, N. Y.; H. J. Heinz Company, Pittsburg, Pa.; Columbia Conserve Company, Indianapolis, Ind.: the Franco-American Food Company, Jersey City Heights, N. J.; J. Hungerford Smith Company, Rochester, N. Y.; Beech-Nut Packing Company, Canajoharle, N. Y.; F. C. Hazard & Co., New York City; Price Flavoring Extract Company, Chicago, Ill.; J. W. Beardsley's Sons, New York City; and W. R. Roach & Co., Hart, Mich.

Practically all of these manufacturers are manufacturing, without the use of chemical preservation, the very food products that food adulterators say can not be successfully manufactured and marketed without the addition of these harmful chemical ingredients.

REFEREE BOARD'S ACTION.

REFEREE BOARD'S ACTION.

Like all harmful preservatives, there always is room for argument as to just how great a quantity the human system can stand. It appears to be admitted by all that benzoate of soda is harmful, but the referee board says that it is not harmful in certain quantities used in food products, but the board does not tell us what the effect would be on the consumer if there was a little of this preservative, or some other like preservative, in most of the foods we are obliged to eat. If 10 chemists swear that benzoate of soda poisons the child that eats it, and 10, 20, or even 30 others swear that he can manage to eat it and live, why should the risk be taken, anyhow?

Why should any manufacturer desire to use these adulterants, when it is shown by the product of many other manufacturers that their use is absolutely unnecessary to successful food preservation? In the answer to this question lies the meat of the whole subject. It is because by the use of this drug the unscrupulous manufacturer is enabled to realize large profits by employing in his product raw materials that are unfit and unwholesome to the point of exciting extreme disgust at their mere mention.

Since the legitimate food trade is on the side of the people and supporting Doctor Wiley in his stand against the use of artificial chemicals in food products, and leading chemists have declared these artificial preservatives to be poisonous, the fact that the referee board has come to the conclusion that they are not injurious in small doses ought not to have much weight.

To say that benzoate of soda is not injurious in small doses is an implied admission that it is injurious in large doses; and as so many chemists in both Europe and America declare it to be poisonous, the consumer should at least be given the benefit of the doubt, especially so when leading food manufacturers have organized and taken their stand on the side of the head of the Bureau of Chemistry and in favor of the people.

consumer should at least be given the benefit of the doubt, especially so when leading food manufacturers have organized and taken their stand on the side of the head of the Bureau of Chemistry and in favor of the people.

Many of these manufacturers of legitimate foods, who have souls and consciences, would rather go out of business than to be responsible for such widespread disaster as they firmly believe results from the chemical treatment of food products. They say that preservatives are unnecessary for the treatment of food when pure raw products are employed and when absolute cleanliness is observed in the manufacture. It would seem that our national authorities ought to side with this class of manufacturers and with the people instead of with the class of manufacturers and with the people instead of with the class of manufacturers which caused the pollution of America's food supply before the enactment of the national food law.

We are going to win this fight for the people In spite of every food adulterator in America. What are the "business interests" of a few questionable manufacturers compared with human life? Already the law has delayed and compromised in the fear of injuring the finances of these same gentlemen—always against the protest of Doctor Wiley—and now, waxing bold, they are attempting to discredit and depose the one absolutely fearless and incorruptible man who is working scientifically and unselfishly in the interest of the consumer. If right conquers at last in all battles, we're going to win this fight and free America from this particular graft permanently.

Mr. W. P. Hapgood, a member of the association and a food manufacturer of Indianapolis, said: "Over 50 per cent of the tomato catchup on the market is made from skins, parings, and rotten tomatoes taken from the refuse of other canning houses. Of course the discarding of preservatives would put such manufacturers out of business, but the public conscience ought to compel such business to generate the public conseience ought to com

ALL OPPOSE ADULTERATION

Bartlett Arkell, president of the Beech-Nut Packing Company, expressed himself as enthusiastic over this new association. He said; "We can manufacture any food better without a preservative than any other person can make the same product with a preservative; and if we ever find there is a food product that we can not make more successfully without a preservative, we will not manufacture that product." Sebastian Mueller, another food manufacturer, said: "There is no honest food product on the market to-day made out of fruits and vegetables which can not be successfully and satisfactorily packed without the aid of chemical preservatives, and I wish to predict that no manufacturer engaged in the making of fruit or vegetable products will discontinue his business or be forced to discontinue it if chemical preservatives are absolutely and for all time ruled out of food products."

RESOLUTIONS SENT TO PRESIDENT.

Whereas opinions of leading scientists in both Europe and America are divided upon the subject of artificial preservatives in prepared foods, there being great weight of opinion on both sides of the controversy, thus leaving the question of their injuriousness or otherwise still in doubt; and versy, thus leaving the question of their injuriousness or otherwise still in doubt; and Whereas, as practical manufacturers, we know that artificial preservatives of any kind are unnecessary to the successful commercial preparation of good, sound raw materials under proper sanitary conditions, thus making it both possible and reasonable to give the consuming public rather than the reactionary manufacturing interests the benefit of that doubt; and Whereas the use of artificial preservatives makes possible and invites the employment of inferior and waste materials, often totally unfit for human consumption, and of careless methods and insanitary conditions in food preparations; and Whereas we believe that not only will the reputation and standing of the great American food-producing industry be jeopardized, but that the interests of all the people will be sacrificed by any action on the part of the Government that permits the continued use of any artificial preservatives in any food product: Now, therefore, be it Resolved, That we are opposed to any ruling under the national food and drugs act of June, 1996, that permits the use of artificial preservatives in foods, or that in any way departs from either the letter or the spirit of that law.

The impression has gone abroad that the War Department gives no weight to the opinions of the Bureau of Chemistry's decisions touching matters of food adulterations in the purchase of supplies for the army. Let me read the correspondence between the Commissary-General and me in this matter:

MY DEAR SIR: It has come to my attention that it is claimed that you request that the catsups and pickles which you purchase for the army be preserved with benzoate of soda. Hon. A. F. Lever, M. C., House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

My Dear Sir: Replying to your letter of January 30, I desire to invite your attention to the inclosed copy of Circular 4, issued from this office under date of March 27, 1908, and to serial No. 322, on page 11 thereof, which simply calls for "sauce, tomato catsup," and specifies the number of pint bottles to a case. Attention is also invited to paragraph 1, on page 12 of this circular, under "Conditions governing in the purchase of subsistence stores." This latter paragraph distinctly states that supplies purchased by the Subsistence Department are subject to interstate shipment, and, consequently, such supplies must be bought in conformity with the pure-food law and the meat-inspection law and the regulations made pursuant to such laws. The attention of bidders is also invited to the standards of purity for food products prescribed by the Secretary of Agriculture. From all of which it is evident that the assertions made that the specifications require catsup to be put up with benzoate of soda are not correct.

The same applies to pickles, the specifications for which are found under serial Nos. 89 and 90 of the same circular.

Very respectfully,

Henry G. Shappe.

HENRY G. SHARPE, Commissary-General.

The attitude of the courts to which prosecutions under the pure-food act have been carried, may not be out of place in this discussion, and I quote from the opinion of Judge Smith McPherson, of the district court of the United States, western district of Missouri:

district of Missouri:

Adulteration of goods and false labeling had become so common that it was well-nigh impossible to purchase pure goods or that which was called for. The same was true as to medicines. Congress undertook to remedy it. The one purpose was to prevent the sale of adulterations. The other purpose was to enable a purchaser to obtain what he called for, and was willing to pay for. And under this latter view it is immaterial whether Michigan fruits are better than those grown in Arkansas. A purchaser of canned goods may prefer Michigan fruits. He may believe them to be better than Arkansas fruits. He has the right to call for them, and when he pays or is debited for them, he has the right to have Michigan fruits. The purchaser has the right to determine for himself which he will buy, and which he will receive, and which he will eat. The vendor can not determine that for the purchaser. He of course can make his arguments, but they should be fair and honest arguments.

This statute is to protect consumers and not producers. It is a most beneficent and righteous statute, and within the powers of Congress to legislate concerning, and should be enforced. It can not be enforced if it is to be emasculated, as is sought in the present case.

I quote also from Judge Anderson, of Indiana, in a recent

I quote also from Judge Anderson, of Indiana, in a recent deliverance from the bench:

Such men as Doctor Wiley and the Indiana state board of health knew what they were doing when the benzoate was prohibited.

And he (the judge) did not intend to show his ignorance of the subject by even considering the complaint at all; and he further said:

I am of the opinion that benzoate of soda is used, if at all, to cover up inferior quality of vegetables or fruits and insanitary processes of packing. I don't know, and don't care, whether it is a poison or not, it is only used to cover fraud and deception.

And now, Mr. Chairman, having brought this matter to the attention of the House, I feel that my duty is done. It remains for you to act. At the proper time I shall offer amendments which will provide that no part of the appropriation for the for you to act. Bureau of Chemistry shall be used for either the Board of Pure Food and Drug Inspection or the Referee Board of Consulting Chemists. I believe their existence can be of no value to the public; I believe the exercise of their authority handicaps, hampers and nullifies, in a measure, the enforcement of the pure food and drugs act in the spirit which Congress intended it to be enforced. I believe the lives and health and the protection of our people against fraudulent foods are matters of too great importance with which to dally. The pure food and drugs act should be enforced liberally in the interest of the great consuming public or it should be repealed, that the public might know that there was no sincere intention to enforce it. If we are to enforce it, let us take the millstones of specially appointed boards and commissions, appointed without authority of law and at the demand of dishonest manufacturers, from the neck of the Bureau of Chemistry, which is charged with the statutory duty, and which alone is charged with the statutory duty, of furnishing the scientific facts upon which the Secretary of Agriculture and the courts must rely in their decisions. [Loud applause.]

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I yield thirty minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BARTHOLDT].

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Chairman, there was a time in our history-and it is not so very long ago-when at least one of the great political parties seriously questioned the constitutionality of internal improvements if undertaken or proposed to be undertaken by the National Government. Luckily that day is passed. Then there came a period when the people indifferently accepted or quietly acquiesced in the policy of their farseeing statesmen looking to the improvement of rivers and harbors as a means of accommodating the growing commerce of the country. This period lasted up to the latter part of the last century. While fully realizing the benefits of cheap water transportation, and while a few organizations here and there were petitioning for an improvement policy on a larger scale, yet the masses of the American people were content with such appropriations as Congress could make after the legitimate needs of the Government in all other directions had been met. Then there came a great change. The people suddenly awakened to the importance of improving and maintaining the waterways as natural channels of trade in competition with the railroads and for the regulation of railroad rates. Organizations were formed all over the country for the promotion of special projects, and the demands upon Congress for larger appropriations became more and more urgent, until to-day both political parties are pledged to heed them, and neither can afford to longer ignore them. Owing to freight congestion and other causes these demands have, in fact, assumed the proportions of a great popular movement which has drawn into it, by its own momentum, the larger portion of the people of the United

The question of the hour is: How will Congress meet the demand? Shall progress be halted? Shall the wheels of commerce be stopped and the benefits of water transportation be withheld from the people because our revenues do not exceed our expenditures sufficiently to pay for these great improvements? My answer is that these improvements will never be made, either during the life of the present or that of future generations, if we shall have to solely depend upon an annual surplus in the Treasury, and this for the simple reason that there will either be no surplus at all or it will not be large enough to carry out the greater projects which the necessities of commerce are now forcing upon the attention of Congress.

Foreseeing this situation, Mr. Chairman, I had the honor to introduce in January, 1907, more than two years ago, a bill for the issue of waterway bonds to the amount of $500,000,000. was the first bill of its kind ever introduced in the House, and I remember well the skepticism, derision, and hostility with which it was received in many quarters. Even friends of water-way improvements shrugged their shoulders, and last year's Waterways Congress, while flirting with the proposition, did not care to openly espouse it. But since then what a change! To-day the President of the United States, the President-elect, the Vice-President, the Secretary of State, and the National Rivers and Harbors Congress are on record as heartily in-dorsing the plan, and a committee of the latter has just intro-duced a bill with identically the same object in view. Permit me to say in this connection that I have no pride of authorship. am after results rather than glory and willingly join hands with my colleagues to work for a common cause. But I owe it to the merchants of St. Louis to state that lasting credit is due to them for their inception and steadfast support of this plan, and for the encouragement and inspiration I have received at their hands in the effort of pointing out what is evidently the only way in which the hope for a more comprehensive policy of waterways improvement can ever be realized. The merchants of St. Louis are, in fact, the real pioneers of the bond movement.

Now, Mr. Chairman, let me give you the reasons for my advocacy of an issue of waterways bonds. It has been and is the practice of Congress to first provide for all the legitimate needs of the Government, and then, if anything is left, to set it aside for waterways, public buildings, and so forth. If all the revenues are needed for the regular expenses of the national household, it is the doubtful privilege of the friends of internal improvements to hold the bag. I venture to say, if the Government is to enter upon a policy favoring systematic internal improvements, a regular annual budget should be provided for that purpose, the same as for the army and navy and all other departments. Perhaps we shall live to see the day when that will be done, under a proper readjustment of expenditures such as will no longer permit our military and naval budgets to devour two-thirds of all our revenues; but for some years to come, I am afraid, such a readjustment will be impracticable, if not impossible. Under the present system, then, how long will we have to wait for our much-needed improvements? three millions a year were appropriated for the proposed 14-foot waterway from the Lakes to the Gulf, shall we wait thirty years for it? Shall a whole generation go down to their graves before advantages so apparent to all can be secured because the richest nation on earth can not do what smaller and poorer ones have accomplished long ago?

No one will seriously contend that it is anything but a question of money. And this being the case, we may well ask whether the projects to secure navigable channels from the Lakes to the Gulf, in the upper Mississippi, the Missouri, the Ohio, and other rivers shall wait until an income tax or an inheritance tax shall have yielded sufficient revenue to pay for them? I say no. Already the people have waited too long and too patiently for these beneficial improvements, and from the temper of their conventions we have good reason to infer that any good and equitable method to raise the necessary funds would be satisfactory to the people. [Applause.]

What would a level-headed business man do if he found that an enlargement of his plant or his store was sure to yield him greater profit, and yet he could not defray the extraordinary expenses out of his receipts? Why, he would not hesitate a moment in taking up a loan. The Government, I insist, should be controlled by the same business principles and do exactly the same thing. An issue of 2 or 3 per cent bonds to the amount of $500,000,000, to be distributed over a period of, say, ten years, will suffice to complete all great waterway projects whose improvement has received the official recommendation of the United States Engineer Corps, and will forever solve the problem of the permanent improvement of our great waterways. It is my deliberate judgment that it can not be done in any other

I am well aware of the existing prejudice against an issue of onds in time of peace. This prejudice would be justified if bonds in time of peace. This prejudice would be justified if the Government proposed to mortgage the future in order to meet its running expenses; but here we contemplate an extraor dinary expenditure, with an ample return for every dollar, and with all the guaranties of a permanent investment for the lasting benefit of the present as well as future generations. [Ap-No living American has dreamed of objecting to the Panama Canal loan, though this is an enterprise which we have undertaken for the whole world. Why, then, should there be objection to an undertaking which is of particular and exclusive benefit to the people of the United States? Charity begins at home, and surely it will not be urged that the Panama Canal will be more important to the American people than a ship canal through the heart of our own continent, connecting the Gulf of Mexico with the Great Lakes. But if both projects were of equal importance, why not strive for the equal realization of both and by the same means?

A justice of the Supreme Court has recently stated on the lecture platform that we are running into debt. He may have had state and municipal indebtedness in mind, but as to the Nation the assertion is hardly justified. It is true that on account of the Spanish war we issued $198,000,000 3 per cent bonds, and that $30,000,000 of 2 per cent bonds were sold in aid of the construction of the Panama Canal, but these were extraordinary expenses, while in reality the Government has redeemed 2 per cent bonds of the loan of 1891 amounting to $25,-364,500. It has also purchased for the sinking fund about $87,000,000 of bonds belonging to the 3 per cent loan of 1898—1918, the 4 per cent loans of 1907 and 1925, and the 5 per cent burdens for their share of the benefits. [Loud applause.] loan of 1904, a total reduction of the national debt since March, 1897, of over $112,000,000; and, by the way, $10,000,000 interest charges are annually saved by the conversion of 3, 4, and 5 per cent bonds to 2 per cent bonds. In other words, but for these extraordinary expenditures our national debt would have been reduced more than $112,000,000 during the last two years, and the interest charge on account of a new loan of $500,000,000 would not be any more than what the Government has saved in interest by the conversion of bonds.

It may also be pertinent to inquire how the public debt of the United States compares with the national debt of other countries. Here it is in round numbers:

France	$6,000,000,000
Russia	4, 000, 000, 000
United Kingdom	4, 000, 000, 000
Italy	3, 000, 000, 000
Spain	2, 000, 000, 000
Austria-Hungary	1, 000, 000, 000
German Empire	855, 000, 000
United States	944, 000, 000

This means that the national debt of France, with not half the population, is more than six times as large as ours; that of Russia and England more than four times as large; Italy three times, and that of Spain twice as large; while economical Germany nearly comes up to our figures, though her population is barely two-thirds of that of the United States. If we add the debt of the several German States, the total will reach nearly $4,000,000,000, while in our case the national debt and that of all the States put together amount to $1,178,000,000. It is safe to say that each one of these countries has done more for its water courses than the United States; in fact, it has been figured out that France alone has expended more for river improvements since the Franco-German war than America has since the formation of the Government.

National economists have long ago ceased to regard a public debt as an unmixed evil. It is a well-understood truth that every man who has a dollar invested in the Government is interested in its maintenance; and in the United States, where government bonds are the only recognized basis for nationalbank note circulation, such bonds are a commercial necessity of the first importance. So in a limited sense it is true, even in America, that a "national debt is a national blessing."

The plan I have outlined is not a mere passing fancy, but the result of a most careful deliberation, as well as the most disheartening experience. It has been born of the absolute conviction that the western rivers are doomed to complete abandonment unless the Members of Congress from that section, true to the demands of the people, make their development a distinct issue here, with the rallying cry of a national loan for internal improvements. If the actual situation here were generally known, nothing short of a bond issue would satisfy the people. As matters stand to-day, the chances for the real great and important projects are almost hopeless, and will remain so as long as the friends of waterway improvements must content themselves with the crumbs that fall from the government table. And in some years there are not even crumbs, because, like at present, expenditures exceed revenues by many millions of dollars.

These are the reasons which have impelled me to assume, after mature reflection, the responsibility of advocating a bond issue and of introducing the bill to which I have called atten-The logic of the situation demands this course as the only one possible to secure to the American producers and consumers the vast benefits of cheaper transportation and the increased facilities made necessary by our growing commerce. [Applause.]

In conclusion, let me say that we of the Mississippi Valley readily subscribe to the maxim that a policy and not a project should be advocated. While we are more interested in one project than in another-and the same is true of every Member on this floor-yet we favor the systematic improvement of all waterways of the country as a permanent policy. During my service here I have come to realize that no project, be it ever so great and national in scope, can be realized without the cooperation of all. Under our system, which makes the return of a Representative depend upon his success in the furtherance of local interests, the improvement of Newtown Creek is just as important, if not more so, to the Member from Long Island than is the improvement of the Mississippi River to the Member from Missouri, and the votes of both can only be secured if the favored projects of both receive due consideration. And we are not only in favor of this policy but also of the means to carry it out, and we favor the expedient of a bond issue on the theory that those who come after us should bear a just share of the Mr. LAMB. Mr. Chairman, I yield fifteen minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Heflin]. Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Chairman, under the law now the Department of Agriculture collects reports from the cotton producers of this country. These reports are made to the department and the Secretary of Agriculture makes an estimate as to what the crop will be; we also have the ginners' report of the cotton tinned. These reports are received and published monthly. And believing, Mr. Chairman, that it was just and fair to the cotton farmer that there should be some report made by the manufacturer, I have contended, and still contend, that the manufacturer ought to report to the Government once every month or once every sixty days, at least, showing how many bales of cotton he has purchased during that time and what amount has been manufactured into goods. I think that this is just

When Doctor Olmsted, of the Statistical Bureau of the Agricultural Department, was before the Agricultural Committee during the hearings, I brought this matter to the attention of the committee, and I asked Doctor Olmsted:

the committee, and I asked Doctor Olmsted:

What is the purpose of these reports?

Mr. Olmsted. The purpose is to secure prompt information that is constantly demanded and required regarding crop conditions and prospects, which, as you know, are the basis of business.

Mr. Heflin. Gives that information to the manufacturer?

Mr. Olmsted. To the farmer, the dealer, the implement man, the manufacturer, and to everybody.

Mr. Heflin. It gives reports as to what the producer is going to bring in the market. Do you not think it would be just and right that the manufacturer should make reports also, so that the producer would know what was on hand?

Mr. Olmsted. I think that would be a good idea for the proper bureau, the Bureau of Manufactures, perhaps; they might take the matter up. Take, for example, during the growing season. Everyone who has any business of any kind, I think, without exception, wants to know what the crop prospects are, whether they are favorable or not, for they desire to adjust their affairs to the prevailing conditions.

Mr. Heflin. Exactly; and if the planter knew from the manufacturer, from time to time, what he needed, it would enable him to know how much to plant in certain years.

Mr. Olmsted. It would have a bearing along that line.

Mr. Heflin. The cotton manufacturer should report the amount of raw cotton on hand at the factory, so that the producer will know how much cotton that factory will have on hand when he goes to plant his cotton.

Mr. Olmsted. That would be an excellent feature for the census re-

Mr. OLMSTED. That would be an excellent feature for the census re-

Mr. Chairman, I am glad to get this valuable testimonial from Doctor Olmsted.

Mr. Chairman, our farmers are justly demanding this legislation. It is just, and it is right, and I do not believe that any manufacturer who wishes to be fair and to do the just thing will complain. I have manufacturers of cotton in my district, and I live in the largest cotton-producing district in the State of Alabama, and I am proud to claim the friendship of both producer and manufacturer there.

In the interest of justice and in the interest of fairness, I ask that this legislation be had, and to the end that the House may have the opportunity to act in this matter I shall introduce a bill to-day, which I trust may become the law. I shall include this bill in my remarks:

A bill (H. R. 27605) to provide for collecting statistics from the manufacturers of cotton goods in the United States.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Department of Agriculture shall call upon the manufacturers of cotton goods in the United States once every sixty days and ascertain how many bales of cotton have been purchased by said manufacturers during the preceding sixty days, and how much cotton has been manufactured during that period, and also how much bale cotton is on hand at that time.

The Department of Agriculture shall publish this information next after the passage of this bill on the 1st day of September, on the 1st day of November, on the 1st day of January, on the 1st day of March, on the 1st day of May, and on the 1st day of July.

Sec. 2. This for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of section 1 of this act there is hereby appropriated $10,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

Mr. Chairman, the law now requires monthly reports to be made regarding the conditions and prospects of the cotton crop of the United States. This is valuable information to the manufacturer of cotton goods, and I think that it is fair and right that the manufacturer of cotton should make monthly reports to the Government. This would be valuable information to those who produce cotton.

If you want the manufacturer to know how much cotton the farmer will produce, why do you not want the farmer to know how much of his cotton the manufacturer will need?

The Government furnishes the manufacturer, not only with crop estimates, but with the ginners' reports, showing the exact number of bales of cotton ginned from the time cotton first opens in the early fall until the last pound is picked and ginned.

The manufacturer does not have to guess at the size and condition of the cotton crop; the Government keeps him posted. The field agents employed by the Government go over these cotton fields, and they report on crop conditions, and the Secretary of Agriculture, under the law, makes an estimate as to what the crop will be. These reports are published. The manufacturer knows what the producer of cotton is doing, for the Government tells him; but the producer does not know what the manufacturer is doing, and the Government does not tell

I submit to this House that we ought to require reports from producer and manufacturer alike, or we ought to abolish these reports altogether.

As the matter stands now, you cause the producer to give an account of every bale of cotton ginned, and at the end of the statistical month the manufacturer knows just how many bales have been ginned. He compares the amount with former reports, and this enables him to tell in a measure about what the crop will be, and he conducts his business in the light of this information.

Mr. Chairman, no monthly report is made of the supply of raw material that the manufacturer of cotton has on hand or the amount of goods manufactured. If it is fair to show the manufacturer the producer's hand, why is it not fair to show the producer the manufacturer's hand?

But some gentlemen say that this is prying into the manufacturer's private business. If that be true, we are now prying into the cotton producer's private business when we require that he report every pound of lint cotton that he has grown, and "sauce for the goose should be sauce for the gander." Why not keep the producer informed as to the number of bales of cotton that pass into the hands of the manufacturer monthly? Why not publish monthly, or every two months at least, the quantity of cotton goods manufactured? Then at the end of the year give the number of bales bought and the amount of goods manufactured and sold by all the cotton mills in the United States. If you would do this, the producer of cotton would have some idea of what the demand for the raw material would be, and it would enable him to market his cotton more intelligently. He would govern his business in the light of this information.

Under present conditions the producer knows nothing about the manufacturer's stock in store, but the manufacturer knows everything about the cotton producer's business from the time he places seed in the ground until the cotton is ginned, baled, and ready for the market. There is nothing unfair or un-reasonable in this demand. The producer of cotton is simply asking for himself just what the manufacturer of cotton has asked for himself.

The Government has granted the request of the manufacturer, and now, in the name of the men who toil and produce that staple which clothes the world and gives to the United States the balance of trade, I plead for fair and just treatment at the hands of Congress.

Do for the producer of cotton what you have done for the manufacturer of cotton; give him the information that he needs in order that he may run his business intelligently. Place both upon a common level; we ask no more. [Applause.]

Mr. LAMB. I yield twenty minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. CANDLER].

[Mr. CANDLER addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. LAMB. Mr. Chairman, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Sheppard].

Mr. Sheppard. Mr. Chairman, I desire to correct an item in the trust table inserted by me in the Record a few days ago. On page 1487 of the RECORD the amount of exports by the farming-tool trust is given as $7,000,000. This is a misprint; the amount should be $500,000. This trust covers hand tools only. The misprint was directed to my attention by Mr. Miles, the author of the table.

In a recent letter to me Mr. Miles makes the following statement regarding the operation of the present tariff:

I feel that your State of Texas is one of those which is most concerned and most victimized, so to speak, by tariff excess. I can not see that you are helped a dollar's worth of cotton, corn, wheat, or cattle, and very little on lumber, and yet you pay your full quota of the excessive taxes or graft which the trusts collect, and which is estimated at anywhere from $500,000,000 to $1,000,000,000.

Mr. LAMB. Mr. Chairman, the few minutes of the time I have remaining I yield back to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. SCOTT1.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I am greatly obliged to the gentleman from Virginia for his generosity, and will take advantage of it by yielding ten minutes to the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. Sturciss].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from West Virginia is recognized for ten minutes.

Mr. STURGISS. Mr. Chairman, I desire to consider the bill under consideration from a business standpoint. Every enterprise must be judged by the amounts of its receipts and expenditures to ascertain whether it is a business success. I desire to submit some facts and figures relating to the Bureau of Forest Service, which are drawn from official sources, and which are so striking that they must command the attention and confidence of the House.

EXPENDITURES AND RETURNS-SUMMARY.

Since it took charge of the national forests in 1905, the total expenditures of the Forest Service for the fiscal years 1905, 1906, 1907, and 1908 have been, in round numbers, $7,250,000. By classes, these expenditures have been approximately as follows:

General administration of the Forest Service Use, maintenance, and protection of the national forests Permanent improvements on national forests Studies	$500, 4, 900, 675, 1, 175,	000
	- 0-0	000

Under general administration of the Forest Service is included the salaries and expenses of its administrative officers in Washington, and of its general inspectors. It will be observed that the total charge for administration is less than 10 per cent of the total expenditure for the period specified. This compares very favorably with the proportion between the expenditure for general administration and operating expenses in large business enterprises comparable with the Forest Service.

Under use, maintenance, and protection of the national forests is included the salaries, station, field and traveling expenses of the executive and protective force upon the national forests, the rent of supervisors' headquarters, and the purchase of the necessary equipment and supplies.

Under permanent improvements on national forests is included the construction and repair of roads, trails, telephone lines, fire lines, bridges, fences, rangers' cabins and barns, and other permanent improvements needed to safeguard the national forests from fire and to develop their fullest possible use by the people.

Under studies is included investigations of forest conditions and needs upon the national forests, required to promote the use and protection of these forests; and the work of the Forest Service independently and in cooperation with States and private owners, aimed at bringing about a more conservative use of forests not in federal ownership, and of forest products.

EXPENDITURES AND RETURNS.

1. ON NATIONAL FORESTS.

Since the Forest Service took charge of the national forests in 1905 it has expended upon them in the fiscal years 1905, 1906, 1907, and 1908, for their protection and for the handling of current business, $4,900,000. The receipts from the national forests from all sources, for the same period, have been about $4,200,000. The net cost of the national forests to the Federal Government during this period has been $700,000. The amount expended in this period for the construction of roads, trails, and other permanent improvements is $675,000.

The States in which the national forests lie have since 1905 received $675,606 of the receipts from national forests, for the maintenance of schools and roads.

When the Forest Service took charge of the national forests on February 1, 1905, their total area was 63,027,884 acres. Their total area is now 168,681,039 acres, or over two and one-half times as much. The protective force was utterly inadequate in number and low in efficiency. Practically nothing had been done to promote the use and protection of the national forests by the construction of roads, trails, telephone lines, and other improvements, and the benefits of these forests to the people were very slight. Before the service took charge of them, the national forests constituted a resource whose usefulness had been little developed, and whose safety was seriously endangered by lack of effective administration on the ground.

At a money cost of $700,000 to the Federal Government, the Forest Service has accomplished these things upon national forests. It has increased their value, their usefulness, and their safety from fire by the construction of 708 miles of roads, 9,421 miles of trails, 3,400 miles of telephone lines, 50 miles of fire lines, over 400 cabins for its rangers, and 644 miles of fence. It has planted 2,500,000 trees, and it has 9,000,000 more in its nurseries as stock for future planting. It has issued 87,219 grazing permits, under which 4,289,203 horses and cattle and 21,216,381 sheep and goats have been grazed. It has made 8,663 timber sales, and it has granted 66,182 permits for the free use of timber for domestic purposes by settlers. More than half of the 5,923 permits issued for the conservative use of lands for special purposes of various kinds have been given free of cost to those who benefit by them. Applications for agricultural settlements to the number of 2,514 have been approved, which has opened 295,000 acres to farming. The total number of permits of all kinds issued for the use of the national forests is close upon 200,000. The total amount invested by the Forest Service in permanent improvements on the national forests is $675,259, or nearly twice the net cost of administering these forests for four years.

Through the administration of grazing on national forests by the Forest Service range wars within them have absolutely ceased. The investment of productive capital in national forests by the people of the West in power plants, sawmills, transmission lines, railways, and other improvements has increased by many millions of dollars, giving added employment to labor and added industrial development to the regions in which the national forests are situated. The use of the national forests by the people has multiplied many times in every respect; but the use of the national forests by the small owners has increased in proportion to its use by the large owner in the relation of

In 1902, under the administration of the national forests by the General Land Office, an average of 5½ acres to every 1,000 acres were burned over. In 1907, under the administration of the Forest Service, less than 1 acre per 1,000 acres burned over. In 1908 the Forest Service saved, compared with the forest-fire damage on a similar area of private forest lands, $34,000,000 worth of timber in national forests by its fire patrol.

These facts shows that the total net cost of administering the national forests is utterly insignificant compared with the results attained in the increased usefulness of the national forests to the people and in the actual value of the national forests themselves, through their development by the construction of permanent improvements, through the improved condition of the forest and the range, and through added safety from damage by fire.

The national forests should not only be so handled as to prove of permanent and increasing public benefit, but that they should pay all costs of their maintenance. If the Forest Service is permitted to pursue its avowed policy with reference to national forests and is given the funds urgently needed for its work, it will not only attain but it will much surpass, this result.

But it is necessary to face the fact squarely that the appropriations hitherto made for the national forests are barely sufficient to provide for their protection alone. They do not make provision for the proper handling of current business, and they entirely fall to take into account that this business is increasing. Last year so great were the demands upon the time of the forest rangers to handle the business of the people upon national forests that only about one-fifth of their time could be devoted to fire patrol.

The force upon national forests, never adequate for fire patrol alone, not only has to protect the forests but to handle a business which, in the aggregate, has increased several times faster than the force available. In the year 1908 the business of the national forests, as shown by the actual number of permits granted, was about five times the business transacted in 1905. But the force which handled this business in 1908 was less than two and one-half times the force which handled one-fifth as much business in 1905. Not only the business but the area which each forest officer must cover has increased, until now the average area in charge of a ranger is about 125,000 acres, or nearly 200 square miles. To handle grazing, timber sales, and other uses of various kinds on an area of this size in rough mountain country, and also to protect it from forest fire, is much more than one man can do effectively. Not to increase the force means inevitably to increase the already excessive burden upon the ranger, because the demands upon him by the people who wish to use the national forests are steadily growing larger.

wish to use the national forests are steadily growing larger.

Should the funds needed by the Forest Service to protect the national forests and to supervise their legitimate use not be made available, this service faces these alternatives: To reduce a forest-fire patrol, already insufficient, to the point of grave danger; or to limit the growing use of the national forests by the people. Under such circumstances, the proper course for the Forest Service to pursue would be to limit the use, rather than to endanger the forests themselves. This would necessarily mean that much timber which is ripe for the ax and for use by the people could not be sold; that grazing would have to be limited correspondingly; and that in other important respects the forests, beyond the point to which they could be safely guarded by the funds available, would have to be locked up against use by the people.

EXPENDITURES AND RETURNS.

2. IN FOREST STUDIES.

Since the Forest Service took charge of the national forests in 1905, it has expended $1,175,000 in studies to bring about a more conservative use of forest products and of forests in private and state ownership.

In considering the need for the continuance and extension of this work, a brief summary of how this Nation stands with relation to the forests is of value.

Four-fifths of the forests of the United States are in private hands. From these forests the timber supply of the future must mainly come. At present less than 1 per cent of the forests privately owned are logged conservatively or adequately protected from fire.

The growth of timber in all the forests of the United States approximates 7,000,000,000 cubic feet per year. But this Nation is using 23,000,000,000 cubic feet of timber per year, or nearly three times as much as all our forests produce.

Since 1870, forest fires have annually cost an average of 50 lives and not less than $50,000,000 worth of timber. They have burned over at least 50,000,000 acres of forest each year. Through destructive logging, one-fourth of the timber which might be utilized is wasted. The waste in the mill is from onethird to two-thirds of the lumber sawed. These wastes combined mean that for each 1,000 feet of timber which stood in the forest, about 320 feet, or less than one-third, is actually used. The remaining two-thirds are wasted.

We can not count upon other countries to supply our need when our own forests are gone. The condition of the world supply of timber makes us already practically dependent upon what we produce. We send wood out of our country and we bring it in, but we export one and one-half times as much as we import. From this time on we must grow our own wood supply or we must do without.

These central facts have recently been compiled by the National Conservation Commission. They are not hysterical statements based on guesswork, but conservative estimates, backed by reliable data. It is much more probable that they understate than that they overstate the actual condition.

These facts mean that we must act vigorously if our forests are to be preserved. Even the most vigorous action will not prevent grave timber scarcity, which our waste of the forest has made inevitable. But if we fail to act, we shall face not merely timber scarcity, but timber famine.

Realizing these facts, the Forest Service has felt that its duty to promote the conservative use of forests not in federal hands, as well as all economy practicable in the use of forest products, is no less urgent than its duty to rightly administer the national forests. To this end the Forest Service is doing all it can with the funds available to teach American citizens how to practice forestry. It has carried forward a national campaign of education in forestry by spreading broadcast the useful knowledge obtained by its forest studies, in actual co-operation with States as well as with the individual forest owner and user in the handling of his timber tract, his wood lot, his forest plantation, and his timber-treating plant.

The results of this work, so far as they can actually be measured in dollars, are worth to this Nation many times the amount expended in obtaining them. But an even greater accomplishment is the awakening of the American people to their national and individual need for forest conservation. We are still far behind all other great nations in our treatment of the forest. But no nation possesses a more wholesome public sentiment upon which to build a structure of forest conservation which will endure than does our own.

In the period and for the expenditure specified, the Forest Service has, in cooperation with private owners, made detailed working plans for the conservative handling of nearly 6,000,000 acres of private forest land. It has prepared 114 planting plans for settlers and small farmers, especially in the Middle West. Through its timber tests, which are now accepted by engineers, architects, and builders as the standard timber tests in the United States, it has promoted economy in the use of structural timbers and greatly increased the range of species used for this purpose, thereby decreasing the drain upon our forests. as the result of educational work done by the Forest Service as to creosoting and other useful methods of wood preservation about 60 timber-treating plants are now in successful operation in the United States, which turn out 1,250,000,000 feet of treated timber annually. The increased life given to timber in use through preservative treatment would mean, if all timber which could profitably be treated were treated, an annual saving of about $72,000,000 a year. The Forest Service answers about 140 inquiries a week for practical advice in timber preservation alone.

Through its studies of wood utilization the Forest Service is pointing out practical economies in the sawmill, in the factory, and in the use of timber itself, which have had a material effect in reducing these great forms of waste. These are a few examples only of the direct results from the studies conducted by the Forest Service. The range of its use-fulness in answering requests for advice regarding the best use of forests and forest products in every field is indicated by the fact that these requests average 100 a day.

Since 1905 the Forest Service has distributed over seven and one-half million publications containing useful information in the field of practical forestry.

In its work with States the Forest Service has put into actual effect the principle of cooperation between State and Nation, upon which the effective solution of our national forest problem directly depends. It has completed cooperative studies with 13 States, and cooperation with as many more is either in operation or directly pending.

The results of this state cooperative work have been farreaching. The admirable forest law of California is the direct result of a study of state forest conditions made by the Forest Service, one-half the cost of which was borne by the service and half by California.

Through a study made by the Forest Service, Alabama has enacted advanced conservative forest legislation.

Illinois has profited greatly through the information furnished by the Forest Service on the care of the wood lot and on forest planting.

The service has for two years been making a state forest study in cooperation with Kentucky. The result will be to improve logging methods, bring about more accurate knowledge as to timber values, and lead the farmers and other owners of timber land to take better care of their holdings.

In Michigan an examination of a portion of the State has been made, particular attention being paid to forest fires. led to important pending state legislation in regard to the control and prevention of forest fires.

In Delaware a study of forest conditions was made with special reference to the advisability of growing loblolly pine.

In Maine and Florida forest fires were studied, with a view to shaping legislation for their control. These studies have already borne fruit in better legislation.

In Maryland five counties were studied, and the facts ascertained in these counties led to the appointment of a state forester and to much better care of forests within the State.

In Mississippi a cooperative study was made of cut-over long-leaf pine lands. This resulted in the gathering of much useful information and called to the attention of the state legislature the need for forest legislation along various lines.

In Missouri a detailed study of forest conditions in the Ozarks awakened a keen interest in forestry in the State, which promises splendid results.

In New Hampshire two studies have been made, one of forest conditions, the other of forest taxation, which have had admirable results.

A bill is pending in the West Virginia legislature providing for a study of its forests by the State and the Forest Service.

Forest conditions in Wisconsin have been studied by the service, with the result that a state forester has been appointed, and Wisconsin stands now probably at the head of States in the care of its forests.

To sum up, the studies made by the Forest Service, both independently and in cooperation with States and with individuals, and the wide distribution of their results, have been and are the prevailing influence in the United States for the better use of the forest and its products. Of the two great tasks before the service-the administration of the national forests and popular education in forestry—the one is quite as important as the other. It is no less necessary to the future of our forests that right use of the four-fifths of them which are in private hands be encouraged than of the one-fifth which is in the hands of the Government.

TIMBER SALES.

The receipts last year from the sale of timber on national forests were about $850,000. Had the Forest Service sold all the timber it was asked to sell, it would have sold about ten times as much. Had it made these sales, the receipts from them alone would have covered the total expenditure of the Forest Service for the year and put a net balance of over $5,000,000 into the United States Treasury.

It costs the Forest Service from 20 to 30 cents per thousand feet of timber sold to mark the trees to be cut, to supervise the logging, and to burn the brush as a precaution against fire. This expenditure is necessary to insure clean work in the woods and the production of a good second crop.

The reason why the service did not sell more timber last year, and thereby much more than pay back the total cost of all its work, is that it did not have the money needed to safeguard the forest in logging. The Forest Service therefore confined its timber sales strictly to the number which it could handle properly with the funds available. It would have been very easy for the Forest Service, at the expense of the national forests with whose welfare it is intrusted, to have shown a large credit balance at the expense of the forests themselves. This it has declined to do.

During the past year the Forest Service gave timber to settlers in small quantities for domestic use to the total value of $169,000. This is in pursuance of the policy of the service to give all aid practicable to the small man within and near the national forests who is trying to establish a home. This free use of timber by settlers involves certain necessary expenses in supervision by the Forest Service, from which, of course, there is no direct return.

The national forests contain over 400,000,000,000 feet of timber, which is one-fifth of all timber standing in the United States. They contain, also, vast quantities of wood suitable for posts, poles, and fuel. Handled on a strictly commercial basis, the timber alone in the national forests could be made an important source of money revenue to the Government. Handled as the Forest Service is handling them, with a view to reasonable money returns, but also with a view to making them of direct public benefit in the development of the West, the national forests will easily pay back all costs of their administration and protection. Thus far the Forest Service has not been given an opportunity to make the national forests pay their costs, because the funds provided have never been sufficient for the adequate protection of the national forests. And the Forest Service has steadily refused, and rightly so, to devote money needed for fire patrol to increasing current business at great risk to the safefy of the national forests themselves.

FOREST FIRES.

For the last thirty years forest fires have destroyed annually in the United States an average of 50 lives and $50,000,000 worth of timber. The area burned over each year has averaged not less than 50,000,000 acres.

For the last year, the most calamitous year as to forest fires that this country has known for a decade, the total damage by forest fires in the United States has been conservatively estimated at not less than $100,000,000.

Through its fire patrol on national forests the Forest Service saved last year, compared with the actual fire damage on private forest lands of similar area, over $34,000,000, or enough to pay all the expenditures of the service, at last year's rate, for about ten years.

The force employed upon fire patrol through which the above result was obtained was equivalent to one man to each 500,000 acres, an area half the size of the State of Delaware. The public expenditure was about one-third of a cent per acre, The result was the protection of timber worth seldom less than $75 per acre, and frequently as high as $100 and even $200 per acre. This is fire insurance at an average rate of one three-hundredths of 1 per cent.

The national forests contain one-fifth of the standing timber and one-fifth of the forest area of the United States. In West Virginia, whose forests comprise one-sixteenth of the area of the national forests, the damage by fire was five times as great; in Wisconsin, whose forests comprise one-fourth of the area of the national forests, the damage by fire was nine times as great; in the Adirondack region of New York, whose area is about one one-hundredth of the national forests, the damage by fire was equally great.

The expenditure for fire patrol per acre on national forests is far below the amount actually expended by the lumbermen associated together for fire protection in the States of Washington and of Idaho. The Washington Forest Fire Association, organized by private owners of timber land to protect their holdings from fire, has a membership of 138, and comprises a total acreage of nearly 3,000,000 acres. This association expended I cent per acre in the protection of the forests of its members from fire in 1908, or three times as much as the Government expended in the protection of the property of the people in national forests.

The national forests, with the safeguarding of which the Forest Service is charged, are worth about $2,000,000,000, which is more than the total value of the equipment of the army and navy combined.

The commercial timber alone in national forests is worth

$1,000,000,000, or equivalent in value to seven such fleets as the one which has just carried the American flag around the world. The preservation of this vast natural resource is no less essential to our national prosperity and industry than is the fleet to the maintenance of our independence as a nation.

The force upon national forests is called upon to protect the forests from fire and to handle at the same time a rapidly increasing business with the people. One hundred thousand persons used the national forests under permit last year. In the not far distant future this number should be increased to one million. It is unjust and unwise to require the Forest Service to give adequate protection to the national forests for one-third the amount which private owners are expending in the protection of their timber lands and at the same time to extend and to expect this force to handle a business already vast and rapidly growing.

rapidly growing.

The fire-patrol force has been inadequate for safety since the beginning through lack of funds. Congress has assumed that the increased appropriation asked by the Forest Service is due only to increasing business. It is due mainly to the desire of this service to effectively safeguard the national forests from fire.

Unless the force on national forests is greatly increased—and that necessarily carries with it an increase in appropriation—the Forest Service must do one of these two things—turn away national forest business or reduce a fire patrol already insufficient. This is an urgent and immediate condition, not a theory. [Applause.]

GRAZING.

The regulation by the Forest Service of grazing upon ranges within the national forests has in three years reduced the waste of forage at least 30 per cent. This means that the number of sheep and cattle fed upon these ranges is increasing in proportion.

Through the control of these ranges by the Forest Service steers grazed in many of the national forests last year weighed from 50 to 100 pounds more than steers grazed on outside ranges, and brought from $5 to $10 per head more on the open market. The same is true of lambs and sheep. The natural increase in calves and lambs from stock ranged on national forests is from 10 to 20 per cent larger than from stock ranged outside national forests.

During the past year the killing of mountain lions, wolves, and other predatory animals within national forests by hunters employed by the Forest Service has saved the stockmen from losses, which, on the basis of actual past experience, would have considerably exceeded the amount paid by these stockmen in grazing fees.

The grazing fees charged on national forests are from 30 to 35 cents per head for cattle, and from 10 to 12 cents per head for sheep, for the entire year. These charges are far below those paid for similar grazing privileges outside the national forests. For example, on Indian reservations in Arizona and New Mexico a fee of $1 per head for cattle and 25 cents per head for sheep is paid, or two or three times as much as the fees on national forests.

Large tracts of grazing lands in southern Colorado owned by the Ben Butler estate are leased at a rate equivalent to from $1.25 to $1.75 per head for cattle, or from three to over four times the rate charged on adjoining national forests. Lands owned by the Southern Pacific Railway Company within the boundaries of the Tahoe National Forest are leased for grazing at a rate equivalent to about 25 cents per head for sheep, or nearly four times as much as is paid for grazing on public lands in the same forests. On Indian reservations in Oregon and Washington a charge of $1.50 per head is made for cattle and 25 cents per head for sheep. On adjoining national forests the charge is from one-half to one-third as much.

The above figures show that the Forest Service in its administration of ranges within national forests is giving for fees which run from one-half to one-fourth the actual value of the grazing privileges effective protection of the range, increasing safety from predatory animals, and a product in beef and mutton worth considerably more on the market than the product of outside ranges.

Had the Forest Service charged last year for grazing privileges what they were actually worth these charges would have more than paid all the expenditures of the service for the current year. That the service did not increase grazing fees is due directly to its conviction that the great value of its administration of grazing is to aid the small man in establishing a home, and that the transition from free range to grazing fees should give opportunity for the easiest adjustment practicable of the stock industry to the new condition. Had not this opportunity been given, the transition would have meant inevitable hardship, especially to the small stockman.

CONCLUSIONS.

The funds recommended are needed for the government forest work for these main reasons:

1. The protective force on national forests has been inade-quate from the beginning, and the increase in it has not kept pace with the increase in business.

2. Unless the force is greatly increased the Forest Service must do one of these two things: Turn away national forest business or reduce a fire patrol already insufficient. This is an urgent immediate condition, not a theory.

3. It is no less necessary for the better protection and fuller use of the national forests that money is provided with which to hire men than that money is provided with which to build trails, telephone lines, fences, and other permanent improvements. Without the men, the permanent improvements are of little use; without the permanent improvements, the efficiency of the additional men will be greatly reduced. Both are essential.

4. The fact that the protective force on national forests has carried a heavier load of current business per man during the last year than ever before and has held the fire damage down to 1 per cent of that on private forest lands is creditable in the highest degree. But it is unfair, as well as unsafe to the forests, to rely upon the men keeping this up. The force is at present seriously overworked, and unless it is increased the inevitable result will ensue—a serious falling off in individual efficiency.

The estimates for the ensuing fiscal year are the first estimates presented for the Forest Service, which, if granted, would put it really abreast of its task. If it is necessary that the increased expenditures proposed should be met by increased returns, that can be done; if it is necessary that they should be materially exceeded by the returns, that can also be done, although neither is advisable. The growth of business on national forests can go on until the returns greatly exceed the expenditures with absolute safety to the forests themselves, provided that the growth does not get beyond the trained force available to handle it. What the Forest Service is doing now is to train up the force, get ready for the business, and take care of the increase so far as it can. When the force is once adequate in training and in number, the service can take care of all the business, which means many times that now handled with a revenue many times as great. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from West Virginia has expired.

Mr. STURGISS. Mr. Chairman, I ask leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from West Virginia asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I yield fifteen minutes to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY].

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, no question to-day is attracting greater popular attention than the conservation of our natural resources, and the resource probably attracting most attention to-day is that of our forests. many reasons their conservation is urged. I have just listened with pleasure to the very able address of the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. Sturgiss] in regard to the work of the Forestry Service. With the general policy of conserving our natural resources, and especially of our forests, I am in most hearty sympathy and accord; but I do not agree with all the reasons given therefor. Among other reasons urged for the protection of our forests by many is the advantage that forests are supposed to be in the protection of stream flow. Some of the advocates have linked forest protection with the improvement and protection of our inland waterways. As the Government is now being urged to buy large tracts for the purpose of protecting the forests and thereby, it is asserted, aiding navigation, it becomes of vital importance to us as a legislative body to ascertain what effect, if any, forests do have upon stream flow.

There has been a vast amount of literature written and distributed upon this question. While much of it has been valuable, some of it has been worthless, and much of it misleading. The public has generally come to accept as undisputed facts that forests have the following effect upon stream flow:

First. By acting as natural reservoirs they prevent both floods and extremely low water.

Second. That they increase precipitation.

Third. That they prevent erosion of the soil and thereby protect water courses, canals, and reservoirs from accumulation of silt. It is at least open to question whether or not forests have any such results. That such theory has found general public acceptance demonstrates that constant reiteration is often received as proof. Some of the ablest engineers in this country and in Europe contend that forests have no such effect. In fact, I think I am well within the truth when I say that few engineers of recognized ability agree with the generally accepted theory of the influence of forests in preventing floods, in preventing erosion of the soil, or in being an aid in maintaining the navigability of rivers; or, in other words, those best qualified to know dispute the popular opinion upon each of these propo-

To-day almost every paper or magazine you examine contains an article on the direful effects the removal of our forests are having upon every conceivable condition which affects humanity, and especially is this true in relation to the rainfall, climate, and stream flow. Generally, no facts are given. The only proofs usually offered are a series of statements of woeful calamities often accompanied by photographs illustrating the awful results and ending by appealing to Congress to appropriate a few hundred millions of dollars to reforest some worthless hills to stop this terrible devastation. The appeal is always to the Government and not to those that would be directly benefited. About the only calamity that has afflicted us that has not been placed to the destruction of our forests by a certain class of enthusiasts are the recent earthquakes, but here there are extenuating circumstances in this regrettable oversight—the time has been short and the opportunity limited.

It is of vital importance that we should know the facts, as bill has been reported from the Committee on Agriculture for an appropriation for the purchase of lands to be reforested for the express purpose of improving the navigability of streams. I may add that the main inspiration in drawing the bill upon this theory was to escape certain inconvenient constitutional objections to buying the lands for the purpose alone of reforesting them. In other words, the "navigability of streams" has been injected so that the burden may be placed upon the Nation at large instead of upon the States to be benefited. This bill in its ingenuity, if not in its justice, commands my admiration. It proposes to take the money from the sale of timber in the national forest reservations in the West and buy back lands once owned and sold by certain States in the East and South. By this bill the old riddle, "how to eat your cake and save it," has been solved. Certain States have sold, used, and enjoyed their public lands and they are not now contented in depriving the Western States of their lands, but they want to take the money from the sale of the products on these lands and buy their own back again. And they are asking that this be done upon a theory that is not supported by facts. If these barren hills should be reforested, then the States that once owned them, sold them, and will be benefited by their reforestation-if any benefit should come therebyshould pay the expense. Upon what theory can it be claimed that the Western States, which have already been deprived of a large portion of their public lands for the benefit of the entire Nation, should furnish the money to do it?

We of the West are more than willing that our public lands should be reserved for the benefit of the entire Nation, but we do not think that the products of these reservations should be taken and used to buy back public lands for some of the improvident States of the East and South. What justification can there be in such action? Change the old proverb that "might makes right" to "votes make the law," and you have the only answer.

Upon this important question what those who make the laws of this country desire is the truth. If the generally accepted theories upon this question are wrong, then we should know it. We should protect our forests, but it should not be done under misapprehension or false pretenses. If forests do not have a beneficial effect upon the stream flow, then this consideration should be eliminated when considering legislation to preserve In other words, however important may be the protection of our forests, we do not want to be influenced in legislation in reference to them by any false theory, even if it does have back of it popular belief.

Col. H. M. Chittenden, of Seattle, has written a carefully prepared article, showing great research and learning, by which he controverts much of the generally accepted theory upon this important subject. His article is calm, dispassionate, and scholarly, and it is evident in every line that his sole object is to present the facts. He is an engineer of great experience, a scholar of wide learning, and a clear and forceful writer. The opinion of no other man in America is entitled to greater weight on this question than his. His article should be read by every Member of this House, regardless of what opinion he may now hold upon this important question.

I therefore ask to extend my remarks by having printed in the Record the article referred to written by Colonel Chittenden.

I am satisfied that any unprejudiced man that will read it will be forced to the conclusion that forests do not, to any appreciable extent, tend to prevent floods or extreme low water in our rivers; that they do not have a beneficial effect upon the navigability of streams; that they do not increase precipitation nor prevent erosion; and that he will become convinced that this Nation is being asked to spend millions upon a theory that is not supported by the facts. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Record by appending an article by H. M. Chittenden, on "Forests and reservoirs in their relation to stream flow, with particular reference to navigable rivers," delivered before the American Society of Civil Engineers.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the Record in the manner indicated. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The article is as follows:

AMERICAN SOCIETY OF CIVIL ENGINEERS. PAPERS AND DISCUSSIONS. [This society is not responsible, as a body, for the facts and opinions advanced in any of its publications.]

FORESTS AND RESERVOIRS IN THEIR RELATION TO STREAM FLOW, WITH PARTICULAR REFERENCE TO NAVIGABLE RIVERS.

[By H. M. Chittenden, member Am. Soc. C. E. To be presented November 4, 1908.]

Note.—These papers are issued before the date set for presentation and discussion. Correspondence is invited from those who can not be present at the meeting, and may be sent by mall to the secretary. Discussion, either oral or written, will be published in a subsequent number of Proceedings, and, when finally closed, the paper, with discussion in full, will be published in Transactions.

The following paper is presented at this time with the purpose of eliciting from the society membership the results of observation and experience touching the important matters of which it treats. They are vital features of one of the chief living questions before the public to-day, and an expression of views by men accustomed to look at things from a practical standpoint can not fail to be of great value to our legislators upon whom the ultimate responsibility for action must rest.

While the author's views traverse, to some extent, currently accepted theories, they are based upon long observation and study and are what seem to be unavoidable conclusions therefrom; but he is committed to no theory, as such, and his mind is entirely open to conviction upon any point in which his opinions may be shown to be erroneous. His sympathies are wholly on the side of the present movement for the conservation of our natural resources, and, so far as this paper takes issue with certain tendencies of that movement, it is only for the purpose of inquiring whether such tendencies are not really inimical to the cause to which they pertain.

With this preliminary statement the author will take up the first part of his paper, viz, the influence of forests upon steam

FORESTS AND STREAM FLOW.

The commonly accepted opinion is that forests have a beneficial influence on stream flow:

1. By storing the waters from rain and melting snow in the bed of humus that develops under forest cover, preventing their rapid rush to the streams and paying them out gradually afterwards, thus acting as true reservoirs in equalizing the run-off. 2. By retarding the snow-melting in the spring and prolonging the run-off from that source.

3. By increasing precipitation.

4. By preventing erosion of the soil on steep slopes and thereby protecting water courses, canals, reservoirs, and similar works from accumulations of silt.

There are many subsidiary influences, but, broadly stated, the above propositions cover the ground. They were first given general currency nearly forty years ago through the writings of Wex, chief engineer on the improvement of the Sir Gustav Danube, whose treatise was translated into English by the late General Weitzel, of the Corps of Engineers. Wex's theories were stoutly resisted at the time by many European engineers, and still find only a limited acceptance in the profession,b though in the popular mind they have gained ground and in

To establish by definite proof the truth or falsity of these propositions is an extremely difficult task. One would not think so, indeed, to judge from the cheerful confidence with which the popular thought accepts them; but it is nevertheless so. The elements of the problem are so many and conflicting, the necessary evidence is so hard to get, and comparative records are of such recent date, that precise demonstration is scarcely possible. The popular belief is based upon a fact and an assumption forming together a basis for a conclusion. The fact is that forests in the eastern portion of the United States have disappeared to a large extent within the past century. The assumption is that floods and low waters in the same region are more frequent and severe than before the forests were cleared away. The conclusion is that these assumed conditions must be due to the disappearance of the forests. Post hoc, ergo propter hoc is the argumentative process relied upon, and little effort is made to consider whether there may not be some other and more satisfactory explanation. The author will attempt to analyze the problem from a theoretical standpoint and will then cite existing records so far as these are sufficiently long-continued to be worth anything. He will consider, first, the effect of the forests where stream flow results from rain alone, and, next, where it results in part from melting snow.

EFFECT OF FORESTS UPON THE RUN-OFF FROM RAINFALL.

The first of the above propositions—the retentive action of the forest bed—may be accepted at once as strictly true for average conditions. It is not true for extreme conditions—great floods and excessive low waters—the conditions that determine the character and cost of river control. Consider an inclined-plane surface, practically impervious to water, with a layer of sand covering some small portion of it, and let a uniform spray of water be applied to the entire surface. Assume that the temperature and rate of evaporation are relatively low. As soon as the spray begins, water commences to flow from the uncovered surface, but not for a time from that covered by the sand. After a while it begins to trickle from the sand, increasing in volume until the sand is thoroughly saturated, after which it flows off in as great quantity per unit area as from the uncovered portion. If the spray is stopped, the water immediately ceases to flow from the uncovered area, but continues in diminishing quantity from the covered area until it finally ceases altogether; but not all the water that fell on this area has run away. The sand has retained some portion of it and given it off in evaporation, so that the total run-off per unit area is somewhat less than on the uncovered portion. If the shower be long-continued and the rate of evaporation very low, the difference of total run-off per unit area from the two surfaces will be very slight.

Suppose now that the temperature and rate of evaporation are high and that the spray works intermittently. If the showers are small in volume and the intervals between them long, the sand may retain nearly or quite all of the individual showers and give them off in evaporation, so that there will be no run-off whatever.

Between these two extreme conditions the covered area will exert a greater or smaller regulative effect upon the run-off. The retentive power of the sand will be less as the slope of the surface upon which it rests increases, or it will be greatest when the surface is nearly horizontal and least when it is nearly vertical.a

Now, in nature this ideal illustration is never fully exemplified in the cleared land and the forest. There is nearly every-where a marked retentive capacity in the bare soil. In newly plowed ground it is probably greater than in the forest. over, certain crops, like heavy grass or grain, obstruct the flow of water almost as much as the forest cover. On the other hand, the furrows of cultivated fields, drainage ditches, roads, and, particularly, the pavements and roofs of towns, greatly accelerate the run-off; so that, while the full contrast of the ideal example does not exist in nature, the principle of the illustration applies perfectly. That is, there are times when the per-example does not exist in nature, the principle of the illustration applies perfectly. That is, there are times when the per "Since the above was written the author has noticed, in the report of the hearing on House resolution 208 before the Committee on the Judiclary, that Gifford Pinchot, Association American Society Civil Engineers, Chief of the Forest Service, used an illustration very similar to that given above, except that he failed to carry it to its logical conclusion. Addressing the committee, February 27, 1908, he said: "I have in my hand here a photograph of a denuded hillside. After the forest has been removed rain falls on that hillside and runs off rapidly, as the water I drop upon the photograph does now, and disappears instantly [illustrating]. If, on the other hand, I place a forest cover on the hillside, that is exactly analogous in texture and effect with this piece of blotting paper, and drop the water slowly upon it, we would find that, instead of running off slowly at the bottom, the water is held [illustrating with blotting paper]. Part of it runs off, but, as soon as the absorbent quality of the paper or the forest floor has time to take effect, the water is kept and drips gradually for a considerable length of time off the hill into the stream. This is an exact illustration of the way in which the forest controls the stream flow on that hillside."

Mr. Pinchot should have completed his illustration. He should have continued to sprinkle the paper long enough and heavily enough to have saturated the paper completely in order to show that the water would then flow from the paper as rapidly as from the uncovered area; and he should then have explained that this condition represents what always happens in the forest in times of great flood. Then he should have sprinkled the paper intermittently in small quantities, and at such long intervals that the warm air of the room would evaporate all of the absorbed water, and that none whatever would flow away. He should then have explained that t centage of retention in the forest bed is 0, and there are other times when it is 100; or, there are times when so much water comes that the forest bed can hold none of it and there are times when so little comes that it holds it all. Between these extremes there are periods when it holds more or less and gives up less or more and exercises a corresponding influence upon the run-off. There is another important condition not exemplified in the illustration, and that is that the forest areas are scattered everywhere, the ground has an infinite variety of slope, the showers never fall uniformly over an entire watershed, and the final result in the total run-off is the summation of thousands of tributary results.

It is true, therefore, as popularly understood, that, in periods of ordinary rainfall with sufficient intervals for the forest bed to dry out somewhat, forests do exert a regulative effect upon run-off. They modify freshets and torrents and prolong the run-off after storms have passed, and thus realize in greater or less perfection the commonly accepted theory.

This result utterly fails, however, in those periods of longcontinued, widespread, and heavy precipitation, which alone cause great floods in the large rivers. At such times the forest bed becomes completely saturated, its storage capacity exhausted, and it has no more power to restrain floods than the open country itself. Moreover, the fact that the forest bed has retained a portion of earlier rainfall and is yielding it up later to the streams, produces a condition that may be worse than it would be in a country cleared of forests. Really great floods in large rivers are always, as is well known, the result of combinations from the various tributaries. It is when the floods from these tributaries arrive simultaneously at a common point that calamitous results follow. Any cause which facilitates such combinations is therefore a source of danger. Now, unquestionably, in a heavily wooded watershed forests do have a tendency in this direction. When a period of heavy storms occurs, spreading over a great area, continually increasing in intensity, the forests, by retaining some portion of the earlier showers and paying them out afterwards, do produce a general high condition of the river which may greatly aggravate a sudden flood arising later from some portion of the watershed. That the forest does promote tributary combinations, there would seem to be no question, and that it may therefore aggravate flood conditions necessarily follows. It is not contended that this increase is ever very great, but it is contended that forests never diminish great floods and that they probably do increase them somewhat. The forests are virtually automatic reservoirs, not subject to intelligent control, and act just as the system of reservoirs once proposed by the French Government for the control of floods in the River Rhone would have acted These reservoirs were to have open outlets, not capable of being closed, which were intended to restrain only a portion of the flow. A careful study of their operation in certain recorded floods showed that they would actually have produced combinations more dangerous than would have occurred

Consider now periods of extreme drought and grant that, as general rule, springs and little streams dry up more completely than when forests covered the country, although this difference is very greatly exaggerated in the popular mind.^a At first thought one would conclude that, since the springs and streams make up the rivers, these also ought now to show a smaller low-water flow than formerly. This, however, is not the case. The difference between the former low-water flow of a spring or rivulet and what it is now is relatively an insignificant quantity. Most of such water sources yield but a small fraction of a cubic foot per second. Whether these small quantities are a trifle more or less cuts very little figure in the aggregate; and so it counts but little in the flow of a great river whether some of its extreme sources lose a portion of a volume that is already inappreciable. When the summer showers come, however, there is a marked difference. At such times the forests not only hold the water back-they often swallow it completely. Small showers that make a perceptible run-off in the open are often practically all absorbed in the leaves of the trees. Heavier showers that make freshets in the open are largely absorbed in the leaves and forest bed and pass off in evaporation; so that, contrary to the general view, the evaporation from the forest is greater at such times than in the open country and the run-off from summer precipitation is less.

The term "as a general rule" is used, for it is by no means absolute. In particular the drainage of low swamp lands leads off into the streams in dry weather, waters that formerly remained or passed off in evaporation, and in such cases even the low-water flow is greater than it used to be. In 1895 the author saw an example of this on the Scioto River near the outlet of the great Scioto swamp which had recently been drained. A small mill was able to operate during the low-water season more regularly than formerly. Tile drainage, now so widely used, has the same tendency.

A single shower may produce a sufficiently greater run-off in a deforested area to more than offset the diminished low-water flow for several weeks.^a Now, on most of the smaller streams quantity of flow is a more important matter than natural uniformity of flow, particularly in the summer time. The day of the small mill, which was so dependent upon such uniformity, is past. The modern water power invariably seeks uniformity by artificial regulation, and the ups and downs of its sources of supply are abolished in its storage. Therefore it does not matter nearly as much that the run-off of the small streams be uniform as that it yield a good flow of water; and if forests diminish the total low-water supply, this fact more than offsets the gain in uniformity. Likewise the great rivers swallow up the gain in uniformity. Likewise the great rivers swallow up and equalize the small irregularities of their headwaters and actually experience a somewhat larger low-water flow than if their watersheds were still thickly forested. Thus, while forests may decrease somewhat the extreme range between maximum and minimum run-off on very small watersheds, they do not do so on great ones, which are combinations of very small ones. At the same time it seems certain that forests decrease somewhat the total run-off from watersheds, small or great.b

INFLUENCE OF FORESTS UPON SNOW MELTING.

The second proposition—that forests have a beneficial effect upon the run-off from snow melting—is quite as firmly fixed in the popular belief as that just considered, but has even less foundation in fact. It is a relation that can be definitely traced, and it can be demonstrated that the effect of forests upon the run-off from snow is invariably to increase its intensity. This results from two causes, one affecting the falling of the snow and the other its melting.

In the first place forests break the wind, prevent the formation of drifts, and distribute the snow in an even blanket over the ground. In the open country the snow is largely heaped into drifts, their size depending upon the configuration of the ground, the presence of wind-breaks, and the prevalence and force of the wind. These drifts form admirable reservoirs and in the high mountains are the most perfect known. Forests prevent their formation entirely.

The period of snow melting begins in the open country much earlier than in the forests. At first the melting is due mainly to the direct action of the sun's rays before there is sufficient warmth in the general atmosphere to produce any effect. The thinly covered areas melt off first and the streams experience a diurnal rise and fall following the warmth of day and the frost of night. Nothing like a flood ever arises from such melting.

Under forest cover this action is interfered with more or less, depending upon the density of the shade. Even after the ground in the open is entirely bare, except under the drifts, the forest areas may still be covered with an unbroken layer of snow. It is generally, though erroneously, considered that this delay is beneficial, by carrying further into the summer the release of the winter precipitation and giving it more time to soak into the ground; but, in fact, this benefit does not result. The water from the first melting of the snow blanket does not sink into the ground, but into itself. Snow is like a sponge. A panful will shrink to one-fourth of its volume, or less, before any free water appears. The author has seen an 8-foot covering of snow dwindle to 2 feet, with the ground beneath it still comparatively dry.

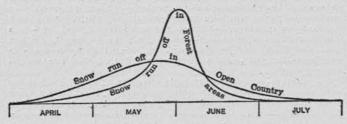

The forest shade thus holds the snow, which gradually becomes saturated from its own melting, until the heat and warm rains of late spring or early summer arrive, the soft air everywhere pervading the forest depths and finding a maximum exposure of surface to the melting influences. A cubic yard of snow which in a great drift might stand 27 feet deep with a square foot of exposure, may here lie with a depth of 1 foot and 27 square feet of exposure. The result is that when the final melting begins the whole body of snow disappears very rapidly, rushing from every direction into the streams, swelling them to their limit and often causing disastrous freshets. The active melting lasts but a short time, and there is little opportunity for the water to soak into the ground. The delay in melting, caused by the forest shade, has simply operated to concentrate it into a shorter period and increase the intensity of the resulting freshet. It comes so fast that the greater por a So far as the author is aware, Col. T. P. Roberts, of Pittsburg, Pa., was the first to call attention to this characteristic of stream flow.

b This subject was ably discussed by Mr. Raphael Zon, of the Forest Service, Department of Agriculture, in Transactions Am. Soc. C. E., Vol. LIX, pp. 494-495. He states among other things that "the quantity of water available for stream flow from forested watersheds, all other conditions being equal, is less than from nonforested watersheds;" that "the forest soil receives least precipitation, next comes meadow land, and, lastly, tilled land;" that "in the forest only the upper layer of the soil is moister than in the open, the lower layers being always drier." This discussion is well worth perusal.

tion of it can not be utilized at the time and is lost altogether, unless intercepted by reservoirs.

In the open country, on the other hand, the drifts last for weeks after the snow has entirely disappeared from the forest, and continue to yield a supply of water far into the summer. The period of active melting in the open may have lasted four months, that in the forest scarcely as many weeks. Figure 1 illustrates, in a general way, the processes just described. These curves apply more particularly to the forests of the Rocky Mountains, where the author has had exceptional opportunities for studying their action. In the northwest corner of Wyoming and contiguous portions of the adjoining States lies an elevated region of probably 20,000 square miles, which is the source of nearly all the great river systems of the West. It is a very remarkable region in this respect. Its average altitude is about 7,500 feet, and it is in large part covered with a dense evergreen forest. At the very summit of this elevated region is that singular section now visited annually by thousands of touriststhe Yellowstone Park. The opening of the tourist season in spring occurs just about the time of active snow melting, and the most onerous and difficult task of those in charge of the road system of the park is to get the roads into condition for the first travel. This frequently has to be done while the snow still lies deep on the ground. It was the repeated execution of this task that first drew the author's attention to the fact that, as a general rule, the floods of his region are forest floods, and that the same conditions of precipitation which force the forest streams out of their banks produce only moderate effects in the open. The traditional "June rise" comes mainly from the mountain forests.

The photographs presented herewith were taken about the middle of June in a year of heavy snowfall and only two days before the tourist season opened. Plate CVII, figure 1, shows an east and west road through a dense forest of lodgepole pine, at an altitude of 8,200 feet. It shows very effectively the deep, even blanket of snow everywhere covering the ground, except along a narrow strip at the roots of the trees on the except along a narrow strip at the roots of the trees on the north side of the road, where the sun had access through the opening in the tree tops caused by the 30-foot clearing for the roadway. Plate CVII, figure 2, taken practically at the same time, shows one of the great drifts in the open country, which it was impossible to avoid in locating the road.

At this time a period of very warm weather had set in, with frequent rains. Severe floods followed, which did great injury to the roads and bridges, not only in the mountains, but for a considerable distance below. Within two weeks the snow had considerable distance below. Within two weeks the snow had practically disappeared in the forests, but in the open country the drifts continued until the middle of July, giving forth a continuous supply of water.

A most illuminating article, and one which everyone interested in the subject should read, was published in Science, for April 10, 1896. It gives the results of observations in the mountains of Nevada for over twenty-five years, during which "ex-tensive tracts of timber" were cut off "to the very ground," and new growths had been well started. It was found that springs which were active after the land was cleared dried up when the new forest growth developed; "that the water supply from the mountains is greater and more permanent now than it was before the timber was cut off;" that freshets were no more "frequent or violent than before the trees were cut off;" and that "spring floods were less frequent." The greatly increased loss due to evaporation in the forest was pointed out. This results partly from the vast extent of surface on the ground exposed to the air and partly from exposure on the leaves and branches of the trees.

"The foliage on this class of trees being as heavy in winter as in summer, the branches catch an immense amount of the falling snow and hold it up in mid-air for both sun and air to work upon; and only those who have had experience of the absorbing power of the dry mountain air can form any idea of the loss from that source." Moreover, "the trees absorb from the soil quite as much water as would be evaporated by the action of the sun in the absence of the shade."

The writer states that "the strongest force at work to save our rivers is the drifting winds, which heap up the snow in great banks; and in this the trees are a constant obstacle." He declares that "close observers, after long years of study, have been led to believe that if there is any difference in the flow of streams and the size of springs before and after the trees are cut from above them, the balance is in the favor of the open country.'

In the current literature upon this subject one invariably encounters the same fallacious assumption that because the forests delay melting their action is therefore beneficial. The fact is entirely overlooked that delay means concentration and greater intensity of run-off, while the open country prolongs the melting and gives a more even distribution. If the true action of forests in this respect, however, is rarely recognized by public writers, it is recognized, though perhaps unconsciously, by those who are benefited by it. The monthly reports of the Weather Bureau in the Rocky Mountain region are instructive reading in this connection. The following are a few extracts from those sent in to the central office of the western Montana district at Helena:

"Where there is no timber to break the force of the winds solid drifts of considerable depth have collected." * * * The snowfall has been very light, and the drifts are not large or solid enough to furnish an adequate flow of water in the streams." * * * "In some sections the winter's snowfall has been the lightest for many years, and as there is little likelihood that the later snows will form solid drifts, it is practically certain that the flow of water in most streams will be inadequate for irrigation and mining purposes."

These extracts, which could be multiplied indefinitely, show how well the practical ranchman understands the value of snowdrifts. It has always been a mystery to the author that writers will persist in statements like the following, which appears in one of the ablest addresses at the recent Conservation Conference in Washington:

"The possibility of irrigation depends largely on the preservation of the forest cover of the mountains, which catches and holds the melting snows, and thus forms the great storage reservoirs of nature.'

The forests destroy the reservoirs, and the flow would be more uniform, prolonged, and plentiful if they were not there.

It will doubtless be urged that while the foregoing conclusions may hold for an elevated and densely wooded region, they will not hold for a lower altitude, warmer climate, and different kind of forest. In reply it may be said that in proportion as the conditions described prevail they apply everywhere. In deciduous forests, where the foliage is absent during seasons of snowfall and melting, the winds have greater play in winter and the sunlight in spring, and there is, of course, less difference between the forests and the open country; but while the difference is less, it is not obliterated altogether, and in hilly regions, like the Adirondacks and the White Mountains, it exists in full force. The author is very familiar with the region of western New York, having been reared on a farm nearly on the divide, between the waters of the Ohio and Lake Erie-a beautifully wooded country, deciduous growths prevailing, and one of the snowlest regions in the United States. While there is less drifting in the open and more in the woods than in high mountains, still it is strictly true that the open-country drifts outlast the forest snows just as the latter outlast the thin snows in the

A striking example of the action of forests on snow melting may be seen in the mountains of the Pacific coast. Here are the densest forests in the world, the deepest beds of humus, and the most perfect reservoir effect so long as it is in action. in this very region, particularly around Puget Sound, are to be found some of the most torrential streams in the country. This fact is largely due to the distribution of snowfall caused by the forests. Conditions like the following are constantly developing. Heavy snowstorms sweep over the forest-covered mountains. The snow can not drift, for the dense woods break the wind. A great deal of it does not reach the ground at all, but hangs on the branches and undergrowth all the way from the highest tree tops down. This covering is often so dense as to prevent cruising operations altogether, because the cruisers can not see the timber through the impenetrable screen of snow. Of an 18-inch fall, perhaps 12 inches is on the trees and the rest spread evenly on the ground. To show what now happens, let an illustration be drawn from the opposite process of drying clothes. When the housewife has finished her washing and wishes to dry the clothes, she does not set them out in a basket, where it would take weeks for them to dry, but spreads them upon the ground or hangs them on a line, so that the sun and air can reach them on all sides. So these forests increase, by a thousandfold, the exposed area of the snow over what it would be if heaped in nature's clothes baskets (the great drifts), and give it the maximum possible exposure to the melting influences whenever these shall arrive. As a general rule these snowstorms are followed by warm southerly winds and rains-the rains frequently heavy in themselves-and rain and snow join hands, two storms in one, and rush down to the ocean in tremendous freshests and floods. The Skagit River, the largest in Washington except the Columbia, and a very considerable stream, has been known to rise 1 foot per hour for sixteen hours, and this where the stream has a fall of 4 feet to the mile and carries off its floods very rapidly. Plate CX, fig. 1, taken on another stream with only 480 square miles of watershed above it, shows the terrific power of these streams that come down from the most densely wooded and perfectly protected watershed in existence. The great flood of 1906 in this section was a perfect demonstration, not only of the vast intensifying effect of forests upon floods due to snow melting, but of the utter helplessness of the forest bed, when saturated with long rains, to restrain floods.

*The author recalls only a single other writer who has set forth this matter in accordance with the facts, and that was an anonymous correspondent in a recent issue of the Pacific Sportsman. His view of the case is summarized in rather terse language, as follows: "Trees in the mountains make floods in the spring. * * * Snow in the timber melts too fast. The timber keeps it from drifting. * * * * The agency which maintains the river is the snow in the huge drifts. * * * That [the drift] is your reservoir that feeds the living streams of summer time. * * * The timber has nothing to do with the water supply, but is a result of the water supply."

The same effect was very manifest in the great flood of 1907 in the valley of the Sacramento River, California. The tributaries on the east side come down from the densely wooded slopes of the Sierras; those on the west side from the bare or sparsely wooded slopes of the Coast Range. If the forest theory be true, these smooth western slopes should send down a greater flow for the same precipitation than the eastern slope. Exactly the reverse seems to have been the case. For the period, March 17-26, the precipitation on the Puta Creek watershed, on the west side (805 square miles), averaged 22.7 inches. The maximum resulting run-off per second per square mile for one day was 39.1 cubic feet. Directly across the valley on the Sierra slope, the precipitation on the American River watershed (2,000 square miles) averaged 14.6 inches for the same period, and the maximum daily discharge was 48.7 cubic feet per second per square mile. Considering the fact that unit run-off for the same conditions is always less the greater the watershed, this result is quite remarkable. It is undoubtedly due to the action of the Sierra forests on snow melting, and again illustrates the inability of forests to exercise any restraining influence upon great floods.a

During the spring of 1908 occurred a record-breaking flood in western Montana, nearly all the streams on both sides of the Continental Divide going far over their banks. As might have been predicted, this occurrence was promptly cited as another example of the effect that a forest-barren country has upon Nevertheless it is as certain as anything of this kind can be that if the country affected by this extraordinary downpour (in some places breaking all previous records) had been thickly forested, and the ground still covered, as it would have been, with a solid layer of saturated snow, the flood would have far exceeded in magnitude and destructiveness that which actually took place.

Wherever forests existed in the higher altitudes they did have

Having now considered the influence of forests upon stream flow from a theoretical standpoint, let the records themselves be examined as far as they are available. These records in the United States, unfortunately, are not so useful as might be wished, because of their brevity. No continuous records on any of our streams run back for more than eighty years, and most of them less than half as far. This is far short of the two hundred years considered by certain European engineers who inves-tigated Wex's theories as the minimum period "necessary in order to draw a reliable conclusion" upon this subject. It does a In the paper, "The Flood of March, 1907, in the Sacramento and San Joaquin River Basins, California," by Messrs. Clapp, Murphy, and Martin, published in Proceedings, American Society of Civil Engineers for February, 1908, the authors say: "In the Sierras the greater part of the precipitation is normally in the form of snow, and the magnitude of floods depends largely on the rate of melting. A heavy warm rain on deep, freshly fallen snow produces a maximum run-off."

b In the Weather Bureau report, Montana section, for June, 1908, it is stated that "the rainfall was phenomenally heavy over most of this district, and, combined with the water from the rapidly melting snow in the high mountains, caused unprecedented floods in nearly all streams.

indeed seem absurd to take present-day records, as is constantly done, and draw conclusions one way or the other as to comparisons with the past, of which records are entirely wanting; but such as they are, a few of these records are given in Table 1. They include in most cases both high and low water, although the low-water records can not, in the nature of the case, be of very much value. Works of channel improvement on most of the streams have probably affected somewhat the low-water stages for the same discharge, while, as is well known, a given stage, even in a natural stream, does not mean the same discharge at different times.a It is really the discharge of the streams rather than the stage that forms the correct basis for comparison; but data for discharge are almost wholly wanting.

An examination of these records shows how utterly impossible it is to find anything in them to support the current theory of forest influence. They prove conclusively that there has been no marked change since the settlement of the country began, and that such change as there has been is on the side of higher high waters and lower low waters before the forests were cut off. What the record would be if we could go back two hundred years can not be said, but it may safely be conjectured that it would show both floods and low waters that would equal or surpass any modern record. It is the experience of every engineer who has the opportunity to observe the action and study the history of great rivers to find everywhere evidence of the occurhistory of great rivers to find everywhere evidence of the occurrence of higher waters than any of which he has positive record. The up-building of bottom lands, the survival of old water marks, and many other indications, show that, great as are modern floods, those of the past were greater still. In the very nature of the case, it is not possible to find similar evidence of former low waters, because such evidence is wiped out by every succeeding high water; but whoever will take the trouble to study records of early expeditions on our rivers, when barges, keel boats, and similar craft were used, will conclude that extreme low water is not a modern development by any means. Measurements of the Monongahela River at Brownsville in 1838 and 1856, low-water years, gave discharges of 75 and 23 cubic feet per second, respectively.

It is quite certain that the river has not fallen so low in late years. At Pittsburg in 1895 (the dryest season in recent years) it fell to 160 feet.

The point should be fully recognized that these records are valueless for establishing either side of the forestry argument unless they clearly indicate a new tendency in river flow. It is not enough to cite a few isolated cases. In a period of, say two hundred years, there must be a record year for high and one for low water. Is there any reason why it might not occur this year as well as earlier? There must be clear evidence of permanent change before any conclusion can be legitimately drawn. two instances such a tendency may possibly be claimed, the Ohio at Pittsburg and the Connecticut at Holyoke, which show, in the past few years, a greater frequency of high waters than for some years previously. To whatever extent this may be true, it is certainly not due to deforestation. The change in the forested areas on the watersheds of either of these streams has been relatively very slight in the past twenty years. The great inroad into the timber of the upper Ohio took place many years ago. Since that time many cleared areas have grown up to timber while new areas have been cut. The change one way or the other in recent years, compared with the total area, is alto-gether insignificant. The Connecticut watershed above Holyoke has a greater forested area than it had forty years ago. This is due to the abandonment of former farms, which, in many instances, have grown up to timber. It is doubtful if the recent cutting in the White Mountains offsets this, and, so far as snow melting is concerned, what cutting there has been is certainly in favor of uniformity of flow.b

"In the period of thirty-four years from 1874, the Ohio River at Pittsburg rose above 15 feet on the gauge 148 times. In the first half of this period, 68 of those freshets occurred and 80 in the second half. The mean for the first half was 19.3 feet and 20.2 feet for the second half. The mean of the lowest waters of the first half was 0.3 feet and 1.6 feet for the second half. In Transactions (Am. Soc. C. E., Vol. LVIII, p. 31), is a twenty-year volumetric record of the Connecticut, which indicates somewhat higher high waters during the last half of the period. But in this case, as at Pittsburg, higher low waters are also indicated. In fact, in both cases, the greater run-off in the later period was clearly due to greater precipitation.

but in the seen in the last few years abandoned farms (abandoned because of their unprofitableness) on the western slopes of the Allegheny Mountains, which are almost impenetrable forests of thrifty trees suitable for making mine posts and telegraph poles. There are, of course, large areas subject to fires at intervals of a few years, but that they are subject to such recurrent fires is proof of their rapid production of fuel, which means twigs and leaves in great abundance." (Col. Thomas P. Roberts, Pittsburg, Pa.)

"The forest area in Vermont is probably 10 per cent greater than forty years ago. Of course the quality of the forest is inferior, but that has no effect on the watershed." (Arthur M. Vaughan, state forester.)

"Farms in the Connecticut Valley are among the richest in the State (New Hampshire) and have been less abandoned than elsewhere. There has been, however, a goodly acreage, very probably amounting to 25 per cent, which was cleared land in 1850, and which at the present time has reverted to forest; much of it excellent white pine forest." (Philip W. Ayres, forester.)

The records of some American rivers have been given. of course, in Europe that one would expect to find more definite data because of the longer periods through which records have been kept. The histories of several of these streams have been examined without finding any confirmation whatever of the forestry theory. The floods on the river Seine, for example, show greater heights in the sixteenth century than in the nineteenth. The most exhaustive investigation of the records of European rivers, however, is that of the Danube, the great river of central Europe, recently made by Ernst Lauda, chief of the hydrographic bureau of the Austrian Government. The years 1897 and 1899 brought destructive floods to the valley of the Danube, that of 1899 being particularly severe. M. Lauda prepared an exhaustive report upon this flood, published in 1900, accompanied by elaborate maps and tables and a searching analysis of the climatic and other conditions. In his concluding remarks, M. Lauda traces the history of the Danube floods for eight hundred years, including in all 125 floods. His conclusions are that floods were formerly just as frequent and as high as they are in recent times and that the progressive deforestation of the country has had no effect in increasing them. In fact, the records of the flood of 1899, which was a summer flood, produced almost entirely by rain, showed that it was severest on those very parts of the watershed that were most heavily forested.

At the Tenth International Congress of Navigation, held at Milan in 1905, one of the four questions appointed for discussion was the very one here under consideration. Papers were presented by representatives from France, Germany, Italy, Austria, and Russia. While all the writers heartily favored forest culture, the opinion was practically unanimous that forests exert no appreciable influence upon the extremes of flow in rivers. It appears, therefore, that European experience does not support the currently accepted theory.

So much for the evidence supplied by the records in this country and abroad. The constantly reiterated statement that floods are increasing in frequency and intensity, as compared with former times, has nothing to support it. There are, it is true, periods when floods are more frequent than at others, and hasty conclusions are always drawn at such times; but, taking the records year after year for considerable periods, no change worth considering is discoverable. The explanation of these periods of high water, like the one now prevailing, must, of course, be sought in precipitation. That is where floods come from, and it is very strange that those who are looking so eagerly for a cause of these floods jump at an indirect cause and leave the direct one entirely untouched. In the records of precipitation, wherever they exist, will be found a full and complete explanation of every one of the floods that have seemed unusually frequent and severe in recent years. A few examples will be cited:

The great Kaw River flood of 1903, which wrought such havoc in Kansas City, was caused by a wholly exceptional rainfall over nearly all the watershed of that stream. In the first three weeks of May, 1903, more than the normal amount (4.5 inches) for the entire month fell. This was followed in the next five days by 3.4 inches, and upon this was piled 4.7 inches in the succeeding five days, by which time the flood had crested.

In the flood of 1906 in western Washington, which did enormous damage and stopped railway traffic for upward of two weeks, the crest of the flood occurred about the 15th of the month. The month of October had been very wet, and the ground and forest storage was exhausted. In the first half of November 25 per cent more rain fell than in the normal for the entire month, and of this about one-half came on the 13th, 14th, and 15th.

In the flood season of 1905, on the watershed of the upper Mississippi, there fell in the month of April above Pokegama Falls 2.55 inches; in May, 4.95 inches; in June, 8.03 inches; and in July, 6.88 inches, a total of 22.41 inches. The normal for the entire year is 26.5 inches.

In the record-breaking flood of 1907 in the Sacramento Valley 88 per cent of the normal for the month of March (based on twenty-one years' observation) fell in three days (17th-19th), and on one day the precipitation ranged from 5 to 8 inches at the different stations.

In the extraordinary flood of May and June, 1908, in western Montana the precipitation for May, at four selected stations, was 6.5 inches, and for June 4.2 inches. The greater portion of this fell late in May and early in June. The normal for May is 2.6 inches and for June 2.3 inches.

Similar conditions prevail in every great flood, and the true explanation is found in them and not at all in the presence or absence of forests on the watersheds. Whether the forests are in any way responsible for the precipitation itself, and so, indirectly, for the floods, brings up the third of the foregoing general propositions, viz, that forests do increase precipitation. However strong may be the popular belief in this theory, there is nothing in the records of rainfall to give it substantial support. The author has had occasion, in connection with his official work, to compare the rainfall records in the northern half of the United States from the Atlantic to the Pacific, often with this particular point in mind, and he has never found anything to indicate a change. So far as he has examined European records the same result holds, and he believes it to be true the world over, except where climatic changes have resulted from causes entirely disconnected with the operations of man in changing the face of nature. In fact, the claim that forests increase precipitation (about 10 per cent, according to Mr. Pinchot) leads to some contradictory results in the forestry argument. dent with our recent high waters, which are attributed so largely to deforestation, there has been an increase in precipitation where there should, apparently, have been a decrease.^a It is evident that where one rule applies the other fails. So, likewise, it is held that forests are necessary to protect mountain slopes because of the greater precipitation prevailing there; yet the forests are said to increase this precipitation materially.

There is really very little, theoretically, to support the claim that forests insure precipitation. It is said that the cooler status of forest areas condenses moisture and induces precipitation; but if this were so in midsummer, when the least precipitation falls, how about the rest of the year, when no such dif-ference exists, but the reverse, if anything? Take, for example, the great forests around the source of the Yellowstone. During the period when the bulk of the precipitation falls the temperature of the forests can not differ materially from the outside, and it is impossible to believe that the forest exercises much influence upon the snowfall.

The fact that these high areas are generally wooded is frequently cited to prove that forests produce the higher rates of precipitation which also prevail there. But would it not be more reasonable to say that the forests flourish there because of the higher precipitation, and that the latter is due to the elevated situation and consequent lower temperature? this, in fact, the reason why precipitation is nearly always greater upon the hills than upon the neighboring lowlands? The mountains are nature's wine press, by which she extracts from an unwilling atmosphere the elixir of life for the hillsides and the valleys below, and she does this whether the forests have been cut away or not.

In one respect, and a very important one, forests diminish precipitation, and that is in the deposition of dew. Dew is essentially an open-country phenomenon, where the radiation of heat from the earth's surface is unobstructed. Clouds or high cover of any kind, and also wind, interfere with this process and prevent the dew from gathering. It collects in full strength on low shrubbery, to a less degree on small trees, as in orchards, and penetrates for short distances under forest cover. In the heart of the native forest of full-grown timber, however, dew is practically unknown. The quantity deposited in the open country in a single night is quite large under favorable conditions, leaving the effect on shrubbery and on the ground of a considerable As it gathers in greater or smaller quantities on every shower. clear, still night in the eastern sections of the country, except in the colder season of the year, the total quantity must be quite large.

One authority holds that dew does not come entirely from the air, but in part from the ground. It is said that water, which in the daytime passes from the ground and plants into the air, is prevented from doing this at night because the air can not receive it, and therefore it gathers in visible form on the ground and vegetation; but if this were true, it really makes no difference in the benefit which comes from the dew. Whether the low temperature due to radiation causes a deposit of moisture from the air or prevents the air from absorbing moisture which it otherwise would, the result, so far as the ground and vegetation are concerned, is practically the same.

are concerned, is practically the same.

"As a step in the crescendo of gloomy forebodings upon this subject that have filled the periodicals during the past twelve months, the following from the September Scrap Book is the very latest: "When our forests are gone the streams will dry up, the rivers will cease to run, the rain will fall no more, and America will be a desert." Considering how large a percentage of our forests has already disappeared, the extraordinary rains in all parts of the United States during the past year are not exactly in line with this dismal prophecy. If one were to judge from the records of the past few years only, he must conclude that deforestation is increasing rainfall.

"The author has never seen any data as to the actual quantities of dew deposited in different localities and conditions, and hopes that the discussion of this paper may bring some to light. He has, however, vivid recollections on the subject when, as a lad on a dairy farm, it was his unlucky lot to go barefooted after the cows every morning without waiting to see whether the sun was going to shine or not. He knows from experience how near zero the dew point can get, and how wet dew is, and also that the warmest place in the world, at such times, is where a cow has lain all night, and next to that the dry precincts of the tall woods.

This may be as good a place as any to note one important characteristic of precipitation, and that is its tendency to move in cycles. It is well known that dry years often follow each other for long periods with great regularity and that these are succeeded by wet periods. Take the region of the upper Mississippi reservoirs, where the normal precipitation, based upon twenty-one years' observation, is 27.1 inches. In the ten years 1886 to 1895 this normal was exceeded only once; in the succeeding ten years the record fell appreciably below it only once. Omitting these two years, the mean for the two periods of nine years was 24.7 and 30 inches, respectively, an average yearly difference of nearly one-fifth of the normal. Following the well-known law that the percentage of run-off increases and diminishes with the precipitation, the disparity between the run-offs for the two periods was greater still.

This phenomenon is also admirably illustrated in the rise and fall of the levels of the Great Lakes, for these immense storage reservoirs not only absorb and distribute annual variations of run-off, but equalize to a large degree the variations from year to year. During the period of the eighties there was a general rise in the lake levels except Superior; and many people ascribed this fact to deforestation, which allowed the water to find its way more quickly into the Lakes. During the nineties there was a period of general subsidence, occasioning considerable anxiety; and it was frequently asserted at that time that this was due to deforestation, which was drying up the streams. For some years now the Lakes have been rising, Ontario being the highest in forty years, and with another wet year the levels will almost reach record heights.

The long record of the Danube floods, already referred to, is another example. Almost invariably high floods would follow each other for several years in close succession, and then would come long intervals of ordinary high waters.

These periodic changes are not, of course, due at all to the presence or absence of forests, for they occur just the same whether forest conditions remain unchanged or not. It is an order of nature not at all understood, but, nevertheless, fully established as a fact. Just now we are in an era of high pre-cipitation and, consequently, of high waters. There is a dis-position to "view with alarm" these exaggerated conditions. Rarely does one stop to think how far better it is to the country to have these wet periods, even with all their floods, than the dry periods that will surely follow. A single dry year may cause more loss to the country through the shrinkage of crops than the floods of an entire cycle of wet years.

Related to the subject of precipitation is that of evaporation as affecting the quantity of water that remains upon the ground. Generally speaking, the surface evaporation in summer should be greater in the open than in the forest, because of the more direct action of the sun and wind; but in the height of summer the forests arrest precipitation to such an extent in the leaves and humus that more of it escapes through evaporation than in the open. The effect of forests upon evaporation through the medium of their leaves finds its counterpart in the similar action of the growing crops that overspread deforested areas. As already pointed out, the forests of the mountains increase the evaporation from snow very materially.

Where the balance lies among all these conflicting influences affecting precipitation and evaporation it is impossible to say, and when the records are examined it must be admitted that they afford no answer. So far as the researches of science have yet determined, the presence or absence of forests cuts no figure in climatic conditions. These depend upon causes of far greater magnitude and are influenced, if at all, only to an insignificant degree by the operations of those who occupy the planet.

The fourth proposition of the forestry argument is that forests are necessary to prevent erosion on steep slopes and the consequent silting of reservoirs and water courses below. Here again there is the same deficiency of evidence to support the theory that has characterized the three propositions already considered. The author has been unable to find anything to confirm it. In his observations, embracing pretty nearly all varieties of timber land in the northern two-thirds of the United States, he has still to see a single example where the mere cutting off of forest trees leads to an extensive erosion of the soil. Almost invariably, and it may be said always except in very unusual conditions, a soil that will sustain a heavy forest growth will immediately put forth, when the forest is cut down (or even burned down), a new growth, generally in part different from the first, but forming an equally effective cover to the soil. The only approach to an exception to this rule that he has observed is in some of the high mountain forests where the soil is extremely thin and weak and the action of nature in producing vegetable growth is slow. Plate CX, fig. 2, shows one of the best examples of this class of timber lands; but even here the slow growth is very evident and no large amount of soil erosion resulted. In the forest areas of the East the growth that follows tree cutting, consisting not only of new trees but of briars and small brush of every description, accumulates very rapidly and forms a more effective mat against erosion than the original forest itself and equally effective in storing water. Such low growths have also a better effect upon snow melting, because they give both wind and sun freer play. Certainly the ground in a forest under culture, with the débris raked up, is more easily eroded than that of a slashing or second-growth area, or even good meadow or pasture. A forest soil unprotected by forest débris is almost as erosible as a field under culture.

The increased erosion of the soil, of which so much is heard, does not result from forest cutting, but from cultivation, using that term in its broad sense to include all of man's operations for the occupancy and utilization of the ground from which the forests have been removed. It is the "breaking of the soil" that leads to its erosion by the elements. Roads and trails are one of the great sources of erosion in hilly countries, but plowing and tilling are the principal causes. The question is not one of forests in the first instance, but of how far the cultivation of the great sources of the soil can be dispensed with Freen tion and occupancy of the soil can be dispensed with. Even on steep mountain slopes, where erosion and ruin have resulted, the effect is often due to the clumsy and injudicious work of the husbandman who uses no judgment of cause and effect in the way he exposes the soil to the force of the storms. The successful cultivation of hillsides in every quarter of the globe is an everlasting refutation of the argument that forests are necessary to protect the face of the earth wherever cultivation is practicable. Some classes of cultivated vegetation, like the wellknit turf of meadow or pasture, are a better protection against erosion than any ordinary forest cover. That there are sections of the country where erosion of the soil is much more rapid than in others under similar conditions is perfectly true. This is especially the case with certain districts in the Southern States, and very likely forest protection is there better than any other; but it is still true that the problem of control of soil erosion on cleared lands is essentially a problem in cultivation. It is not so much the absence of the forest as it is the cutting of roads and ditches, the upturning of the soil, and the various kindred operations of man that quicken the run-off and increase the surface soil wash.

The oft-repeated assertion that, owing to the cutting off of forests, our rivers are shoaling up more than formerly may be challenged absolutely. There is nothing in our river history to support it except in a few instances, like the Yuba River in California, where extensive hydraulic or similar operations have produced vast changes. It is exceedingly doubtful if it can be established by any evidence worthy of the name that the streams of the Mississippi basin are more obstructed by sand bars than formerly. The author's observation of upward of twenty years and inquiries from many sources fail to disclose any such evidence. It would not, indeed, be surprising if some such result were noticeable, for it would naturally seem that the cultivation of the soil has facilitated to some degree the wash into the streams. If this is the case, however, the rivers do not show it. They have a way of distributing their burdens so as to meet their necessities, and, except in rare cases, they do not shoal appreciably more than formerly.a

The distinction between erosion actually resulting from cultivation and that assumed to result from timber cutting is important to keep in mind, for it fixes the burden of responsibility where it belongs. It shows that this erosion or soil wash can be reduced only by the elimination or control of cultivation, and the question at once becomes that of the extent to which such control or elimination is practicable. For example, it is insisted that the suggested reservoir system of the Ohio, to be referred to later on, will be absolutely dependent for its integrity and permanence upon keeping the watersheds above them covered with forests. But it is understood not to be the policy to include in the proposed forest reserves any lands that are fitted for agriculture.b As elsewhere pointed out, that portion of these agriculture. As elsewhere pointed out, that portion of these a The absurd length to which this erosion argument has been carried is well illustrated by the remark made in a recent address by one of the officials of the Forestry Service: "This energy (of running water) is expended in rolling along stones and gravel to finally build up the mouths or beds of the great rivers. Next year there will be a bill introduced in Congress providing a forest reserve in the Appalachian Mountains, so that the rocks from these mountains will be kept from the Mississippi River?"

b Among references to the intention not to absorb agricultural lands in the areas conserved by the reservoirs is the following from A. F.
Horton, Assoc. M. Am. Soc. C. E., in Engineering News, June 11, 1908:
"The reader should not lose sight of the fact that the conserved area is not rendered unfit for cultivation or other use, but that only a small portion of the conserved area (that covered by the reservoir) is so utilized that its value for cultivation is destroyed."

areas, which is not reduced to cultivation, will not be subject to erosion more than at present by the mere fact of cutting off the timber, for the natural growth on logged-up lands is just as good a protection as the forests themselves. If the agricultural tracts are still to be left open for occupancy, the source of sediment remains uncurbed and the whole argument for forest reserves, on the ground of protecting the reservoirs from sedimentation, falls to the ground.

Some reference should be made to the real significance of the alarming reports which have been put forth concerning the washing of our soils into the sea. Over and over during the past year has the statement appeared that 1,000,000,000 tons of our soil is annually carried by our rivers into the ocean. This figure itself is quite conservative, but the conclusions drawn from it are not at all so. Taking the results of silt observations on the Mississippi River and its tributaries for 1879, and applying the Missouri rate to all western streams outside the Mississippi basin, and the Ohio rate to all eastern streams outside the same basin, a total of about 1,100,000,000 tons is indicated. But 1879 was a low-water year in the Mississippi basin, and the quantity for average years may probably be 1,500,000,000 tons and for extreme years 2,000,000,000 tons.

Let us look these prodigious quantities squarely in the face and see what they mean. Where does this enormous volume of soil come from? It is, as one might infer from published references to the subject, from our cultivated fields, an annual toll laid upon the precious fertility of our agricultural lands? Not at all. Only a very small proportion comes from this source. Possibly half of the total quantity of sediment goes down by the Mississippi. All authorities agree that the greater portion of this comes from the Missouri. From computations which the author has made, he believes that fully two-thirds of it comes from that source. The observations of 1879 indicate that five times as much sediment comes from that stream as from the Ohio. But where does the Missouri get it? entirely from the most useless areas of land with which any country was ever afflicted. The barren Bad Lands are the principal source. Much comes from the mountains; much from the sand hills; very little, relatively, from cultivated areas. Of the balance of the soil wash of the United States, by far the greater portion comes from other similar sections of the West, where the streams carry enormous loads of sediment. The entire Colorado system is even more distinguished in this respect than is the Missouri. The same is true of the Rio Grande, the Pecos, and the upper courses of the Arkansas and Red. Even the streams of the great interior basin are heavy silt bearers, and the same is true of many of the streams of the Pacific coast. The streams flowing into Puget Sound are heavily laden with slit at certain portions of the year, and the great Columbia bar is impressive evidence of the vast burden of sediment which that mighty river has carried to the sea. Nearly all of the annual load carried by these streams is entirely unaffected by anything which man has done. It is the regular natural carving down of the hills and building up of the valleys and estuaries below. The eastern streams are clear and sediment free compared with those of the West, but even in these a large portion of their sediment is eroded from the gorges and canyons of the hills and mountains, which will continue to wash away as long as the rivers flow. This particular class of erosion, on both eastern and western rivers, is far less objectionable than one is led in these later days to believe. Has it not from the beginning been one of the most beneficent operations of nature? Are not the richest lands in the world—the river bottoms and deltas—built up in this way? To a very great extent the irrigated lands of the West are composed entirely of the débris from the mountains and the Bad Lands. Even to day this tribute from the highlands is of great value. The periodic enrichment of the Ohio bottom lands and similar tracts in hundreds of other places is of the highest economic importance. The soil-laden waters of irrigation in the spring, though sometimes injurious to the growing crop for the time being, are, on the whole, extremely beneficial. The damage from sediment is not in its injury to the lands ordinarily, but to ditches, canals, reservoirs, and similar works. On the whole it is, and always has been, a benefit to the lowlands. Even that portion carried out to sea builds up deltas and surely, though slowly, extends the habitable area of the globe. Not alone in the resources of water and timber, but in the perpetual renewal of soil as well, has the valley said to the mountains throughout the world's history: I will lift up mine eyes unto the hills from whence cometh my help.

Sediment of this character, except when accompanied by alkaline salts or other similar ingredients, is not injurious to domestic supply. The water of the Missouri River is one of the healthiest drinking waters in the world in spite of the fact that it is one of the muddiest.^a

The proportion of soil wash that comes from cultivated fields is really very small compared with the enormous total that the rivers carry away. Heavy rains undoubtedly wash farm soils a great deal, but this erosion is in large part a transfer from one spot to another and not an absolute loss. The history of the old Ohio Canal reservoirs indicates very little filling in the sixty-six years that they have been in existence. According to the chief engineer of the Ohio state board of public works, it is scarcely appreciable in some of the reservoirs, and in none does it amount to as much as 6 inches, or one two-hundredth inch per year from the tributary watershed. Yet these reservoirs are surrounded by rich agricultural lands. The silt observations on the Ohio in 1879 indicate only a little more than one sixhundredth inch over the entire watershed, but this, it is true, was a year of light rains.

It is readily seen that the formidable danger of which so much has been written of late becomes quite harmless as to quantity when it comes down to the individual farm. The harm is probably not so much in the quantity of soil actually lost as in the fact that the soil may be leached of some of its more important ingredients. The evil is one which can be controlled only by better methods of farming, whereby the surface waters will be restrained from eroding the soil; but even these measures have their adverse side, for when heavy rains prevail for a long time it is more important to the farmer to get the water off his land than it is to save a little soil. Most of the soil will stop on lower ground and not be wholly lost, but if the water is not gotten rid of the crop may be ruined.

The caving of the banks of our great rivers is constantly cited as an example of soil loss on an enormous scale, and it is asserted that this condition is worse now than formerly. The Mississippi and Missouri rivers, practically alike in this respect, are the two most prominent examples. The author will consider briefly the case of the Missouri, because he has had a long and intimate acquaintance with that stream from its mouth to its source.

It may be stated by way of refutation that the actual condition of this stream to-day is better than before settlement began in its valley, except that possibly the low-water flow is slightly diminished to meet the demands for irrigation. The stream is not "constantly becoming more and more savage," as a recent writer asserts. On the other hand, its natural savagery is much restrained. Probably 100 miles of its banks are protected; snags and drift heaps are largely removed; considerable bottom land has been reclaimed and turned to industrial use; floods are no greater than they used to be, and navigation is safer and easier. Navigation has ceased; not because the river has deteriorated, as is commonly asserted, but because the natural difficulties peculiar to this stream are so great and so hard to overcome that boats can not live and do business at the same rates at which railroads transport freight.

That the river is a most destructive one to the bottom lands along its course is only too true, but the character of its de-structive work is generally misunderstood. The writer just quoted states that the river carries away annually 8,000 acres of bottom land within the limits of the State of Missouri alone. The total acreage of these lands is about 640,000. If this state-ment were true, more than the entire area would have been carried away since the voyage of Lewis and Clark, and if the process had been continuous since Columbus discovered America, the river to-day would be flowing in its original channel in the solid rock, 75 to 90 feet below the present surface. As a matter of fact, there is more soil in the valley to-day than there was at the date of either of these events. Taking an average for a considerable period, none of the bottom land is lost. always been slowly rising through accretion. The bank caving is only a transfer from one point of the shore to another. For every dissolving bank there is a nascent bar. Where steamboats ran last year willows may be growing this, and next year the farmer may be planting his corn. The havoc wrought concerns the individual owner, but not the valley bottom itself. The cruel losses attract attention; the unobtrusive gains do not, but the account always balances itself. The harm done is, first, to the individual whose possessions are swept away and, second, to the community through paralysis of development, depreciation of values, and the holding back of this natural garden spot from becoming what is ought to be. The evil is a very real one, and the author has long endeavored, though without success, to secure provision in the river and harbor bill for its amelioration.^a Great as the evil is, however, it is not at all in the nature of an actual loss of land to the valley.

^a The late J. B. Johnson, Member of American Society of Civil Engineers, used to say, in extolling the virtues of Missouri River water, that it was the most perfectly filtered water in the world; with this difference, however, that in the ordinary case water is run through the filter, but here the filter is run through the water.

It must be clear from the foregoing that the bottom lands of the Missouri add nothing whatever to the total quantity of sediment that passes out of the mouth of the stream, for these bottoms have been increasing rather than diminishing in quan-Likewise the Mississippi bottoms contribute nothing to the volume of sediment that is carried into the Gulf of Mexico. It all comes from the uplands, far and near, but principally from the more remote and hilly regions. This load is in the nature of through traffic. The local freight picked up from a caving bank is mostly discharged at the next station. It follows, therefore, that if the banks of these streams were revetted from the Gulf to Pittsburg, the Falls of St. Anthony, and the mouth of the Yellowstone the quantity of sediment passing into the Gulf would not be diminished a particle. Such revetment would nevertheless be of the very highest value, if it could be made to hold, for it would give permanence to the banks, security to riparian property, and would largely prevent bar building by training the river in a regular channel and relieving it of everything except its through load of sediment.

The bank-caving problem of these valleys is unaffected in any appreciable degree by the influence of forests or cultivation on the watersheds, and can not be solved or materially assisted by any practicable changes in these conditions. The problem is strictly a local one, and the remedy must be a local one. Even if it were possible to bring the waters down from the uplands perfectly clear, it is not at all certain that the effect upon the bottom lands would not be injurious rather than beneficial; for then the caving soil, instead of being quickly deposited again, would in part be carried out to sea, and the bottom lands, unless protected, would be gradually eaten away.

In addition to the four main propositions discussed above a few subordinate features of the question will now be considered.

A feature of the Forestry Service which is generally overlooked is the possible effect of culture upon the bed of humus so much relied upon in these discussions to prove the restraining action of forests upon run-off. Mr. Pinchot, in his statement to the Judiciary Committee, said:

"The effect of a forest on a steep slope is to cover that slope with leaves, rotten and half rotten sticks, and other mechanical obstructions which prevent the water from running below as rapidly as it would otherwise."

It is understood that the forest policy is to keep this litter cleared up as a measure of fire protection, and one frequently sees in articles on forestry photographs of the typical forest culture in which the ground is thoroughly cleaned up. The result must be to diminish proportionately the retentive action of the forest bed and to increase its liability to erosion. In the light of the foregoing discussion fire protection is of much greater importance than the retentive effect of the forest bed on the run-off. The remarkable degree to which the forest bed will dry out in prolonged drought, making it one vast tinder box, supports this conclusion, and is another proof of the extreme desiccating effect of forest growth upon the soil.

It often escapes attention, except with those who are in the woods a great deal, that the water establishes little channels through the débris where the latter is of long accumulation and somewhat permanent in character. Such débris does not in reality offer so great an obstruction to flow as one would suppose, and as would be the case if its condition underwent frequent change.

The statement is constantly met that forests are very efficacious in the protection of river banks from undermining and steep slopes from sliding. The exact reverse is the case. As every river engineer knows, nothing is more disastrous to a river bank on an alluvial stream than heavy trees. This is due partly to the great weight, but in large part to the swaying effect of the wind and the enormous leverage of the long trunks which pry up the ground and facilitate the tendency to undermining. One of the regular policies of river control is to cut down these trees for a distance back from the edge of the bank wherever complications with private ownership do not prevent. Snags and driftwood in the channels have always been among the most serious obstacles to navigation on streams flowing between forest-covered banks. Likewise where railroad or highway grading cuts the skin of unstable mountain slopes, the presence of large trees immediately above tends powerfully to loosen the ground and cause it to slide; and in such cases it is necessary to cut down the timber. Far better than forest trees on river banks are thick growths of willow, alder, or any of the smaller close-growing shrubs; and on side hill slopes either such shrubbery or a good turf.a

In the current discussion a great deal is made of the fact that mountain slopes are "quick spilling," the deduction being that they therefore are more productive of floods. This is quite to the fact. It is perfectly true that more rain falls contrary on the hills than on the lowlands, that a greater percentage of rainfall runs off from steep than from flat slopes, and that it runs off more rapidly; but it does not follow at all that these conditions produce greater floods. A mountain stream carries off the water within its banks a great deal faster and more safely than a similar stream in the lowlands. The banks are almost always stable and the bottoms rocky or composed of heavy gravel or bowlders; in fact, floods do less harm on such streams than on any others. In the lowlands, where the streams have smaller slopes and unstable banks, much smaller run-off produces greater floods and more destruction. Moreover, nature to a large degree adapts streams to the work required of them. The channels of the tributaries of the Ohio have been carved out through long ages to carry in safety the average flood flow. Area for area of watershed, their cross sections are much larger than those of streams in climates of less rainfall. The normal section of the Ohio at Wheeling is over 2 square feet for every square mile of watershed, while that of the Kaw Kansas City is less than one-third square foot per square mile. It is therefore wholly erroneous to conclude that the streams of these mountains are more subject to overbank freshets than those of the lowlands or that the freshets themselves are more destructive. Considering the conditions growing out of settlement the reverse is unquestionably the case.

There is one other consideration of prime importance in this forestry argument, and that is the fact that no possible development of forestry can increase the present percentage of forest-covered areas. At least as much ground as is now devoted to agricultural purposes must continue to be so used. The utmost admissible expansion of national forests will never require a greater area than is now occupied by forests and secand growth or logged-off lands, which, so far as run-off and erosion are concerned, are just as effective as the virgin forest itself, and more effective than will be the groomed forest of the new régime. There may be a shifting of areas devoted to forests, but possible expansion, compared with the present area, is so small that its influence upon the great rivers, even admitting the full force of the forestry argument, would be wholly inappreciable.

The fact just dwelt upon should make us thankful that the forestry theory as to the stream flow is not correct. Whatever the value of forests, we can not have them everywhere, and by far the greater portions already cleared away must always remain deforested. If this fact of deforestation has brought with it in greater degree than of old the calamities of high and low waters, then, indeed, we are in an unfortunate case. not done so. Nature has decreed no such penalty for the sub-jugation of the wilderness, and on the whole these natural visitations are less frequent and less extensive than they were Nature has decreed no such penalty for the sub-before the white man cut away the forests.

In summarizing below the foregoing argument, the author would be particularly careful to guard against sweeping assertions in any of his conclusions. He well understands how little the subject is capable of precise demonstration. Snow, for ex-ample, does not always fall, even in the open country, under the influence of the wind, or it may fall in a wet condition that keeps it from drifting. Altitude comes in with its lower temperature and modifies the general result. There is a vast difference between a northern and a southern exposure even with the same slope and topographical conditions. Precipitation scarcely ever occurs twice alike on the same watershed. The combination of flow from tributaries is never the same in any two floods, and there is an endless variety of conditions that must qualify our rules and make us cautious in making claims in a matter of this The author objects solely to the contrary course pursued by many forestry advocates-to the extreme claims that forests exert a regulating influence upon stream flow in times of great floods or extreme low water in our larger rivers. These claims stand to-day absolutely unproven. The difference between past and present conditions is not great. One influence offsets another with such nicety that the change, if there is any, is hard to find. The "delicate balance" maintained by nature where

The following testimony before the board of consulting engineers, Panama Canal, is to the point (Report, p. 329):
Question by Mr. Welcker. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask if Mr. Dauchy thinks that vegetation prevents the sliding?
Mr. Dauchy. My experience has been the reverse; I have stopped sliding hills by cutting off the vegetation. The weight of the timber on a sliding slope aids materially to assist the sliding.
Mr. Welcker. Does not the vegetation diminish it?
Mr. Dauchy. If you could get a grass-covered slope it would help to diminish it.

man has not cut away the forests is replaced by other balances equally delicate and efficacious in the drainage of lands, the growing of crops, and the deposition of dew.

In the following seven propositions the author sums up the arguments presented in the foregoing pages:

(1) The bed of humus and débris that develops under forest cover retains precipitation during the summer season, or moderately dry periods at any time of the year, more effectively than do the soil and crops of deforested areas similarly situated. It acts as a reservoir moderating the run-off from showers and mitigating the severity of freshets, and promotes uniformity of flow at such periods.

(2) The above action fails altogether in periods of prolonged and heavy precipitation, which alone produce great general floods. At such times the forest bed becomes thoroughly saturated, and water falling upon it flows off as readily as from the Moreover, the forest storage, not being under control, flows out in swollen streams, and may, and often does, bring the accumulated waters of a series of storms in one part of the watershed upon those of another which may occur several days later; so that, not only does the forest at such times exert no restraining effect upon floods, but, by virtue of its uncontrolled reservoir action, may actually intensify them.

(3) In periods of extreme summer heat forests operate to diminish the run-off, because they absorb almost completely and give off in evaporation ordinary showers which, in the open country, produce a considerable temporary increase in the streams; and therefore, while small springs and rivulets may dry up more than formerly, this is not true of the larger rivers.

The effect of forests upon the run-off resulting from snow melting is to concentrate it into brief periods and thereby increase the severity of freshets. This results (a) from the prevention of the formation of drifts, and (b) from the prevention of snow melting by sun action in the spring, and the retention of the snow blanket until the arrival of hot weather.

(5) Soil erosion does not result from forest cutting in itself, but from cultivation, using that term in a broad sense. The question of preventing such erosion or soil wash is altogether one of dispensing with cultivation or properly controlling it. The natural growth which always follows the destruction of a forest is fully as effective in preventing erosion, and even in retaining run-off, as the natural forest.

(6) As a general proposition climate, and particularly precipitation, have not been appreciably modified by the progress of settlement and the consequent clearing of land, and there is no sufficient reason, theoretically, why such a result should ensue.

(7) The percentage of annual run-off to rainfall has been slightly increased by deforestation and cultivation.

If the foregoing propositions are correct they enforce two very important conclusions-one relating to the regulation of our rivers and the other to forestry.

It follows that no aid is to be expected in the control or utilization of our rivers, either for flood prevention, navigation, or water power, by any practicable application of forestry. member always that it is the extreme of flow, not the medium condition, that controls the cost of river regulation. It is the floods and low waters that measure the cost. Any scheme of control that is not based upon these is worthless. This proposition need scarcely be urged upon the experienced engineer. For himself he would never place any real reliance upon forestry. Called in consultation, for example, in the problem of protecting the city of Pittsburg from floods, he would be bound to take as his measure of the problem the highest recorded flood on the river, with a good factor of safety on that, and then figure out by what methods-artificial reservoirs, levees, raising of grades, or clearing the river channel of artificial obstructions—he would obtain the desired relief. He would not dare, as the physician in the case, to advise his patient that he could dispense with or lessen in any degree the application of the remedies proposed. nor save one dollar of the cost, by anything that might be done in reforesting the watershed of the rivers themselves.

In like manner no engineer could honestly advise lowering in height by a single inch the levees of the Mississippi because of any possible application of forestry to the watershed of that stream. And, again, he could not advise that forestry development would lessen in any degree the cost of improving the rivers for low-water navigation. Engineers fully understand their responsibility in these matters. But great engineering projects can not be carried out without money, and the people will not give the money unless convinced of the necessity and wisdom of the plan proposed. So long as there is appropriately asset to the plan proposed. parently some easier and simpler plan, some panacea, no matter how nebulous or unproven, that offers a way out without the expenditure of so much cold cash, they will be backward in voting money, and the counsel of the engineer will be of no avail. Hence the complete divorcement of forestry from any connection with river regulation, so far, at least, as its effect upon the cost of such regulation is concerned, will be a distinct and positive gain to the latter.

^a Possibly the author is too positive in this opinion. He finds that, in one case at least, the city of Williamsport, Pa., reputable engineers have advised reforestation of mountain slopes as a protection against floods. The statement of "an eminent authority" was cited with approval to the effect that "four-fifths of the precipitation is detained by the surface of the ground" under forest cover. But here, as in all these assumptions, the rule applies only to the average condition. The point is overlooked that in periods of heavy precipitation the retentive capacity of the forest bed becomes exhausted. If the city of Williamsport is relying upon this advice, it is certainly laying up for itself a season of repentance.

In the second place, forestry will be left to work out its own salvation without any reference to the rivers. Will not its cause be promoted by this divorcement? At first thought it may seem that thereby one great argument for forestry is lost; but no argument can be of value in the long run that is not based upon truth, and the disappointment that is certain to result in the fulfillment of these hopes will do more harm than good. Forestry does not need any such support. It stands on a basis of its own, too broad and too sure to require any extraneous aid. What is this basis? The reply may be given in the beautifully appropriate phrase that occurs in the act of Congress creating the first of our national parks—"the benefit and enjoyment of the people." In the matter of benefits forests are necessary, because they produce the most important material of construction known to man; even iron can not be excepted. From the lead pencil to the mast of a ship, from the infant's top to spacious temples and palaces, it enters into nearly every requirement of human existence. A large portion of the structures for human habitation are built of it. The land transportation of the world is closely dependent upon it, for if it were not for the railroad tie scarcely a car could run. It is only when one stops to think a little upon the unlimited adaptability of wood to human needs that its transcendent importance is borne in upon him.

In the matter of enjoyment, no other work of nature has done more for the uplifting and ennobling of the mind than these "first temples" of God. It requires no argument to enforce this assertion, particularly with him who has been reared in close companionship with the woods. Sad indeed will be the day, if it ever comes, when the people are deprived of this source of healthful pleasure, for which no adequate substitute can ever be found.

And yet this supremely important resource in human happiness is strictly limited, and the visible supply is fast disappearing. Statistics fix the date, almost as confidently as an astronomer predicts an eclipse, when the doomsday of its final disappearance will come, unless something is done to prevent. Most fortunately this material, unlike copper or iron or stone, is a vegetable product capable of self-renewal, and the supply can be kept up forever. This is what gives its extreme importance to forestry. It requires no dubious support from any other source. It fully justifies the splendid work that the Forestry Service is doing and demonstrates the wisdom of the farsighted men who are laying the foundation of our future national forests.

Let us now inquire if it will not be to the advantage of this great work to be absolutely independent of any connection with waterway development. Will it not be better in every way for forestry if it is promoted solely on the basis of pro-ducing trees for human use and enjoyment, and not at all for any supposed influence upon flow of streams? Is it really a wise move, so far as forestry is concerned, to single out the rugged and inaccessible mountains as localities where our future supply of timber must come from? The availability of forests to human needs depends very largely upon the situation in which they grow. Few people understand the exceeding importance of this matter. The converting of a forest tree into form for use involves two distinct processes—the conversion of the tree into lumber or other product and its transportation to the place of consumption. The cost of logging operations is immensely increased by the roughness of the ground. our western forests, for example, it requires a higher grade of skill, commanding higher wages, to "lay" a tree on a steep hillside than on even ground. The losses from breakage in falling are much higher and the difficulty and expense of getting the logs out much greater. In fact, the increase of cost runs all the way from $1 to $10 per 1,000, depending upon the situation. Engineering News stated the case very forcibly in regard to the Appalachian forests-though it did not have this particular thought in mind—when it said in a recent issue that "the cutting off of forests on the remote mountain slopes has only become possible with the high price of lumber that has prevailed for ten years past." This increase of cost represents the perpetual tax that the public must pay for timber from these regions as compared with that from the lowlands. And a great deal of it can never be gotten out at all. The poet's "gem of purest ray serene" was not more lost to human needs than are tens of thousands of noble trees in the rugged fastnesses of our mountains, east and west. Benefit? To convert them into lumber will cost more than they are worth. Enjoyment? Only the solitary hunter or mountaineer ever sees them. These are not the places to rear up forests for the good of the

Consider the question of transportation and take Chicago as being practically on the meridian through the center of popula-tion of the country. The rate on fir from the Cascades to Chi-cago is 55 cents per 100, or $16.50 per 1,000 feet B. M. The average rate from the Appalachian forests is about 18 cents, or about $9 per 1,000 for green oak. By a proper distribution of our forests these rates, on the average, ought to be brought within 10 cents per 100. In logging and transportation together the country will tax itself on the average not less than $10 per 1,000 for whatever supply it derives from these mountain forests, as compared with what it might receive from forests more favorably located.

If it were not for the erroneous assumption that forests have a regulative effect upon the flow of our navigable rivers, would not the policy in regard to the acquisition of lands for forest reserves be quite different from that now proposed? If Congress were to vote, say, $10,000,000 at the next session to commence the establishment of national forests by purchase, would it not be far better spent in lands where the pine, oak, cherry, and ash used to grow, in locations convenient for access by the people and in every way better adapted to their needs? States, counties, or other agencies should be required to meet half the original cost. Even if the total cost to the Government were several times what equal areas in the mountains cost, it would be far more economical in the long run. There is an abundance of land in nearly all the States suitable for the purpose that can be had at not excessive cost. In New England, for example, would not the development of forests in the lowlands, where in many places former cultivation has been abandoned, be far better than to buy up the difficult slopes of the White Moun-Let there be a national forest in every county of the tains? United States where it is practicable to create one. Let its location be carefully chosen so that its product may be manufactured and shipped with the smallest cost to the people, and serving also not only as a pleasure ground, but as a stimulus to similar work by private agencies.

It will be urged that these mountain lands are worth more for forestry than for agriculture. Very true; but that would not justify their purchase if the same money would produce a better result elsewhere. "Never buy what you do not want because it is cheap." Again, it may be said that here is our only remainis cheap." Again, it may be said that here is our only remaining timber supply in the East, and it must be saved. Except in some possible economy by the more judicious cutting under government control, it is not apparent how a forest tree that has attained its growth is going to render any greater good to humanity by being saved for the next generation than by being cut for this. There is a general sentiment current in these later years that if timber is cut off by private agencies it is wasted; but does it not find its way into common use just the same? Not as completely, perhaps, but still substantially the same. Take the combination of the Weyerhauser Timber Company, considered entirely apart from its economic and ethical aspects as a great trust or corporation, and solely as a preserver our forests. With its system of fire control, its policy of holding its timber for high prices, is it not really conserving the timber for future use? To speak of such timber as being "lost" to the people, "wasted," and its acquisition as a "looting of our heritage," is as disingenuous as it is untrue. Will its lumber heritage," is as disingentous as it is untrue. Will its lumber cost the consumer a cent more per thousand than if it were from a government reserve? It is a wholly gratuitous assumption that our timber is going to be "wasted" unless it is placed under government control. The thing of prime importance is to get new forests started. In the thirty to fifty years that our present supply will last new forests should be brought into with the country. This is for more important then existence all over the country. This is far mo to buy the virgin timber of the Appalachians, This is far more important than

Moreover, it seems now to be considered that the virgin lands have already risen too high in price to be purchased by the Government, and that it is only the second-growth lands that can be economically acquired.a Be that as it may, it is certain that the acquisition of such of these lands as are desirable for the strict purposes of timber production will be greatly facilitated by disabusing the minds of the owners of the impression so diligently fostered of late that the very salvation of the country depends upon their selling out to the Government.

^a Report of Secretary of Agriculture on Southern Appalachian and White Mountain watershed, December, 1907, pp. 8, 30, 35.

anyone doubt that the present course will add vastly to the purchase price?

Still another argument that may be urged is that only by linking the forests with the rivers in a way to establish their utility in maintaining navigation can the constitutional objection to the acquisition of these lands be overcome. But does this apply to mountain forests more than to any others? It is incontestably true that whatever restraining effect forests have upon run-off is greater upon the lowlands than upon steep mountain sides. This legal feature of the question will be referred to further on.

RESERVOIRS IN THEIR RELATION TO STREAM FLOW.

Under this heading artificial reservoirs alone are included. Natural reservoirs of various kinds exist nearly everywhere and exert a profound influence upon stream flow. The ground is the most important of these, absorbing on the average probably one-third of the total rainfall. Natural lakes are great regulators, the St. Lawrence system being the most perfect example. Forests are effective reservoirs at certain seasons. Swamps and low-lying grounds along river courses, like the great flood basins of the Sacramento and the Mississippi, are, in their natural state, enormous reservoirs which greatly reduce the flood flow of the river channels. Snowdrifts, particularly the great drifts of the mountains, are splendid reservoirs. The streams themselves have immense storage capacity; for example, the Mississippi within levees store at least two thousand billion cubic feet of water from Cairo to the Gulf, between extreme high and low water stages. All these reservoirs and many of less importance are ever active in regulating the flow of streams. Without them precipitation would flow off as fast as it arrives and our greatest floods would be magnified many times.

Here we are considering only those reservoirs constructed by man to supplement and extend the regulating effect of nature's reservoirs. If the conclusions reached in the first section of this paper are correct, forests can not be relied upon in any degree to help solve the problems of high and low water. Present conditions must be met by purely artificial means, since man has so far discovered no way of controlling the climatic conditions which govern precipitation. He can not "stay the bottles of heaven" in times of flood, nor open them in seasons of drought. He must take the water after it reaches the earth and deal with it the best he can.

The artificial reservoir is intended to attack this problem at its source. It catches and holds back the water in the near vicinity of its deposition, instead of waiting until it gathers into the rivers and then building huge bulwarks to contain it there in times of flood. It saves the stored-up supply and gives it out in the low-water season, thereby helping navigation, instead of dredging and otherwise treating the water courses to increase the low-water depth. It corrects one of the greatest deficiencies of nature by abolishing inequalities of stream flow and convert-ing waste into utility. Theoretically, it is the perfect plan. It has always appealed to the imagination of layman and professional alike. It has often been resorted to, and the number of reservoirs in the world is very great and constantly increasing. Hitherto they have been mainly used for power, municipal supply, irrigation, and for navigation in canals. In very few instances have they been applied to improve the navigation of large natural water courses, and in none, so far as the author is aware, for the exclusive purpose of preventing floods

The question arises, Why are they not regularly applied to these last-mentioned purposes? The answer may at once be given that in the general case the cost is greater than the benefits to be received. This element of cost arises mainly from the absence of good sites (including dam sites as well as holding basins), and also, to considerable extent, from an interference with the purely artificial conditions growing out of the settlement of the country.

The best reservoir site is a natural lake. Such a site is already covered with water, and original conditions are not materially changed. Evaporation is not much increased by the necessary enlargement. Smaller and safer dams accomplish a given storage than for the average dry site. The question of public health involved in uncovering large areas for reservoir beds in the heated portion of the year is less serious. Everything makes these sites the most advantageous that can be found, and it may be laid down as a rule that the public good requires the utilization of every such site to the fullest possible extent.^a

"An interesting feature of these natural reservoirs may be noted. A natural lake wholly uncontrolled at its outlet may have a more effective control of the outflow than an artificial reservoir of equal superficial area when full, though of far greater capacity between high and low water. The outflow from a lake can be increased only by storing simultaneously a quantity of water measured by a rise in the surface equal to that in the outlet necessary to give the increased flow. But if the artificial reservoir has reached the limit of its allowable filling, the outflow must be made equal to the inflow. If this limit is reached before or at the time of maximum run-off, then a quantity equal to this

Except in a few cases, dry sites are deficient in these advantages. Greater areas of land have to be condemned and larger and costlier dams are required, with vastly greater danger in case of accident. Really good sites are not as abundant as one might wish, and the problem of developing storage on such sites is beset with difficulties of many kinds that greatly increase the cost.

In 1897 the author made a careful study of this question of flood control by means of reservoirs in connection with an official investigation of the advisability of building reservoirs in the arid regions. His view of the difficulties in the way of any general application of such a system is quite fully stated in his report (House Doc. No. 141, 55th Cong., 2d sess., p. 46), and the following extracts are directly in point:

"It is the cost, not the physical difficulties, which stands in the way. It may be stated that, as a general rule, a sufficient amount of storage can be artificially created in the valley of any stream to rob its floods of their destructive character; but it is equally true that the benefits to be gained will not ordinarily justify the cost. The reason for this is plain. Floods are only occasional calamities at worst. Probably on the majority of streams destructive floods do not occur, on the average, oftener than once in five years. Every reservoir built for the purpose of flood protection alone would mean the dedication of so much land to a condition of permanent overflow in order that three or four times as much might be redeemed from occasional over-One acre permanently inundated to rescue 3 or 4 acres from inundation of a few weeks once in three or four years, and this at a great cost, could not be considered a wise proceeding, no matter how practicable it might be from engineering considerations alone. The cost, coupled with the loss of so much land to industrial uses, would be far greater than that of levees or other methods of flood protection. The construction of reservoirs for flood protection is not, therefore, to be expected, except where the reservoirs are to serve some other purpose as well.'

The above conclusions are still as applicable as they were when written. The subject has been given renewed prominence quite recently in connection with the Ohio River floods; but before considering this particular application attention will be given to certain reservoir systems that have been proposed elsewhere, and particularly to one already built and put in operation by the Government and which will be referred to frequently hereinafter. This is the system at the headwaters of the Mississippi—the largest artificial reservoir system in the world.

The project of converting the more important of the numerous lakes around the sources of the Mississippi and its tributaries into storage reservoirs as an aid to navigation was originally proposed by Gen. G. K. Warren, and was first put into definite shape by Colonel Farquhar, of the Corps of Engineers. The plan then embraced a large number of lakes in Minnesota and Wisconsin, but only five sites have actually been improved. The dams were first built of timber cribs, but have recently been rebuilt in concrete. The combined storage is about 93,000,000,000 cubic feet. It is about twice the mean annual run-off from the watershed, and the system is probably the only one, except the Great Lakes, which equalizes periodic as well as annual fluctuations of flowthat is, it carries over the surplus from wet years to help out in dry years—and its utility is, therefore, of the most comprehensive The cost of the five reservoirs is remarkably low, character. although it is not now possible to tell the exact cost of the present structures on account of the mixture of old and new work; but it probably does not exceed $750,000, including a lock in the Sandy Lake Dam. This is only $8 per 1,000,000 cubic feet, or 35 cents per acre-foot on the basis of total capacity. It would be about twice this on the basis of the mean annual run-off from the watersheds.

A large portion of the original project has been abandoned because public sentiment did not support its continuance. The author has always regretted this backward step, as he believes in developing to the fullest extent the exceptional opportunities here offered for the storage of water. The available reservoir sites which could be cheaply improved in Minnesota and Wisconsin are sufficient to control absolutely the floods of the Mississippi within the danger line, for a long distance below St. Paul, and to improve the navigation of the upper river very materially, while their value for industrial purposes is almost beyond estimate.

run-off must be let out of the reservoir. This contingency can never happen in a natural lake. The turning point where outflow and inflow balance each other is always after the crest of the flood has passed—in fact, at the time when the diminishing inflow and increasing outflow balance each other and the lake ceases to rise. In the case of the Yellowstone Lake (140 square miles), for example, this rise, in average seasons of snow melting, continues from ten days to three weeks after the inflow has reached its maximum, and surrounding streams have subsided materially before the Yellowstone River (at the lake outlet) ceases to rise.

In spite of the great and obvious advantages of this system, it has not yet received the popular approval that might be expected of it. In fact, about three years ago, there arose a widespread sentiment in the community around the reservoirs that the system was, on the whole, injurious, that its disadvantages far offset its advantages, and a strong movement was organized to have it abolished altogether. For the purpose of investigating this matter, a board of engineers was appointed, of which the author was a member. The board found that there was a general belief among the people below the dams that they actually increased the floods, while the people above complained bitterly of the back waters caused, throughout that low country, by filling the reservoirs so full. The water powers immediately below the dams complained that they were not getting even the normal flow of the stream, which was the case. Navigation interests below St. Paul have always been lukewarm in regard to the beneficial effects of the reservoirs, and the board was able to find only one steamboat captain who would make a positive statement that the boating interests derived any particular benefit from them.

the boating interests derived any particular benefit from them. Some curious results developed in this investigation. It was found that, great as the reservoirs are, conditions may arise in times of excessive precipitation that will compel them to discharge a greater quantity of water than would flow from the Lakes in their natural condition. That is, they might actually operate to increase the floods if they should fill to their limit during a period of excessive precipitation. This very contingency nearly happened in the season of 1905, as may be seen on the curve (Fig. 2) illustrating the effect of the reservoirs on the flood situation at Aitkin, Minn., about 130 miles below. On figure 3 is shown a comparison of the natural and regulated flow of the Mississippi below the three upper reservoirs, the lat-ter being operated in the interest of navigation alone. These curves show very clearly that the natural flow of the river was more uniform than is the regulated flow.

In like manner, during the period of lowest water, viz, in mid-winter, the reservoir gates are closed down to about 400 cubic feet per second, and the great water powers, like those at the Falls of St. Anthony, are even worse off than in a state of nature; but this drawback is not so great as might be thought, because the powers are able to utilize most of the storage when it comes during the period of navigation.

Such are some of the complications and drawbacks which are encountered in this reservoir system, and which would surely be met in a system built up under less favorable natural conditions.

Nevertheless, the board found that the system was in itself a very great benefit and that the lack of appreciation of its advantages was for the most part due to ignorance of what they actually were. At the public hearing the opposition fell to pieces by the mere force of a better understanding, and it is safe to say that the system will never be abandoned, but will be extended along the lines of the original project.a

The United States Geological Survey has recently proposed quite an extensive reservoir system for the Sacramento basin, similar in principle, though smaller in extent, to that of the proposed Ohio system. The flood problem of the Sacramento River is the most difficult in the United States in proportion to its magnitude. In fact, it seems as if it will prove impossible to convey the extreme floods of that river to the sea without extensive overflow of the bottom lands along its course. proposition to control the floods to some extent by means of reservoirs was elaborately set forth in the paper by Messrs. Clapp, Murphy, and Martin, previously referred to. The subject had already been considered by the commission of engineers appointed by the State of California in 1904 to devise a plan of flood relief. The commission reported that, while any help from such a source must, of course, be welcome in solving the problem, it was very doubtful if such aid would be of sufficient importance to justify giving it much weight.^b In discussing the paper above referred to, the author stated that, while he had never visited the sites in question, it was his opinion that, as to most of them, it would not be possible to realize over onefourth to one-third of the benefits claimed, and he based his opinion on the published records of the flood of 1907, which was the greatest in the history of the river. George L. Dillman, M. Am. Soc. C. E., in discussing the paper, flatly pronounced the whole scheme impracticable and gave his reasons in detail for this conclusion.c Among them he cited in one case the great value of the lands to be flooded by the reservoirs, which he claimed were altogether more important for agriculture than for any diminution of flooding which the storage might cause in the valley below. In another case he cited the difficulty, which always suggests itself to an engineer in considering the subject, of timing the operations of the reservoirs so as to combine their effects to the best advantage, and particularly in keeping them empty in periods of prolonged precipitation, so that their capacity may be available at the critical moment. Other obstacles were pointed out, and the whole discussion presents another in-stance of the practical difficulties that stand in the way of any comprehensive reservoir scheme for controlling floods.

In 1903 the great flood of the Kaw River brought up the reservoir question again. Ex-Senator Burton, of Kansas, advo-cated the plan very urgently, stating in a speech at Kansas City that he "would have tens of thousands of reservoirs, beginning at the headwaters of the stream and coming right down." board of engineer officers was appointed to investigate the practicability of providing against future disasters such as this flood The reservoir idea had made so deep an impreshad caused. sion upon the public mind that a specific consideration of that feature of the problem was requested. In its report the board found adversely to the scheme on the ground that its great cost, conservatively estimated at $11,000,000, and the annual loss from the withdrawal of the necessary lands from occupancy, conservatively estimated at nearly $600,000, would not be justified on the ground of flood protection alone. Owing to the character of the country, this last consideration was particularly strong. The only real justification of so extensive a system in a country so largely devoted to agriculture would be its use in irrigation and power; and if it became necessary for these purposes, doubtless a portion of it would be built.

The most elaborate study of this subject ever undertaken until very recently was made by the French Government to determine whether reservoirs could be utilized to prevent the recurrence of such great disasters as the floods of 1856 in the valleys of the Rhone and other streams. A full résumé of these studies is given in the author's report, already referred to, on "Reservoir sites in the arid regions." The conclusion was the "Reservoir sites in the arid regions." The conclusion was same that has been reached in every similar investigation. interesting feature of the system then considered was that the reservoirs were to have sluices permanently open, so that it would not be possible to close them entirely. They would operate, it was expected, to hold back a definite percentage of flood discharge—enough to keep the floods below the dams within safe limits. They would thus act automatically, just as forests are supposed to do. This was all right so far as the individual tributaries were concerned, but it was found, when the possible effect upon tributary combination in the main stream was considered, that, by holding back earlier portions of freshets and prolonging their run-off, they might actually swell the combination in the lower courses of the main stream.

Similar studies have frequently been made in all the principal countries of Europe, and in none of them, so far as the author is aware, has such a project on a large scale ever been undertaken or even favorably considered.

Coming now to the Ohio River, the immense importance of that stream as a factor in the floods of the Mississippi makes the regulation of its flow a matter of greater moment than that of any other stream. The project of controlling the run-off of its watershed by means of reservoirs was urged very forcibly more than sixty years ago by Col. Charles Ellet. The subject has often been considered since, both in private and official investigations. The conclusion has invariably been that, great as the benefits of such a system would be if in existence, the cost of bringing it into existence would be out of all proportion to such benefits.

The scheme has recently been revived in a more attractive form, with data not hitherto available, and at a time when a period of heavy floods and much loss therefrom has turned public attention strongly upon the subject. Moreover, it comes supported by a comparatively new element in its favor-the vast expansion of water-power development made possible by the electric transmission of energy. The new presentation of the project is by M. O. Leighton, associate member of the American Society of Civil Engineers, Chief Hydrographer United States Geological Survey, and is understood to bear the approval of both the Interior and Agricultural departments.^a Mr. Leighton does not claim that his presentation is at all final or complete, but is rather a "statement of possibilities" which he believes are sufficiently promising to justify the Government in giving the scheme thorough investigation before further extensive steps are taken on present lines in the matter of flood control and channel improvement in the main rivers of the basin. Although an estimate of cost is submitted and certain conclusions are based thereon, it is stated that the data are too meager to give much confidence therein. Subject to these qualifications, the system, as set forth in Mr. Leighton's paper, embraces reservoirs on nearly all the tributaries of the Ohio; the total cost is estimated at $125,000,000; the income from resulting water power at $20 per horsepower; and a certain computed lowering of flood heights on the Ohio and Mississippi rivers, and a corresponding increase in low stages, are given. The full details of the scheme are set forth in quite elaborate form. So far as the present criticism is concerned, the practicability of finding the necessary sites will be accepted, and only the estimate of costs and revenues and the deductions as to benefits will be called into question.

In their effect upon floods, admitting that all the reservoirs proposed can be built, the result must fall short of the claims put forth. If built at all, they must be built, as will be shown later, primarily for power development. It will never be possible, until science can forecast the weather more perfectly than it is yet able to do, to regulate reservoirs for the maximum benefit of both purposes. This consideration is sometimes made light of, but nevertheless it is one of real importance. industrial purposes the reservoirs should be full before the rainy season ends; for flood protection they should be so far empty that they may be able to hold back any flood-producing storm that is likely to come. While, doubtless, in a majority of years, a middle course could be pursued that would not involve much risk on the flood side of the question nor much loss on the power side, yet there would surely come exceptional seasons-

^a The author has seen the description of the proposed system only as published in Engineering News, May 7, 1908. He has had some correspondence with Mr. Leighton and is under great obligation to him for a complete set of topographic sheets showing the various reservoir sites.

The report of this board contains exhaustive data upon the system and its operation. It may be seen in the annual report of the Chief of Engineers for 1906, p. 1443 (Appendix AA, published separately in the complete form).

the seasons of flood-producing rains or the seasons of great drought—when the reservoirs would be caught too full on the one hand or too empty on the other. Their full calculated capacity would not then be available for either purpose, and it is difficult to conclude that this would not happen frequently. In particular, if the reservoirs are really operated to prevent floods, it must often happen that dry weather will find them only partially filled, and that their full capacity will not be available either for power or navigation. This would not apply, of course, to a reservoir great enough to store all the run-off from its watershed in the greatest leaves and a store of the course. from its watershed in the greatest known flood, unless considerable storage were left over from previous years—as is often done in the upper Mississippi reservoirs. Mr. Leighton's estimates are based upon the mean discharge of the streams, which is, of course, greatly exceeded, possibly doubled, in very wet years. In any case it would seem to be necessary to hold ample capacity in the reservoirs as late as the end of March each year to provide for possible emergencies; but if this is done, there will be many years when the reservoirs will not fill.

An important consideration in the use of the reservoirs for flood control is that of a proper combination of their outflow. To anyone who will try to figure out how this can be accomplished over a watershed of such vast extent, with storms arriving at different times in the various portions, with no way of telling when, where, or with what intensity they will arrive, with the varying distances of the different reservoirs from those points where flood control is particularly important, the problem seems almost impossible—that is, impossible to realize the full effect based upon the aggregate capacity of the system. is understood that Mr. Leighton has endeavored to do this, but it would be interesting to see the application to some of the great floods that might be designated. For example, in the flood of 1907, which reached its maximum at Cincinnati and Pittsburg about the same time, no amount of holding back of the storm water on the upper Ohio at that time would have helped the situation at Cincinnati at all.

Another important consideration in the effect of these reservoirs, as they would have to be operated to prevent floods, is the great change that takes place in a flood wave as it propagates itself downstream. The author is unable to tell from Mr. Leighton's paper to what extent he has considered it. paper itself seems to indicate that the discharge held back by a particular reservoir produces a corresponding volumetric effect (not gauge effect, of course) at all points below, after making a due allowance of time for the transmission of the wave. This would be an erroneous conclusion. For example, a wave that might rise at Pittsburg from 100,000 cubic feet per second to 150,000 a day later and to 200,000 the next day, and then fall at a corresponding rate, would not at any point below produce a maximum increase of 100,000 second-feet; and the farther away the point considered, the less would be the increase. At Cairo, nearly 1,000 miles below, the same wave would take a much longer time in passing, probably not less than a week, and the maximum increase would probably not be more than 25,000 received fort. While is more than 25,000 received fort. second-feet. This is merely a general illustration, for exact data on the subject are not available. The problem is of such complexity that nothing but the results of long experience could establish a rule as to what might be expected in any given case; but it can be stated with certainty that the diminution of discharge at any considerable distance below the reservoirs for a given time would never be as great as the amount held back by the reservoirs in the same length of time, and that, the quicker and the higher the flood, the smaller the relative effect at all points below. It is only when such wave elimination merges into a constant quantity, continuing for a considerable time, that the full effect of a reservoir would be experienced at any point below. This, in fact, is what would actually happen in the contrary case of the low-water season when the reservoir discharge is kept up for a long time.

Still another feature in the high-water effect of such resersolution the first the man water for power at all times. If there should ever result any really general use for all this water, as is predicted, then the consumption for power would make a considerable river in itself. Now this much can not be shut off in any case. Street cars and shops must run and houses must be lighted whether the flood is ruining the lowlands or not. An example of this occurred in 1905 on the upper Mississippi, where the outflow from the upper dams was cut down to a minimum to reduce the flood in the valley at Aitkin, which was then being overflowed by the river. The mill at Grand Rapids, just below the reservoirs, made a strenuous protest and even threatened legal proceedings to compel the release of the full normal flow of the river. Considering all the foregoing features of the operation of the proposed system, even if every reservoir were built with the full estimated capacity, it would be extremely fortunate if 75 per cent of the predicted results, either in flood protection or in aid of navigation, could be realized.

It is in the matter of cost, however, that the weak point of Mr. Leighton's system appears. Judged by any reasonable standard, his estimates are hopelessly wide of the mark. The method itself of getting at a basis of cost is inadmissible. For example, in determining a unit of cost for that class of reservoirs which embrace the greater portion of the total storage, the figures for nine reservoirs are taken, counting as one the whole upper Mississippi system. Only the Mississippi system has been built; two others are under construction and six are merely projected. In accordance with almost universal experience, and especially in view of the great advance in prices of all kinds since these estimates were prepared, it must be expected that these works, if ever built, will cost from 25 to 50 per cent more than the estimates. Three of the projected dams are of the relatively cheap rock-fill construction, which would be inapplicable to most of the Ohio dams from considerations of

The controlling element, however, in the unit estimate, is the Mississippi system, whose capacity is nearly one-third of the whole group considered and whose unit cost is only about oneseventh of the average cost of the others. The use of the Mississippi reservoirs in any way as a basis of estimate for the Ohio system is wholly inadmissible because of the dissimilarity of sites. The Ohio sites, with one exception, are dry sites totally different from the lakes of Minnesota. Even the latter reservoirs could not now be built for three times what they have actually cost the Government. The flowage lands embraced about 80,000 acres, which were nearly all reserved while yet belonging to the Government. A few recent purchases of additional lands found necessary, and the experience now being met in acquiring the flowage rights for a reservoir at Gull Lake, show that, if these lands were to be bought to-day, they would cost from $10 to $25 per acre. The right of way alone would now cost twice as much as the dams.

Compare any one of these structures-Leech Lake, for example-with a representative masonry dam like the Cheesman dam on the South Fork of the South Platte River above Den-The author is familiar with both sites and once submitted a plan and estimate for a structure on the Cheesman site almost exactly like the one built. Lake Cheesman is a more favorable site than most of those on the Ohio system, for, although its capacity is not as great as some, the dam site is exceptionally advantageous, one of the most perfect in naturea very narrow gorge in solid granite, with a natural spillway already provided. In several of the Ohio sites entire towns will have to be removed, important railroads will have to be relocated, a few mineral properties will be destroyed, and, in nearly all, road systems will be seriously disarranged. None of these conditions were encountered to anything like the same extent in the Cheesman site. Undoubtedly its unit cost, which is estimated at about $250 per 1,000,000 cubic feet, was as low as can be possibly realized on the Ohio system as a whole. Compare this with less than $5 for Leech Lake or $8 for the whole Mississippi system.

A recent example of projected storage is that presented by the late George Rafter, member of the American Society of Civil Engineers, for the Genesee River near Portage, N. Y. Owing to the moderate height of dam (apparently less than 150 feet) and the large capacity of reservoir (15,000,000,000 cubic feet), this is believed to compare favorably as to unit cost with the Ohio system. The estimate was $216 per 1,000,000 cubic feet. If it were to be built under the present conditions of the market it would doubtless cost $250. It is understood that later investigations have shown that Mr. Rafter's estimate is It is understood that only one-half large enough.

In 1895 the author made an extensive examination of storage possibilities in Ohio, near the divide between Lake Erie and the Ohio River, for the purpose of providing a water supply for certain projected canals. He prepared estimates for two sites on the headwaters of the Cuyahoga, for one site at the head of the Scioto, and for one at the head of the Great Miami. The estimates were based upon actual surveys and are given in detail in the report upon the subject.^a The type of construction was not expensive. The total capacity was 11,000,000,000 cubic feet and the unit cost $300. To-day it would be at least $350.

Most of the proposed sites for the Ohio reservoirs are not advantageous sites. The topography of the country is unfavor-The sites are not compact basins, like those occupied by lakes or ponds or mountain meadows, but are, for the most part, trunk valleys with numerous tributaries, nearly all of them quite narrow. They may be roughly compared to the form of the hand with the fingers outspread, the dam occupying the position of the wrist. The ends of the fingers are frequently many miles from each other and from the dam. Numerous villages occupy the valleys. The road systems of the local communities traverse them. The disadvantage that will result to public travel by forcing it out of these natural routes over the hills and around the ends of the fingers will be very great. The lands lying between the fingers, in some instances, will be so far cut off from convenient access that their value will be much impaired, and damages will have to be paid on that account. In several instances the necessary changes in railroad alignment in the hilly country will be extremely costly, if not impracticable. A great many cemeteries will have to be removed, which means, not only the cost of removal, but extensive purchase of lands outside. Such drawbacks are, of course, encountered in all similar work, but they are excessive in these sites. They are mentioned solely from their relation to the question of cost. No one can examine the maps of these sites and not be convinced that the cost of right of way and damages alone will considerably exceed Mr. Leighton's estimate of the entire cost of the system.

An element affecting cost is that of safety. Owing to the situation of many of these proposed reservoirs, the results of failure of the dams would be so appalling that no chances can be taken. The structures can be made safe, of course (except against earthquakes), but it will cost money. Nothing short of the highest type of construction—masonry for all the larger dams-can be considered. Mr. Leighton has cited certain dams upon the integrity of which great interests depend as evidence of the confidence of engineers in these structures, but if he will apply their costs, particularly those of important structures in Europe, to his proposed system, the money value of safety will

A feature of this question of safety often overlooked is the depreciation of the market value of property, due to its location below a dam where failure of the dam would mean a disaster of great magnitude. However safe the structure may be, many people would not purchase property below it, and its market would be correspondingly diminished. While such loss can hardly be made a subject for damages, it is a real loss to the

These reservoirs being built for flood protection, the sluices must be very large, so that at times they can be discharged practically as fast as the water runs in. This will be necessary during periods of prolonged precipitation in order to keep the reservoirs from filling too full before the danger is past. This detail of construction will add largely to the cost.

Taking everything into consideration on the most liberal basis, it is evident that this system can not be built for less than $250 per 1,000,000 cubic feet. The probable increase in the value of property to be condemned before the system could be built and the present scale of prices of labor and material make this figure a minimum. This would swell the cost of the whole system to over four times Mr. Leighton's estimate, or over half a billion dollars.b

This is not all, however. It appears that the complete development of the reservoir system as proposed will take from industrial use probably 1,500,000 acres of land, including the lands actually overflowed, the margins subject to damages, and sites for the dams, and various structures appurtenant thereto. These lands will be in large part, by the very fact that they lie in valleys suitable for storage grounds, the best lands in the localities. Sooner or later they are bound to come into agricultural use, and with proper cultivation their annual net revenue value will be at least $5 per acre. If utilized for forest culture, they ought to yield 500 feet b. m. of lumber and 1 cord of wood annually per acre. The value of the land for this purpose ought to be as great as the figures just given. It thus o'The recent failure of the Hauser Lake dam on the Missouri River, near Helena, Mont., is a good illustration of how the unexpected may happen. Here was a dam built of steel and concrete, two materials whose properties are thoroughly understood. The case was one which "ordinary engineering" might be expected to handle successfully. The public had reason to feel confidence in the structure. Yet "it fell, and great was the fall thereof," not only in the total wreckage of the dam, but in the losses caused along the valley below.

The accident affords also another illustration of the omnivorous claims put forward in these days in the supposed interests of forestry. The disaster was promptly cited as an example of the havoc wrought by floods in a country without forests. The normal flood discharge of the Missouri at this point is 20,000 cubic feet per second; for 1907, it was 26,000 cubic feet; the maximum on record is about 50,000 cubic feet. At the time of the accident the discharge was about 7,000 cubic feet per second.

Recent examinations of certain sites, embracing nearly 70 per cent of the proposed Monongahela storage, indicate that the whole Ohio system will cost at least a billion dollars, and possibly a billion and a half.

appears that the occupancy of these lands for reservoir purposes will take from the community an annual product of at least $7,500,000 worth, and probably more.

The reservoirs will store about 2,150,000,000,000 cubic feet of water. Assume that this can be all utilized for water power, with the average head of 200 feet, giving theoretically about 1,600,000 horsepower per year, or 1,280,000 horsepower at 80 per cent efficiency. At $5 per horsepower (the basis for this figure will presently be considered), the revenue from water power will be $6,400,000, which falls short of the loss resulting from withholding the sites from productive use.a

Viewed in the light of the foregoing exposition, the weakness of the reservoir scheme as a measure of flood control or for improving navigation is at once apparent. The question is, Will the ends justify the means? If the ends sought could be attained in no other way, possibly they might; but they can be, and for a small fraction of the reservoir cost. Consider the estimate already given, of $500,000,000. Take $40,000,000 and reenforce the entire levee system of the Mississippi. That will make it impregnable—as safe as any of the proposed reservoir dams. Take $60,000,000 and revet the banks of the Mississippi wherever necessary from Cairo to the Gulf.⁵ The reservoir project does not touch this important matter at all. Devote whatever sum is necessary to the protection of the bottom lands of the Ohio basin. Give Cincinnati and Pittsburg each $10,000,-000 to assist in local changes necessary for complete flood protection. Devote a sum to navigation such as our engineers have never dared dream of, and the Government will still save more than Mr. Leighton's estimate of the whole cost of the reservoir system. The more closely this reservoir proposition is scrutinized as a scheme for flood prevention the more impracticable it appears. It is only a trade off at best. It is giving up to perpetual overflow valuable lands to save others from occasional and even rare overflow for short periods. Now, if, at less cost, these lowlands can be better protected by other means, thus leaving both the valley lands and reservoir sites open to productive use, how much better it will be.

If the author were to venture a criticism on Mr. Leighton's attitude in this matter, it would be that he has not fully appreciated his responsibility in bringing forward again this old proposition without fuller consideration of its organic defects. This is well illustrated in the opening paragraph of his paper.

in which he says:

This report will be confined to a statement of possibilities. There will be no attempt to prescribe methods for treatment of each local modifying condition that will be encountered in the prosecution of the plan here proposed. Such features are merely collateral, and their proper disposition is a matter of ordinary engineering."

This is a complete reversal of his obligation in the matter. The "possibilities" of reservoir control have long been recognized. The logic of the plan is well understood. It has always appealed to the popular mind. In particular, reservoir control of the Ohio floods has been advocated for more than sixty years, and its possibilities have often been investigated. The plan has been uniformly rejected on one ground, viz, that as a scheme for flood control and navigation improvement its benefits would not justify its cost. It is, therefore, incumbent upon whoever revives the scheme to come well fortified upon this particular feature. He must give some study to the treatment of "local modifying conditions." It makes a difference whether he can go to a great natural lake, like Winnibigoshish, and store 40,000,-000,000 cubic feet of water for a mere trifle, or whether he must evict whole villages, disturb railroads and highways, absorb valuable lands, and possibly subject communities to serious risk. These are the questions upon which the success or failure of the scheme depends. Yet Mr. Leighton brushes them aside, as it were, with a wave of the hand, as "merely collateral" features, matters of "ordinary engineering" only. Here is the weak point of his project. Weighed in the balance of practical accomplishment, either for flood control or navigation, it will be found utterly wanting, and the development of the system, as has always been held, will have to be based primarily and mainly on its value for industrial use. For the same reasons that the development of a great reservoir system in the far West is justified by its industrial value—its use for irrigation—so a reservoir system for the Ohio or any other rivers, except in a few unusual cases, must depend primarily upon its industrial value—the development of power.

The sanitary feature has not been considered, although it is one of some importance. The laying bare of large areas of reservoir bottoms in the heated portion of the year is objectionable, but it is not a matter affecting the element of cost. Neither is much stress here laid upon the danger to the reservoirs from silting up. This is not a region of heavy silt movement. In most of the reservoirs the process will be very slow, and we may safely leave to distant generations the task of dealing with this problem whenever it reaches an acute stage.

Begort Mississippi River Commission, 1896, p. 3457.

In pursuing his criticism further, the author would not be understood to be "knocking," as current slang goes, the feature of the reservoir system just mentioned, because, in his judgment, there is no one thing in the present movement for the conservation of our natural resources that is more important than storing the flood waters of our streams for power development. It stands in the same category with the preservation and extension of our forests. It stands on even a surer basis, for man, either willfully or through neglect, can destroy the forests, but he can never diminish in the smallest degree the power of running water. It is a great solar engine, perennial and perpetual in its action. It requires no aid from man in its production. All he has to do is to utilize it. Providentially electricity has unfolded its power to transmit this energy over great distances, and has thus made practicable a development which would otherwise have been impracticable. In time water power will replace coal and oil, and will become the one great source of power, unless discoveries are made which are not now The author thoroughly believes in developing this power through public agencies and preserving it from private ownership and control. His present criticism is directed not at all at the principle involved, but at the extravagant expectations now being fostered as to the possible revenue which the Government may derive from such development.

The quantity of power estimated in the publications of the Geological Survey and the Agricultural Department are based upon an assumption that most engineers will question, viz, that 90 per cent of the fall of our rivers can be utilized in effective head upon water wheels. This is too great a figure. The most thoroughly developed river in the United States, namely, the Merrimac, in New Hampshire and Massachusetts, develops only 70 per cent of the total head. Taking all the streams into consideration, it seems hardly possible that more than 50 per cent of the fall can be utilized. When the fall of a river is uniform, even if quite steep, the cost of long canals or high dams necessary to concentrate it at one point often prohibits development altogether. From altitudes of 3,000 feet the Missouri and Yellowstone, for example, descend to the sea with a total energy of possibly 5,000,000 horsepower; yet comparatively little of this can be developed advantageously. It is only in those places where nature has helped out by concentrating the fall at cataracts or rapids that water-power development is commercially profitable. At low dams, such as are ordinarily built at lock sites, the head is often nearly all obliterated during high water. How far storage may affect these drawbacks can not be said, but it should, of course, help a great deal. The official estimates of flow for nonregulated streams are based on two weeks' average lowest flow. This may probably be extended materially with reservoir aid or supplementary steam power. Possibly the total estimated horsepower may ultimately be realized.a

When it comes to the royalty which the Government may re-ceive for these water powers, if developed by private interests, the price of $20 per horsepower, adopted by the Geological Survery and the Agricultural Department, is wholly out of the question under present conditions. Possibly the author does not understand what the figure is intended to embrace. From Mr. Leighton's articles, the inference has been drawn that wherever the work of the Government renders power available which was not available before, either by building dams, as at lock sites, and thus creating a head, or by storing water which might supply powers below with more than they would have without, the value of the power thus rendered available should return to the Government $20 per horsepower per annum—an "exceedingly low price," as Mr. Leighton puts it.^b

It is not understood that the Government is to build the power plants, but that this is to be done by the interests availing themselves of the privilege. Estimates of undeveloped water powers on many streams of the Atlantic slope, by the Geological Survey, leave one to infer that these powers are considered worth at least $20 per horsepower to the Government, even without dams or reservoir aid. While the statements are not ^a There has recently been invented a device called a "fall increaser," an adaptation of the Venturi meter, by Clemens Herschel, Member American Society Civil Engineers, which promises to utilize the extra flow of streams in time of flood water and low heads to increase and maintain the head upon the wheels. If this invention proves a success, as seems probable, it will be an immense gain to all water powers of low head subject to large fluctuation, as would doubtless be the case in very many of those under consideration.

^b On the Youghlogheny alone, where it is proposed to install a slackwater system comprising three locks and dams, at an expense of $600,000, proper development of storage will insure the production of a minimum of 4,100 horsepower, the value of which, reckond on the exceedingly low price of $20 per horsepower year, would produce a total income of $82,000.

clear as to what is actually meant, the various references to resources to be derived by the Government from these powers lead to the above conclusion. It would be of advantage in considering questions involving these published estimates if the basis for this $20 price or royalty could be made more specific.

Under present conditions, or such as can be reasonably foreseen, no such royalty is possible except in extraordinarily favorable circumstances. Efforts which have been made to derive a satisfactory revenue from existing powers do not justify any such prospect. The many and various practical difficulties in exploiting these powers are rarely appreciated by those who have not encountered them in actual experience. The cost of have not encountered them in actual experience. The cost of water-power development is restricted to narrow limits, if it is to compete with coal. An engineer of high standing whose life work has been connected with water-power development says:

"I am advised that, with good coal at $2 per ton in this territory, the cost of fuel per horsepower per annum (three hundred days of twenty-four hours each) is less than $8 for producer gas engines and for steam power about $12.50 in large size equipments. In many localities coal will cost even less than $2 per ton, allowing thus a still wider margin. If we now consider the usual and unavoidable handicaps and incumbrances to all water-power installations, such as floods, low water, ice flow, back water, etc., we have conditions which will make serious study for any power consumer to determine if the balance is not considerably against water power in that particular territory, at this time, from a purely commercial standpoint. At any rate it must be obvious that no such rate as $20 per annum per horsepower can be paid to the Government by any power user for the right to draw the water only, and, besides this, stand the expense of installing and operating the water plant." the water plant.'

Another hydraulic engineer of national reputation says: "I think that as a general proposition the suggestion that all water powers to which the Government consents should pay royalties, and especially where the parties own their riparian rights, would tend to defeat the development of most water powers and would certainly very much curtail the number of water-power developments. I am impressed with these conclusions because of the present difficulties in financing good water-power propositions."

In Power, May 19, 1908, is an article by Henry Docker Jackson, in which a critical comparison is made between steam and water power. In this article occur the following tabulated estimates of cost of installation and of annual operation, based upon a (theoretical) installation of 1,000 horsepower. The costs are averages of a number of different plants:

Plant cost.

Plant.	Steam.	Water.
Building and works	$10,000 48,000	$77,000
Turbines and generators Transportation lines, etc., 20 miles	15,000	17,000 40,000

Operation	3,400	3,800
Oil, waste, etc	1,500	2,680
Depreciation	3,650	3,500
Taxes	1,460	2,680

75 per cent load factor	$24.82 39.92 54.60	$20.90 32.00 45.00

From the last part of these tables it is very evident that a royalty of $20 per horsepower would turn the scale wholly in favor of steam under all conditions of load. In fact, it is reasonably certain that $5 per horsepower per annum would be an outside figure, and even this would often be prohibitory. The situation will not necessarily be improved by the growing demand for power, but rather by the diminishing supply and increased cost of fuel. So long as coal can be had for anything like present rates, no very great charge can be realized from water power wherever fuel is readily available. Under present conditions $120 per horsepower may be considered as an average limit for first cost of a water-power plant, if it is to compete with steam. A charge of $20 per horsepower per annum would be equivalent to doubling this first cost.⁴

A variable element in the cost of water-power development

A variable element in the cost of water-power development is the distance from plant to market, or the length of the transmission line. When this is very great, as in numerous plants in the mountain districts of the West, it makes a large addition to cost of installation, and must correspondingly reduce the royalty that could be paid for the power itself.

An interesting example of what the Forestry Service has been able to do in this line with unimproved water powers is that of a recent permit for the development of a large power in the Cascade Mountains within the forest reserve. The beneficiary of the privilege is required to pay annually for "conservation," 10 cents per 1,000 kilowatt-hours—equivalent to 65 cents per horsepower per year continuous running. The right is retained by the Government to increase this charge 25 per cent every five years for a period of forty years, after which the whole arrangement may be readjusted. The maximum charge at the end of the forty years will therefore not exceed $4 per horsepower.

The only way in which a rental of $20 per horsepower can be obtained with any degree of certainty, and that in only a small proportion of the localities for many years to come, is for the Government to build the plants. It is admitted that this suggestion will grate harshly on many ears because of its newness and its departure from the established ideas. But a little consideration will show it to be not only the best way for both private and public interests, but really the only practicable way. This may be illustrated by a concrete example:

The Government has just completed a survey and adopted a project for the construction of what is known as the "Lake Washington Canal," in the city of Seattle. It is a canal to connect Lakes Union and Washington with Puget Sound. The discharge from the tributary watershed which will flow through the canal averages about 1,500 cubic feet per second. The mean fall at the lock site is about 15 feet. The theoretical energy is about 2,500 horsepower, but owing to the tidal fluctuation and variations of flow with the seasons (which can not be wholly eliminated on account of the necessity of limiting fluctuations of level in the lakes to about 3 feet) and also to the requirements for canal power, lockage, and leakage, it was thought that about only 1,000 horsepower could be depended upon with certainty for outside use. As this power is located in the heart of a great city, it seemed as if it ought to be turned to good account in helping bear the cost of maintaining the canal. Efforts to obtain tentative propositions for developing this power were, however, wholly fruitless. The plan was then considered of having the Government build the plant and lease it to consumers of power. On this basis a tentative offer was obtained from a responsible consumer to take the plant, operate it, keep up all repairs, and pay the Government $18 per horsepower year. Probably by the time the canal is completed a figure of $25 can be obtained, and as more than 1,000 horsepower will probably be developed it is likely that the Government will receive upward of $30,000 per year for this power—enough to pay the entire cost of operating the canal. The extra cost to the project of adopting the power-plant feature is $220,000, so that the revenue will be nearly 14 per cent upon the expenditure.

In recommending this plan to the department it was pointed out that the true advantage of the Government, even apart from the revenue expected, favored its adoption. It simplified the whole relation between the Government and the consumer. If private interests were to build the plant they would acquire vested rights which would always stand in the way of future control and lead to complications if it should become necessary to terminate the arrangement. With the plant in the possession of the Government and the users standing simply in the relation of lessees for a limited period, without great initial expense on their part, and with freedom on the part of the Government to control the arrangement without the complication of private ownership, the whole plan would stand on a simple, a Mr. Leighton cites the Falls of the Ohio as an example of an opportunity to develop 110,000 horsepower by aid of his proposed reservoir regulation. This he states, at $20 per horsepower, is 3 per cent interest on $73,000,000. To anyone familiar with the physical conditions involved in the development of this power it will appear extremely doubtful if any company could guarantee to deliver continuously this amount of power, even with the full aid of reservoir regulation, and pay any royalty whatever.

practical, business basis. This view prevailed with the department and is now before Congress for adoption, being possibly a departure in this line.

The principle involved in this case should be given general application. In addition to avoiding complications with private ownership, there are other important considerations. When a power is developed or a reservoir built, it should be so planned from the start as to bring out its full possibilities. A private company can rarely do this. Generally its scheme does not require it nor its resources permit; but a site once occupied by an inferior work may be perpetually barred from complete development. Moreover, in any such work the Government can derive a greater benefit than any private individual or association. A private company must build for the immediate future; it can not wait long for dividends and it can generally realize only on such application of the power as is possible in the immediate vicinity. The Government, on the other hand, derives all the benefits which come from the stored water anywhere on its course from the reservoir to sea. These benefits arise from all the powers through which the water flows, from the improvement of navigation and the prevention of floods, and from every other use to which the water can be put. Furthermore, the Government is building for all time, while the individual builds only for the present and near future. The case is similar to that of landlord and tenant. A tenant can not afford to make improvements on the farm because it is not his and he may remain on it only a short time. The most he can do is to get out of the farm what he can in its actual condition. The owner, on the other hand, can put in improvements which yield him no immediate return because he holds the property long enough to realize upon them. So it is with the Government; it can wait for realization upon its with the Government; it can wait for realization upon its improvements much longer than a private company. In forestry, for example, no individual can afford to wait from three to ten generations for a crop. Only the Government or a great railroad corporation can do this. Likewise, in building a great railroad corporation can do this. great reservoirs no private company can build for the distant future. It is only the landlord that can make such far-reaching improvements upon his estate.

Wherever, therefore, there arises any real demand for power development at the site of any government work, as a lock and dam, the judicious course would seem to be for the Government to prepare a comprehensive plan for development capable of being carried out progressively as the market for power may justify. Let it then build the plant as fast as needed and lease it to private agencies under suitable restrictions. Likewise, when the building of a reservoir promises to be of obvious utility, and the conditions are such as to make it properly a subject of government adoption, let the Government build it, utilizing the water in its own plants below and collecting a revenue from private plants that may use it. Whenever at the time of construction there is a direct return in sight of 2 or 3 per cent, it should be considered justifiable from a government point of view. The certain enhancement in the future value of such utilities and the incidental advantages in flood protection and navigation make this a conservative proposition.

That difficulties will be encountered in deriving the full return from its work to which the Government would be entitled can not be denied. This would be the case particularly wherever it is a question of compelling existing power plants to pay for the extra water they might receive through government storage. This question came up before the Mississippi reservoir board in regard to the powers at St. Anthonys Falls which derive such benefit from the reservoirs. The board remarked as follows on the subject:

"It may be urged that if the incidental benefits of the reservoirs to the water-power interests are so great, these interests should be required to contribute something to the maintenance of the system. There would doubtless be a willingness to do this if a satisfactory method could be found. But there is no practicable method of enforcing any charge upon the use of this water. Where water is taken in a separate channel from above a dam or lock and conducted to a mill, it is a simple thing to measure it and to cut it off if it is not paid for. But when it must be let into a natural stream, where it mingles with the run-off from below, it is impossible to determine what proportion of stored water the mill may be using, or to enforce its nonuse if not paid for. But, if such an arrangement is not practicable, that fact does not constitute an argument against the reservoir system. So long as the reservoirs are performing the service for which they were created, every additional benefit derived from them is only an additional argument in their favor."

These disadvantages will adjust themselves in time. Such, in the opinion of the author, must be the basis of any great reservoir system in our country—industrial use. Even in the uniquely favorable conditions at the headwaters of the Mississippi, no one can doubt that the real purpose being served is that of mill power, whatever the theory upon which the reservoirs were built. The great system of the Far West is being built for irrigation, power, and domestic supply. So on the Ohio and other eastern streams, the system must rest upon an industrial basis and expand only as industrial demands justify. The innovation involved in building reservoirs with public funds for these uses is admitted; but it is no greater than it was ten years ago to build them for irrigation. When the author was investigating that subject in 1896-97, he found a widespread opposition throughout the arid regions against government control of irrigation works in any way, and in his report he went no further than to advise the building of reservoirs for giving the people more water, leaving its distribution exactly as it was Yet in the short space of ten years public sentiment has completely changed, and to-day no one questions the wisdom of the broader plan upon which these works are being carried out. So it will surely be in regard to reservoirs in all other parts of The principle is the same. It may be accepted the country. that only the General Government can do this work in the comprehensive way in which it ought to be done, because only the Government can reap all the benefits; only the Government can wait the long periods necessary for full returns; and only the Government has the necessary resources to make expenditures on the required scale. These points will not be enlarged upon, and the many and cogent reasons why this is so will not be given. The trend of public thought is all in that direction. The old idea that the Government can not execute great works or small as cheaply, efficiently, and expeditiously as private agencies is fast being dispelled, and the vast benefits which the people derive from public control of important enterprises are coming into fuller recognition all the time.

The foregoing remarks should not be construed as in any way rejecting the idea of local help by States, counties, cities, or even private agencies. It often happens that public works have a special local importance in addition to their public value. It is just and proper in such cases that local aid be given. This principle is now fully incorporated in river and harbor legislation. For example, the Lake Washington Canal, which will be of very great local importance to the city of Seattle, is a joint enterprise between the Government and the city, the latter paying fully one-third of the cost. The cooperation between the United States Geological Survey and the several States in preparing a contour map of the country is an example on a large scale. The principle ought to find an extensive application in the establishment of national forests throughout the country.

CONCLUSION.

This paper will be closed with some reference to the relation of navigation to other uses of our streams, and to certain legal obstacles that stand in the way of comprehensive measures. That the improvement of our inland waterways should be organized upon a more rational system than it has ever been; that the reciprocal relation between navigation, water power, etc., should be given practical recognition; above all, that the prosecution of these works should be placed upon the same sure basis as is the construction of the Panama Canal, with positive assurance that, when once commenced, funds will be forthcoming for their prompt completion, would seem to admit of no doubt. How far navigation should be correlated, in improvement work, with other uses of the streams, is an open question. Water power and navigation are in many cases so closely related that they will have to be considered together. In regard to soil wash, no such intimate relation exists. To whatever extent soil erosion now exceeds that of former times, it relates almost exclusively to cultivation and has no appreciable influence upon the channels. Its control is of far greater importance to agriculture than it is to navigation. This is also true of irrigation, which, so far as it affects navigation at all, affects it injuriously. If the development of irrigation is ever carried to the length that we hope it may be, it will cause a heavy drain upon the low-water flow of the Missouri, Sacramento, San Joaquin, and the Columbia rivers (not important as to this stream), the only navigable waterways of consequence that are affected by it. Except for this fact of drawing water from the streams, irrigation has no relation to navigation.

Forestry, irrigation, and prevention of soil wash are all re-lated to the conservation of the vegetable resources of the coun-They are kindred purposes and should naturally fall under the same administrative control. Navigation is a function of transportation, which is a very different subject. Water power is becoming more and more closely related to it, and these two subjects naturally go together. It must not be expected that the character of works for river regulation can be materially changed by means of reservoirs, forests, or soil-wash prevention.

Levees and bank protection, locks and dams, dikes, and dredging will continue to be standard methods of river improvement in the future as in the past. The accumulated experience of centuries in all civilized countries can not be set aside in a moment. In particular, flood protection is not likely ever to find any complete substitute for levees. They have been used extensively the world over throughout recorded history. People who think only of the Mississippi and the Po, when levees are mentioned, little understand to what an extent "diking" is resorted to wherever rich bottom lands have to be guarded against floods or tides. Some of the finest agricultural lands in the world are behind levees, where almost perfect security is felt. No class of river control is in more extensive use, none is better understood, and from none has the world, throughout its history, derived greater security and benefit.

Municipalities, like Pittsburg, Cincinnati, and Kansas City, must look in the main to their own efforts for protection against floods. In particular they must reject absolutely the delusive promises of forestry. These cities are trespassers upon grounds dedicated by nature to a condition of overflow. They have occupied these grounds and placed themselves in the way of the floods deliberately and with their eyes open. They have gone further than this, and in many instances have encroached upon the channels and have thus made the floods worse than they used to be. It is not for them now to look for outside deliverance, but they themselves should grapple courageously with the problem. In most cases these problems admit, if not of complete solution, at least of a very large measure of relief. The maxim that "Providence helps them who help themselves" may also apply to the Government. Cooperation in connection with its regular work, either in channel improvement or in the building of reservoirs, would doubtless be given. The disposi-tion which must be met and overcome is to let things go as they are, trusting blindly to chance to deal more kindly in the future. This supineness of spirit and the enervating reliance upon in-definite future relief through the agency of the Government must be replaced by self-reliance, and these great industrial centers must rise in their own might and free themselves from their bondage to these ever-recurring catastrophes. In Boston, Chicago, Galveston, San Francisco, and even that lusty young giant of the Northwest, Seattle, are examples enough of what an aroused civic spirit can do in the direction of self-aid.

The part that reservoirs will play in the larger problems of channel improvement and flood control on the great rivers will be in the nature of an insurance. Every cubic foot of water taken from the crest of a flood and released when the rivers are lowest is pro tanto a benefit. If the great floods of the Mississippi can be cut down by so much as a foot through reservoir storage, it will be an immense gain; and the same will be true if the low-water stages can be increased by 2 or 3 feet. Whether the much greater results expected by Mr. Leighton can ever be realized is a question which the future alone can determine

A word, finally, concerning the legal obstacles in the way of a broad government policy looking to the development of national forests, and the storage of water on an extensive scale. The expansion of government work into fields of obvious utility is often blocked by the structure of our Government through the bar of constitutional prohibition or at least lack of power. It is said that the purchase of lands for the rearing of forests for timber alone is unconstitutional, and that the same is true of the storage of water for any other purpose than navigation; and yet, forests for timber and reservoirs for power must always remain the real justification for public expenditure along these lines. To the average understanding the distinction between things constitutional and things unconstitutional is often hard to discern. The Government is now expending millions in storing water and conducting it upon land whereby the products of the soil may be obtained. It is applying this water to both public and private land, or to lands that were in private ownership when the projects began. Is there any real difference between providing the power to raise sugar beets, for instance, and that for manufacturing them into form for human consump-a The author is not closely familiar with the situation at Pittsburg and Cincinnati, but he is familiar with that at the two Kansas Citys, where, in 1903, the greatest loss occurred that any American city ever sustained at the hands of a river flood. He speaks from the results of careful study on the ground when he states with the utmost positiveness that, for approximately $10,000,000, with such aid as might reasonably be expected from the Government on the Missouri River front, the flood problem of the Kaw and Missouri in that hive of industrial enterprise known as the "West Bottoms" can be solved absolutely; the too small area of these bottoms can be increased by upward of 200 acres; two-thirds of the bridges in the same area can be eliminated; that prodigious barrier to free movement—the Kaw River—can be practically removed or placed where it will not be in the way; and the general situation can be so improved that the resulting benefits, wholly apart from that of flood protection, would be well worth the cost.

tion and transporting them to the consumer? Are not the last-mentioned purposes quite as necessary as the first?^a And again, is there any distinction in principle between improving a river so that boats can navigate it and improving it so that it may provide power that will transport produce by land as well as by water?

Again, the Government has accepted gifts of land like the Yosemite Valley and the Muir redwood grove, to be given over to the enjoyment of the people and involving perpetual expenditures for mainfenance in the future. It has traded lands of its own for lands with which it has parted ownership. It reserves vast areas to-day which might be private lands to-morrow. What is the distinction of principle between doing all these things and buying outright lands that are needed for the same or similar purposes? They are distinctions without real differences. They concern the letter and not the spirit, and they can not stand whenever the interests of the public really demand Still, it is probably a fact that federal authority to buy lands for forest culture alone and to create reservoirs for industrial use exclusively would be considered by the courts as transcending the power of Congress under the Constitution, and it is this fact that forces those who believe in having the Government do these things to strain the truth by attempting to prove that they are necessary for navigation and for the prevention of floods. It enforces a policy of indirection instead of permitting these things to be done squarely for their real purpose and as a matter of right. In his address before the Judiciary Committee, in its hearing on the Appalachian bill, Mr. Pinchot stated that that proposition must stand or fall upon the theory that the forests regulate stream flow, and are therefore useful to navigation. Did he not refer to the particular point here under consideration, that on any other theory the measure would be unconstitutional? Surely he did not mean that the cause of forestry itself must stand or fall upon any such issue.

Does not this situation suggest the necessity for an important initial step which shall sweep away these artificial barriers and let these great questions stand or fall on their intrinsic merit? If the upbuilding of new forests, if the storing of our flood waters, are necessary measures for the welfare of the Nation, the way should be cleared for their accomplishment. There may be differences of opinion about amending the Constitution in the interest of uniform divorce laws, popular election of Senators, and the like; but if we may judge from the universal agreement upon the particular subjects here considered, every State in the Union would ratify an amendment giving to Congress the power to legislate for the conservation and development of the natural resources of the country

The author should possibly state, in justice to the official body of engineers to which he belongs, that the arguments presented in the foregoing paper are his individual opinions only. He is not acquainted with the views of any other officer upon the subjects treated, except as he has seen them expressed in official reports or in the public press.

Mr. Chairman, in these days of rampant paternalism, when pretended apostles of individualism and states rights not only accept but applaud and pursue every federal encroachment on the domain of state authority and every project of state socialism which is sugar coated with an appropriation, when a period of somewhat thoughtless indifference of the limitations of natural resources has been followed by a carefully nurtured and somewhat hysterical sentiment for so-called "conservation," anyone who presumes to discuss the Forestry Service otherwise than in terms of the most extravagant laudation is certain to be misunderstood, misinterpreted, and roundly abused. Furthermore, I realize that to one in legislative life the pathway of concord and harmony with powerful governmental agencies is the way of peace and prosperity, and it is with a full realization of these facts that I shall say what I feel it is my duty to say with regard to the Forestry

Mr. MONDELL. He is consistent always.

I feel somewhat responsible for this service, because I was the author of the bill that transferred the forest reserves from the Interior to the Agricultural Department, and I labored earnestly for that consummation with confidence-at least, with hope and faith-in the assurances of certain distinguished gentlemen that the resulting consolidation of government agencies having to do with the advancement and promotion of forestry would be in the interest of economy and good service and would remove certain friction over forestry matters existing between the Agricultural and Interior departments, a friction partly inevitable to a divided jurisdiction, but which some people were unkind enough to suggest was due in a larger measure to the ambition of the one department to force the other from the jurisdiction it coveted; however that may be, it was in the hope of rescuing the western people from beneath the upper and nether millstones of rival jurisdictions and in faith of promises of economy and fair and reasonable administration that the transfer was made.

I fully realize that there are those here and elsewhere who, in view of the disappointment of honest and reasonable hopes and expectations, could, if they were disposed to, register a very emphatic "I told you so," in view of the fact that an expenditure of $350,000 per annum for the administration of 85,000,000 acres of forest reserve by the Interior Department has increased to an expenditure of $3,896,200 the present fiscal year for the administration of 151,000,000 acres and a proposed expenditure of $4,646,000 for the administration of 168,000,000 ture of $600,000 this year and a proposed expenditure of an equal amount next year for so-called "permanent improvements." acres during the next fiscal year, not to mention the expendi-

The true bureaucrat measures his own importance and lavs his claim to fame on the amount of money the expenditure of which he controls, and particularly by the amount in lump-sum appropriations, and on the extent of territory and the importance of the interests over which he exercises autocratic control. Judged by these standards, the Forestry Bureau ranks high-in fact, in extent of autocratic power it has no rival under our flag. I doubt if it has in any civil administrative bureau anywhere outside of Russia.

This is true so far as the character of the control is concerned not so much by reason of statute as of rules and regulations, as to the legality of the most oppressive of which, by the exercise of extraordinary-if it were not unparliamentary I should be tempted to say devilish—ingenuity, it has through its advantages as a government agency succeeded in avoiding direct issue in the cases which have been brought before the

Ours has come to be the most expensive Government under the sun, and is fast becoming bureaucratic enough to suit the most exacting believer in autocratic government. I do not expect those who hail from east of the Missouri to accept this except as a figure of speech, for one must live beyond the Big Muddy to fully realize how far we have progressed in the di-rection of an autocracy that is far from being benevolent, and one must wander on and about a western forest reserve to realize the full import of the situation, for whatever may be said with regard to other lines of federal activity, one can truthfully give the palm to the Forestry Service for extravagance of expenditure and real mediæval bureaucracy.

I have not the time in the course of a brief speech to go into any considerable detail as to the character of the unnecessary and extravagant expenditures of this bureau. A mere statement of the sum of its expenditure is sufficient, particularly when one realizes that with the modest expenditure of $350,000 the Interior Department not only protected the forests from fire but made a reasonably satisfactory start in the matter of improv-

decrease its statutory roll and to increase its prestige and influence without regard to expense.

The change in policy gave an excuse for the reduction of the statutory roll in Washington, but actually resulted in an increase in the cost of the purely office force of the Forestry Bureau in Washington and at the division headquarters in the sum of $755,300, besides an estimated increase of a large amount for rent, according to the figures given by the bureau in its estimates for the present and for the coming fiscal year.

The estimates for the clerical forces of the six district headquarters for the next fiscal year amounts to $835,360. This enormous expenditure might be partly justified if it led to anything like a corresponding decrease in expenditures elsewhere; but there is no such corresponding decrease, for the estimate for the Washington office for the next year is only $81,060 less than the estimate for the same office for the present fiscal year, leaving a net increase in proposed expenditures for the office force of $755,300, as I have stated. No wonder the bureau clamored for an increase of $1,500,000 in its appropriation.

The committee has given the bureau an increase of $750,000 in this bill over the appropriation for last year, and this is claimed to have been made necessary by the addition of 17,000,-000 acres to the area of the forests. In view of the fact that, according to the bureau's own statements, but little supervision is given to additional territory the first year, it would hardly seem necessary to greatly increase the appropriation for this reason; but assuming that it is to cost as much to administer this 17,000,000 acres as it is claimed to have cost to administer the balance of the reserves, or about 1 cent an acre, $170,000, rather than $750,000, would be the amount to add. But assuming that this additional territory is to cost as much per acre for all purposes as the entire acreage of the reserves did last year, the increased appropriation should not have been $750,000, but less than $450,000.

The fact is that this increased appropriation is intended to cover the increased cost not for work upon, nor for protection of, the forests, but for the maintenance of elaborate and expensive division headquarters, with very high-salaried superintendents and assistant superintendents and aids and assistants of all kinds and character paid for out of the lump-sum appropria-Under it, any kind and any number of salaries can be

However, inasmuch as it is hoped that the establishment of these headquarters will have some little influence in stemming the tide of popular opposition to certain policies of the bureau, at least in the immediate localities in which they are situated and as Uncle Sam is rich, and in any event the West will eventually have to pay the fiddler, they are, no doubt, considered worth all they cost.

I was much interested in reading the statement of the Chief Forester before the Agricultural Committee in regard to the provision which was made in the appropriation bill last year on my motion intended to limit and restrict the Forestry Service in its policy of self-laudation, on the one hand, and of criticism and condemnation of those who did not find favor in the eyes of the bureau, on the other, through its well-regulated publicity bureau, and I was not greatly surprised to find that after considering the matter and consulting with the Attorney-General they concluded to and did continue to do just what they had been doing before.

My notion is, however, that they have not done all of the things that were done before that provision was adopted. However, evidently the bureau expects to have a good deal of laudatory advertising work to do with its typewriters the coming year, for I notice that the forests are to be protected and conserved, and the stream flow of the country regulated, through the use of $34,620 worth of typewriters, which they estimate as necessary for their needs, though in order to keep these busy it is expected to use only $16,000 worth of paper, though $22,000 worth of envelopes are to be used to inclose the same, and $7,000 worth of card indexes are supposed to be required to keep track of the correspondence.

It has long been a standing joke in the West that many of the gentlemen imported by the Forest Service, at high salaries, from eastern forestry schools, require a guide whenever they go into the woods. Evidently the service is trying to meet this unfortunate condition of affairs, for it expects to use $10,000 worth of compasses the coming fiscal year. When they have purchased the $6,000 worth of field glasses, which they anticipate the need of in their estimates, I am very much in hopes they will be able to see some of the homeseekers on and about who now seem invisible to the gentlemen of the service.

From the standpoint of the West, and I believe from the standpoint of good government everywhere, there are serious objections to unnecessary and extravagant expenditures beside that of the drain on the Treasury at a time when we are facing a deficit. First, extravagance in one branch of the Government breeds extravagance on all others that come in contact with it, and the high salaries which are certain to be paid, and the extravagant expenditures which seem to be inevitable, under lump-sum appropriations, breed discontent and dissatisfaction in other branches of the government service which are cognizant of them.

An extravagant service puts on airs among its fellows, attracts their best men, renders discontented those less fortunate. and breeds dissatisfaction even in the service itself when, as in the case of the Forestry Service, the high salaries and the pleasing employment go to the favored of the service, leaving those actually engaged in its hard work in many instances grievously underpaid. Second, enormous lump-sum appropria-tions, under the best administration, are bound to be misapplied in some instances, and to be used without the care and economy that guards a specific appropriation; and the temptation is constantly present to use them in every way possible within the most liberal construction of authority for the purpose of building up not only the present plant, plan, and purpose of the bureau, but in furthering its future plans, purposes, and am-

That the Forestry Service has done this there can be no question. It has been the advocate, champion, and promoter of the most extreme policies of federal expenditures and of the extension of federal jurisdiction and control that has been proposed by anyone, including the proposal to purchase unlimited areas of private lands within Eastern States for the purpose of putting them under exclusive federal jurisdiction, and the proposition for the federal control of every use of the public lands pending their absorption into private ownership, or rather with a view of retarding such absorption. No fad or scheme having for its purpose the expenditure of public cash for the extension of federal authority but has had its support within the limitations set by the accounting officers of the Treasury, and as a corollary of this situation the service has had the devoted and unquestioning support of all the advocates of these various projects.

PLOWING WITH THE BUREAU HEIFER.

One of the most tempting and absorbing games of the day is that of plowing every stony and questionable field within which federal appropriations and federal activities are invited with the government bureau heifer. The bureau is always a "Barkis," if the effort promises vast stores of succulent governmental appropriation provender, and the game is always in full swing, Sundays and holidays not excepted, on the back lot, and sometimes in the front yard, of every bureau flush with millions of federal cash in a lump-sum appropriation; and, unfortunately for the public good, too often both the bureau and the other interested party wins. Alas, in many quarters it is considered extremely impolite, not to say impertinent, by both parties in interest to have anyone suggest that the poor old Constitution and the now somewhat emaciated Treasury, neither of which have any friends with either crowd, are sure to get the worst of it.

From the standpoint of the West, particularly, the constantly increasing extravagance of the Forestry Bureau is a direct menace in that the rather curious view has been adopted that while the country as a whole bears the cost of other great national undertakings, the people in the West must eventually bear the load of the forest reserves. In fact, the brethren of New England and the Southern Appalachians are now looking with covetous eyes upon western forest lands as a source from which to draw the vast expenditures they contemplate laying upon the Federal Government for undertakings which no selfrespecting Commonwealth ought to ask any assistance in.

When the forests were transferred to the Agricultural Department one of the claims made, and if I recollect rightly, one of the assurances given, was that the service would soon be selfsupporting. On the contrary, the gap between income and expenditure has been constantly widening, in spite of the fact that in localities where there is a demand for timber the bureau has been depleting the forests much more rapidly than they have ever been depleted in the past. In one reserve in my State a virgin forest which required from one hundred and fifty to two hundred years to attain its growth is being cut at a rate that will exhaust all of the available matured and maturing timber in less than ten years. I do not pretend to say that this forest is being cut too rapidly. It is true, however, that when it is cut its like can not be again harvested on the same ground for a hundred years at least.

With the growth of forestry expenditures the demand for a larger revenue will increase, and what shall be done to make a reserve such as I have mentioned pay its proportion of the extravagant office and general expenses of the service during the century that it is reforesting? I have no doubt but what the Forestry Service will be ingenious enough to secure the revenue by laying a burden on every industry and every use of the reserve. Already the foundations of these charges are being laid in the revocable permits being granted, oftentimes for purposes for which Congress has granted a permanent right of way, in the attempt to lay a toll upon the use of water and to hamper and restrict the acquirement of every right that will not pay tribute to a federal landlord.

I hear surprise expressed that a western man should object to large federal expenditure in his region. Some of the brethren are so enamored, as we all are inclined to be, of federal expenditures in the territory they represent that they can not realize why we do not welcome these expenditures. If every dollar spent for rivers and harbors or public buildings or military posts fastened more firmly an arbitrary control not necessary to the accomplishment of any proper public purpose, and threatened an ultimate toll running through all time, the appropriation might not be so welcome.

Every dollar unnecessarily expended by the Forest Service increases the pressure on the service to obtain additional revenue, and while for the time being, under constant fire of criticism, they have not increased their charges, and in some instances have slightly decreased them, they are more confidently than ever insisting upon the right to revenue from every source and laying the plans to secure it. They now deny the right of a settler to the free use of a handful of timber, though they still grudgingly give it to him as an act of grace, but surround the taking of it with miles of red tape.

I look from my dooryard, when at home, over a wide expanse of forest reserve, with millions of feet of timber dying and menacing the surrounding territory with fire and the spread of the beetle that has wrought destruction there, so bound round with red tape of administration or held at such a price that there is little incentive to remove it. All attempts to secure some of it for firewood, coupled with an offer to pay the price asked, was met with the fixing of such conditions as to make it impossible to utilize it, and there it rots.

On the same reserve settlers attempting to secure a foothold in open mountain valleys, where their presence would, in the language of the forester, be a benefit to and lend security to the forest, are met with tedious delays, though the bureau has a corps of high-salaried officers to meet such cases, and ultimately are subjected to an expense of all the way from $75 to $150 for the survey of their little mountain farms amid the snows. The Forestry Service may say it is not responsible for this expense. From a thorough knowledge of the situation, I have no doubt but that if the service took an interest in the matter the expense could be reduced one-half—probably more—but the officials of the department are too busy establishing elaborate headquarters, following fads, arranging conservation conventions from Canada to Mexico, making extensive tours in the interest of the uplift of the farmer to have any time for these struggling frontiersmen attempting to get a foothold in the soil and establish American homes in the wilderness.

GOVERNMENT MONOPOLY.

Quite recently the Chief Forester stated before the Agricultural Committee that the service was not taking advantage of the government ownership of all the forests in certain districts to secure a high price for stumpage. This is a statement which we can all approve, but it is unfortunate, both for the Forestry Service and the people who use the products of the reserves, that this fair policy is not generally followed. If it were, there would not be a price of $1 to $1.50 a thousand for stumpage in districts where the Government owns but a limited portion of the timber supply and of $5 or more per thousand in districts where the Government has a monopoly of all the timber. Why should the people of Wyoming pay $4 or $5 a thousand more for their lumber because the Government owns the timber supply and has a monopoly in certain parts of the State than in Oregon and Washington, where the government monopoly is tempered by private ownership? Why do my constituents in a part of the State where the Government has practically a monopoly in timber pay such price as competition fixes above a minimum of $5 per thousand, fixed by the government moa minimum of $5 per thousand, fixed by the government ind-nopoly—the Forest Service—when my neighbors in the vicinity of my own town pay but $1 to $1.50 a thousand stumpage for timber cut from state and privately owned lands? And yet they tell us the Government does not avail itself of its opportunities as a monopolist of timber.

Thanks to the criticism and the ridicule that have been heaped on the absurd requirements as to piling and burning of brush, fixed by some of the dude inspectors of the service, the practice in this direction has become somewhat more sensible and reasonable, though in some regions the Bourbon theorists of the service yet have much to learn in this direction.

The Forest Service estimates that one-third of the area included in the national reserves is unforested. I will not pretend to say that this is not a fair estimate for the forest reserves as a whole, for there are a number of them with which I am not at all familiar; but in the Rocky Mountain region—at any rate in Wyoming—the proportion of unforested lands is much greater. I think it is safe to say that 60 per cent of the area of the forest reserves in our State contains no timber at all, and a large proportion of this 60 per cent is in no way adapted to the growing of timber.

adapted to the growing of timber.

The result of the inclusion of this vast area of nontimbered land in the reserves is that the so-called "forest reserves" are many of them grazing rather than forest reserves, as is indicated by the fact that the receipts for grazing during the past fiscal year exceeded the receipts for the sale of timber by more than $100,000; and it is over the use of these grazing lands that a large amount of the friction prevailing throughout the West occurs.

Much of this friction could have been avoided and can be overcome by excluding from the reserves nontimbered land wherever possible. But this is not in accordance with the policy of the bureau, which is to extend its jurisdiction as widely as possible, not only over forest lands and lands that may be forested, but over lands that are to remain perpetual grazing lands.

It is true that under strong pressure the bureau did reduce the grazing fees in some instances the past season, but there is almost universal complaint, in my State, at least, and I think largely elsewhere throughout the West, that discrimination and favoritism are practiced as between classes of live stock and individuals; that vast areas of fine mountain grasses are not utilized at all, but are allowed to become a menace through the opportunity afforded for the spread of fires, because the Forest Service has a habit of assigning certain territory to the use of certain kinds of live stock and of keeping all other kinds out when there is not sufficient numbers of the kind of stock assigned to utilize the grasses or the conditions are such as to make such utilization impossible. There are large areas within the reserves which are grazed but little, if at all; because, while they are ideal pasture for sheep and not at all suited to the pasturage of cattle, the service insists that they shall be pastured by cattle or not at all.

The specific complaints against the Forest Service which come to a western Member of Congress are almost numberless and have to do with every feature of the department's policy. Complaints from settlers who are entitled to the free use of timber for the building of their homes and farms, on the ground that they are either denied the right to use timber or that the opportunity to use it is surrounded by so many exasperating and irritating conditions as to make the right valueless, and this while vast quantities of timber are rotting in the reserves. Complaints come from settlers at some distance from the reserves that they are compelled to pay grazing fees for the stock they turn on the range, because some of them may occasionally stray upon the reserves.

Complaints are made by people in the towns because of the high price of lumber, caused largely on account of the high price of stumpage; by stockmen of favoritism in granting grazing privileges; by miners of the difficulties surrounding the taking and holding of mineral claims; by settlers of the difficulties of the acquisition of homesteads; and while the service does occasionally put forth an effort to satisfy these complaints, in a large number of cases they are met with utter indifference. One great trouble with the Forestry Service is that it has attempted to carry out its policy by securing the aid and support of the high, mighty, and powerful, the influence of associations and corporations, rather than by rendering services that would commend them to the common people.

I note that whatever criticism is made of the service, in-

I note that whatever criticism is made of the service, instead of any effort being made to remedy conditions, the attempt is made to overwhelm and smother, squelch and annihilate the critic by the shopworn, stupid declaration that the people who are objecting to the forestry policy are the men who want to loot the public domain, skin the public range, and rape the public forests. Declarations and denunciations of this kind never settled any question and never will settle this question of the forest policy in the West, a policy now on trial and a policy which, much to the regret of those who believe in the right kind of a forestry policy, grows more unpopular as time passes. The fact is that the "big interests" have had but little cause

The fact is that the "big interests" have had but little cause to complain, and have had but little complaint of the forestry policy. The live stock association of the country, which represents more big interests than any other, has been favorable to the forestry policy as practiced, and a few days ago passed resolutions to that effect. The Chief Forester a year and a half or so ago at a western meeting, when asked to pledge himself for free lumber, asked to be excused, on the ground that the lumber interests were all favorable to the forestry policy and he did not care to antagonize them.

Speaking from my own experience, I will say that no one interested in the purchase of timber lands, in the cutting of lumber or any kind of timber on any considerable scale, has ever criticised the Forest Service to me or in my presence, while I have heard criticisms without number from settlers, miners, stock men, and small purchasers or intending purchasers of timber.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wyoming has expired.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I yield ten minutes more to the gentleman from Wyoming.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is recognized for ten

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, this does not surprise anyone who knows anything about the situation. The sale of timber on the forest reserves tends to monopoly. I think I am correct in saying that three concerns, or four at the outside, cut I think I am four-fifths of all the timber sold from the forest reserves in my State. I do not mention this in the way of criticism, but rather as a fact to show that the reserves have made possible large operations, and tend to large operations, where small operations were the rule before the reserves were established.

Mr. Chairman, I realize that some criticisms made against the Forest Service are trivial; that some are unreasonable; but making due allowance for all these, there must be something vitally wrong with a system and a policy which constantly grows in disfavor among honest and reasonable men, and no one who knows the situation, in the intermountain West at least, but knows that the Forest Service has grown more and more unpopular as the years have gone by, and yet it is true that some glaring faults have here and there been remedied.

I realize that some friction will always exist; that some dis satisfaction will always be felt with the best regulated system of national forest reserves. A certain amount of that sort of thing is inevitable in a government bureaucracy, but a good deal of it can be eliminated and removed by the inauguration of a reasonable and sensible policy.

WHAT THE SERVICE SHOULD DO.

The first thing the Forest Service ought to do is to eliminate the areas of unforested lands, particularly from around the borders of the reserves. In the second place, it ought to give less attention to a score or more of commissions for the general uplift with which it has been associated, and pay more attention to the forestry business. It ought to stop trying to maintain its popularity by lending a laboring oar to every man's fad and fancy, and by attempting to stand in with great interests, and pay its attention to looking after the common, everyday citizen who lives in and around and adjacent to its reserves. above all, it ought to cease its propaganda on behalf of a variety of meddlesome, paternalistic, and centralizing schemes and policies which are offensive to a large number of people, and pay more attention to its own particular knitting.

If the Forestry Bureau will follow this advice, discharge about half of its high-salaried chiefs and aids and gentlemen of scientific leisure, it may not be so popular in the East or in certain circles in the West, but it will get along better with the people with whom it has directly to do and in the carrying out of the useful work for which it was established.

I do not promise perfect conditions even then, for national control of large areas of territory within a State is, at best, an evil, and I fear a growing rather than a lessening one, and I am amazed whenever I hear men who ought to realize the blessings of self-government and local control advocating schemes of federalism and paternalism calculated to hatch a crop of evils that are certain to rise up to plague those responsible for them, and, unfortunately, the balance of the community also.

I realize the States have not done their full duty in all respects, but the remedy is not to call upon the Federal Government to do what the State ought to do, but to arouse public opinion to a performance of its duty by the State, and I look confidently forward not to a still further increase of federal control over the region in which I live, but to a gradually increasing state and local control, believing that in such control is the only proper settlement of many of the questions that now

That the policy of the reservation of western mountainous forested territory and the public control and management of such areas is permanently established no one can doubt. It upon the scene of action, and within reasonable limits it has always had the support of the western people.

No one fully alive to the inevitable effects of bureaucratic control of large areas within States but realizes that such control by federal authorities is not an unmixed blessing by anv means, but all of the benefits to the people in a locality and to the country at large, intended or expected from the policy, can be best obtained by limiting the authority and activity of the bureau having control of the reserves to that necessary to carry out the purposes for which the reserves were established.

Unfortunately for the success of the government forestry policy, the present Forestry Bureau insists on establishing over vast areas within sovereign States complete autocratic federal control over all resources, industries, and enterprises without regard to any effect they may have on the maintenance of conditions favorable to the purposes of a correct forestry policy.

In my opinion, one of two policies will eventually be established. Either the Forestry Service will be content with such control as is necessary for the carrying out of the purposes for which it was established or the States will earnestly strive for, and eventually obtain, full ownership and control of the territory now in reserves, and I am inclined to the opinion that the latter will be decided to be the best for the West and for all the country. [Applause.]

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed the following concurrent resolution, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

Senate concurrent resolution 85.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to cause a survey to be made of the harbor at Anacortes, Wash., to determine the cost and advisability of its improvement.

The message also announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 26399) making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1909, disagreed to by the House of Representatives; had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon; and had appointed Mr. Hale, Mr. Gallinger, and Mr. Teller as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bills and joint resolution of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 5510. An act for the relief of the owners of the tug Juno; S. 8356. An act to enable the Omaha Indians to protect from overflow their tribal and allotted lands located within the boundaries of any drainage district in Nebraska; and

S. R. 122. Joint resolution to enable the Secretary of the Senate and Clerk of the House of Representatives to pay the necessary expenses of the inaugural ceremonies of the President of the United States March 4, 1909.

- AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session,

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, the act making appropriation for the Department of Agriculture, although one of the smallest of the great supply bills annually brought before the House, probably attracts more general interest in this Chamber than any other, and its provisions are more closely scrutinized and more carefully discussed. The reason for this is doubtless found in the fact that the activities of the department are so widely extended and touch in a vital way the interests of so large a proportion of our people that nearly every Member upon this floor feels that his own constituents are directly concerned in some one or more provisions of the bill. On account of this widespread interest in the department throughout the country, as well as in this body, I trust it will not be considered out of place if, in presenting this measure, I take occasion to review the work of the past year and direct attention, briefly, to some of the more notable achievements of the various bureaus and offices. As the time which I have reserved for myself is limited, I will ask the indulgence of the committee to be permitted to proceed without interruption until I have completed the statement I desire to make.

THE SOLICITOR.

One of the few promotions recommended by your committee was a policy deliberately entered upon and well advanced long is that of the solicitor, whose salary is increased from $4,000 before those responsible for the present Forestry Service came to $4,500. This increase is recommended partly because $4,500 is the salary paid to the solicitor of other departments, but chiefly because recent legislation has imposed upon this officer duties which have greatly increased his work in volume, importance, and responsibility—work which has been done with very commendable industry and intelligence. During the calendar year 1908 there were handled in the solicitor's office 301 cases under the food and drugs act, 46 under the meat-inspection law, 120 under the cattle-quarantine law, 2 under the Alaska game law, 699 under the 28-hour law, and 78 in connection with the

In all, 1,252 cases were reported or determined during the year, and fines and penalties aggregating nearly $70,000 were recovered. The constitutionality of the food and drugs act has been tested and upheld, and the courts have sustained the de-partment in seizing and destroying goods transported in violation of that act to the aggregate value of nearly $300,000. The cattle quarantine law has also been held constitutional in a recent decision, in which the opinion of the court follows closely the argument of the brief of the solicitor of the department, while a large number of regulations and orders having the force of law, prepared by the solicitor for carrying into effect the various laws with the enforcement of which the Secretary of Agriculture is charged, have stood the test of the courts. It will readily be seen, therefore, that the importance and responsibility, as well as the volume of work done in the solicitor's office, has materially increased, and the advance in salary is believed to be fully warranted.

WEATHER BUREAU.

The work of the Weather Bureau has followed its usual lines, except that during the past summer, for the first time in its history, weekly forecasts of the weather were attempted, in addition to the usual daily predictions. These weekly forecasts were made possible by cooperation with other governments, as a result of which the bureau here in Washington received daily weather reports from different points in Canada, from Iceland and Japan and Russia, from all the European countries, the Guam, Hawaiian Islands, Alaska, and various islands of the Atlantic. Having thus placed before them every morning the weather conditions existing over the entire Northern Hemisphere, our experts were able to trace the sweep of the great storm waves across the continents and oceans and to predict with very creditable accuracy the general conditions that would prevail in different sections of our own country for a week in advance.

BUREAU OF ANIMAL INDUSTRY.

The Bureau of Animal Industry has made notable progress during the year in eradicating the stock diseases that for so long have levied their annual toll upon our western ranges. Four entire States and parts of two others were released from the quarantine for sheep scale, and portions of four States for cattle mange. The work of exterminating the Texas fever tick was carried on in 12 States, and 40,798 square miles of territory were cleared of the pest. Some idea of the immense amount of work involved in this effort to control and eradicate animal diseases may be gained from the statement that during the year this bureau inspected nearly 60,000,000 sheep and over 20,000,000 cattle, besides supervising the dipping of 19,000,000 animals. One of the very important achievements of this bureau during the past year was the development of a highly effective method of preventing hog cholera by vaccination. It has been esti-mated that the annual loss to the farmers of the United States from hog cholera is not less than $70,000,000. Tests of the new remedy which have been made during the past few months seem to make it certain that this loss can be almost wholly eliminated when the method of treatment is understood and generally applied. But perhaps the most important work of the Bureau of Animal Industry during the year was the prompt and effective way in which it met the emergency created by the outbreak of contagious foot and mouth disease which occurred last November. This outbreak affected 2 counties in Michigan, last November. This outbreak affected 2 counties in Michigan, 5 counties in New York, 15 counties in Pennsylvania, and 1 county in Maryland, and by the prompt and vigorous action. of this bureau the disease has been practically eradicated with-out being allowed to spread to other parts of the country. To accomplish this result nearly 4,000 animals on 157 farms or premises were slaughtered and buried and the premises disinfected. The measures taken were heroic, but they were necessary, for if the contagion had been allowed to reach the great stock-growing regions and the range country of the West enormous losses would have been inflicted and eradication might have been impossible.

BUREAU OF PLANT INDUSTRY.

Acting upon the suggestions of your committee, the Bureau of Plant Industry has made a special effort during the past year to bring about a proper balance between its investigational, experimental, demonstrative, and extension work, and the result has been highly gratifying. In many sections of the particularly where the advent of the cotton-boll weevil had brought about conditions bordering on panic, the work of this bureau has been especially effective. Through its agents it has come into personal touch with probably 250,000 farmers, and the detail information it has carried to them has been of immeasurable value in aiding them to meet the emergency that confronted them. A large part of the increased appropriation recommended by this committee is intended to be used in extending this work. The remainder of this increase, or a large share of it, will be devoted to demonstration work in cooperation with the Reclamation Service. A large number of the projects which this service has in charge are now completed, and many settlers have entered upon them. But the soil and the climate are untested, and unless they can have the advantage of expert advice and example it is feared that the settlers will meet with failures, which would not only bring them loss and discouragement, but would seriously retard the development of the projects. It is proposed, therefore, to have the trained men in the Bureau of Plant Industry take charge of a small farm on each of these several projects, ascertain by experiment the crops best adapted to the region, and demonstrate the best methods of irrigation and tillage.

One of the very important and difficult tasks imposed upon the Bureau of Plant Industry by a paragraph in the current appropriation act was that of fixing standards for the grading of cotton. After very carefully studying the problem the officials of the bureau asked the Secretary to call to their assistance a number of gentlemen who might be considered as experts in the handling and grading of cotton. Complying with this request, the gentlemen named by the Secretary, and who generously consented to serve without compensation, were: generously consented to serve without compensation, were: James A. Airey, of John M. Parker & Co., New Orleans, La.; J. S. Akers, of Inman, Akers & Inman, Atlanta, Ga.; Clinton B. Baker, of Lawrence Manufacturing Company, Lowell, Mass.; F. M. Crump, of F. M. Crump & Co., Memphis, Tenn.; John Martin, of Paris, Tex.; George W. Neville, of Weld & Neville, New York City; Lewis W. Parker, treasurer of Olympia Mills, Greenville, S. C.; Nathaniel N. Thayer, of Barry Thayer & Co., Boston, Mass.; and Charles A. Vedder, of John D. Rogers & Co., Calveston, Tax Galveston, Tex.

The committee was assisted in the actual preparation of the official grades by Julies Mazerat, of New Orleans; F. C. Millett, of New York; and James R. Taylor, of Dallas, Tex. This committee met on Monday of this week and organized by the election of Mr. Nathaniel N. Thayer as chairman. It has been busily engaged during these three days in preparing actual samples of cotton which in the judgment of the experts assisting the committee may be taken as types of the various grades which they are attempting to establish. It is the expectation of the department that when these types have been selected they may be used as samples, and cotton exchanges, agricultural colleges, or any organizations or individuals who may wish to obtain samples may by the help of experts and by comparison with the typical samples on file, if we may so term it, in the Department of the Agriculture be enabled to prepare such samples. And it is the belief of the gentlemen who constitute this committee, and who are recognized as among the most expert and capable handlers and graders of cotton in the United States, that as a result of their work and of that of the department a great benefit will be brought to the purchasers as well as to the sellers of cotton in the simplification of grades and in making those grades more uniform.

THE FOREST SERVICE.

The increase in the appropriation for the Forest Service carried in the bill-$750,000-seems large, but it is only a small part of that recommended in the estimates, which was $2,100,000. Since last year new national forests have been created by proclamation of the President aggregating about 17,000,000 acres, while the use of the forests has enormously increased. The books of the Forest Service show that last year the number of timber sales increased 206 per cent, the amount of timber cut 102 per cent, free-use permits 176 per cent, and the number of special permits 67 per cent, while the sales and fees received increased 20 per cent. Summing it all up, the total increase in the amount of business done was 46 per cent. Assuming that there will be a corresponding growth during the coming year, the proposed increase in the appropriation seems fully warranted. The policy of making permanent improvements in the forests, with a view to their better protection from fires, seems to have been well justified by the experience of the past season, as the fire losses were but little over $1,000,000, whereas if the same rate had prevailed as in private forests during the same season the loss would have been more than $30,000,000. It is not unreasonable to say that in the matter of fire protection alone the Forest Service has saved for the country during the past year an amount of property equal to the entire cost of its maintenance for a decade.

It has been the policy of the Forest Service in this as in former years to carefully protect the interests of the small users of the forests rather than to have them monopolized by the great concerns. For example, out of a total of 5,062 timber sales 4,584 were for less than $100, 326 from $100 to $500, 63 from $500 to $1,000, 71 from $1,000 to $5,000, while only 18 sales were made for timber exceeding in value $5,000. Of the 19,000 grazing permits issued during the year, 12,600 were for less than 40 head and only 1,278 were for more than 200 head. It might be added in this connection that the condition of the ranges within the forests has so much improved that it was found possible to allow 27,000 more cattle and horses and 205,000 more sheep upon them than were grazed last year. One of the interesting experiments made was the inclosing of a pasture with a coyote stock fence on one of the forests in Oregon, in order to observe the results of permitting sheep to graze freely rather than under the charge of a herder. It is claimed that the pasture thus inclosed showed a carrying capacity of 50 per cent greater than precisely similar ranges on the outside, and that the lambs weighed 82 pounds per head more at the close of the season than the lambs on the outside. This experiment at-tracted a great deal of attention throughout the West and may lead to an entire revolution in the manner of grazing sheep upon the public lands.

The revenue sales of timber during the year was $849,227.24; from grazing, $962,829.40; and from all other uses, $30,425.23, bringing the total receipts up to $1,842,481.87, showing a deficit between receipts and expenss of $1,303,518.13, which represents the actual net cost to the Treasury of the Forest Service. Of this amount $592,169.19 was expended for permanent improvements, leaving $711,348.94 as all which, perhaps, could properly be charged in the nature of a deficit against the service. It should not be forgotten, however, that there is a great deal to show for this $711,348.94 in the way of valuable investigations, the spread of the practice of forestry outside of the national forests, the protection of the forests from fire, and the insurance against the timber scarcity in the future.

BUREAU OF CHEMISTRY.

The chief energy of the Bureau of Chemistry during the year has been expended upon the enforcement of the food and drugs act, and its efforts have met with marked success. For the most part, the determinations of the bureau have been accepted without contest, and the manufacturers of foods and drugs have cordially acquiesced in the decisions rendered and complied with the regulations prescribed. In three conspicuous instances, however, vigorous protests were entered by the interests concerned, and in deference to their representations the Secretary of Agriculture organized what is known as the "referee board," appointing to membership upon it Dr. Ira Remsen, president of Johns Hopkins University; Dr. Russell H. Chittenden, of Yale; Dr. John H. Long, of Northwestern; Dr. Alonzo E. Taylor, of the University of California; and Dr. C. A. Herter, of New York. To this board the Secretary referred the question of the wholesomeness or deleterious character of benzoate of soda, sulphur dioxide, and saccharine. The report upon benzoate of soda has recently been made, the decision of the board of referees being to the effect that this substance was not deleterious when used in the ordinary way as a preservative of food. It is expected that the report on saccharine will be ready in a few weeks, while that on sulphur will probably be delayed for several months. The high standing of the scientists composing this board seems to leave no doubt that its determination will be generally accepted; and in view of the enormous business interests involved, the organization of the board, for which there is ample legal authority, seems to be fully justified.

Along the line of its usual investigations the Bureau of Chemistry has made special effort during the year to develop the manufacture of denatured alcohol. A plant of the smallest size practicable for commercial work was erected and alcohol has been manufactured from a large number of inferior farm products and by-products, among other things being low-grade molasses, damaged wheat, corn, waste apples, and watermelons.

The results of these tests are thought to be fairly encouraging and a bulletin describing them will be issued soon.

THE BUREAU OF SOILS.

The Bureau of Soils, in addition to its usual work, has begun a reconnaissance soil survey of the region lying west of the one hundredth meridian and east of the Rocky Mountains, the purpose of which is to outline in a broad way the general character of the soils in that section. During the summer some 40,000 square miles were thus mapped in North Dakota, and similar work in now going forward in western Texas. The bureau discontinued the soil utilization work which it had begun in New York and other States, turning it over to the Bureau of Plant Industry, where it properly belonged, and which has been carrying it forward.

BUREAU OF ENTOMOLOGY.

The Bureau of Entomology has found its resources heavily taxed this year to meet the demands upon it by means of the ravages of injurious insects in all parts of the country. Perhaps the most serious situation anywhere is that which confronts the pear orchards in the Pacific coast, where a parasite known as "thrips" has attacked the trees and destroyed hundreds of acres of extremely valuable orchards.

Its ravages have been so great, indeed, as to seriously threaten the future of the pear industry in the States concerned, and it is a matter for regret that as yet no practical remedies have been found.

Decided success has, however, attended the efforts that have been made to control scale insects in southern California, and methods of treatment have been perfected which have resulted in a great saving to orange and lemon growers. The work against the white fly in Florida has been carried on with success and seems to be about concluded. The efforts of the bureau to prevent the further spread of the gypsy moth in New England have been only measurably successful, and upon the earnest solicitation of Representatives from that section the committee recommends an increase of $50,000 in the appropriation for the work of the coming year. And I should like to say at this time that I have introduced a bill, which I hope will receive early consideration, for the inspection of orchard stock coming into this country and entering into interstate commerce in this country. I have introduced that bill at the request of the department for the reason that in the last two weeks in orchard stock imported from abroad there have been found something like 1,500 nests of the brown-tailed moth, and the stock having been shipped to many different parts of the country, it seems as if that very destructive pest is likely to be widely scattered throughout the United States. It certainly would seem to be poor economy to expend $250,000 to $300,000 every year in endeavoring to exterminate an insect, while at the same time we permit the importation of that insect without any attempt to prohibit it. There is now no law upon our statute books by which orchard stock entering into our ports may be inspected, either for disease of the stock itself or manifestations of injurious insects. And I hope the bill to which I have called attention may become a law at this session of Congress.

No hope is entertained that the gypsy moth can be wholly exterminated, but it is believed that by the proper effort it may be prevented from spreading beyond the present infested area until its natural enemies which are being introduced as rapidly as possible can multiply sufficiently to hold it in reasonable bounds. The importation of parasites is being continued; specimens have been brought in both from Europe and Japan in large numbers. Several species of these parasites have thoroughly established themselves and are assisting in the destruction of both the gypsy moth and brown-tail moth.

THE BIOLOGICAL SURVEY.

The Biological Survey has been carrying forward its usual work during the past year with even more than the usual degree of success. It will probably be in the nature of news to most of the Members to learn that the annual loss from wolves and coyotes on our western stock ranges is estimated at $12,000,000. By methods recommended by the Biological Survey it was reported that during the past year 1,800 wolves and 24,000 coyotes have been killed, with a resultant saving in live stock of not less than $2,000,000.

A plague of field mice, which was absolutely devastating the Carson Valley in Nevada, was arrested by the survey, and gratifying results were met with in similar instances in different parts of the West. The rather startling discovery was recently made in California that a certain variety of ground squirrel aids in the spread of bubonic plague, and the Bureau of Biological Survey has been called in to assist in its extermination. One of the rather unusual suggestions of this bureau, made as a result of its recent studies, is that deer farming could be taken up with great profit in many parts of the country. The bureau estimates that the value of venison killed in the United States amounts to between $12,000,000 and $15,000,000 annually, and if the waste lands suitable for the grazing of deer were utilized for this purpose venison could be produced far cheaper than beef at present prices.

DIVISION OF PUBLICATIONS.

The Division of Publications naturally follows the same lines year after year, but it may be of interest to members of the committee to know that there was distributed through this division last year nearly 17,000,000 copies of bulletins, documents, and reports of various kinds. The total number of publications edited aggregated 1,522, comprising 15,510 printed pages. In order to handle this vast amount of literature properly the committee recommends in the present bill an increase in the appropriation for this division which will enable it to substitute machines for a great deal of the labor that is now done by hand.

BUREAU OF STATISTICS.

The work of the Bureau of Statistics also follows the same general lines from year to year, and it is perhaps enough to say that its reports during the last twelve months have not been the subject of unfavorable comment or criticism, and it would appear that the efforts to improve the crop-reporting service have been productive of good results.

THE OFFICE OF EXPERIMENT STATIONS.

The Office of Experiment Stations has direct charge of stations in Alaska, Hawaii, Porto Rico, and Guam, and from each of these have come very interesting reports. It was shown in Alaska that barley and wheat can be matured in many parts of the Territory, and numerous other facts have been developed which will be of great value to the rapidly increasing numbers of those who are seeking homes there.

In Hawaii methods have been devised for the shipping of pineapples, avocados, and similar fruits to Chicago and other markets, and experiments have been made which show the large possibilities of rubber production in the islands.

In Porto Rico marked success has been obtained with Java coffees and with pineapples and citrus fruits and with the breeding of swine and poultry.

In Guam the small amount of $5,000 appropriated for the current year has been used to advantage in a sort of preliminary survey of the work needed and in a study of the situation, as a result of which definite plans for the future may be made. Owing to the fact that there is no public land in this island, it will be necessary to purchase whatever is needed for the use of the station, and a small sum is authorized in this bill for that purpose. The agricultural possibilities of the island are very considerable, and its present condition is most deplorable. As a mere matter of humanity the work begun there should be carried forward vigorously, and the pending bill makes moderate provision for its continuance.

THE OFFICE OF PUBLIC ROADS.

The Office of Public Roads, complying with the limitations in last year's appropriation bill, has dispensed with the use of road-making machinery, and, in the judgment of your committee, its usefulness has been greatly enhanced thereby, for the reason that energies heretofore absorbed in the actual construction of the roads have been directed purely to supervisory work, and it has been possible, therefore, to accomplish a great Expert advice has been furnished to local authorities in nearly every part of the country, hundreds of samples of road material have been tested, and many counties and States have been assisted to introduce modern systems of road construction, maintenance, and administration. Particularly good results have followed from special investigations made in this office with reference to corrosion of iron and steel, as a result of which many steel mills have materially changed their method of manufacture. Experiments have also been made in the use of protective pigments, which bid fair to revolutionize the whole subject and result in the development of a method of treatment of steel surfaces immeasurably in advance of any method now practiced.

CONCLUSION.

Such, very briefly, are a few of the more striking features of the work that has been accomplished during the past year by this great department. It has occupied more time in the telling than I perhaps ought to have taken; and yet, all I have said is hardly more than a hint of the nearly innumerable useful things which the year has seen done through this powerful and beneficent arm of our Government. Clothed with stupendous responsibility touching the enforcement of important and far-reaching laws, it has discharged that responsibility with wisdom and fidelity and success. Endowed with a splendid opportunity to serve the people by promoting the prosperity of their fundamental industry, it has more than measured up to their most sanguine expectations.

In its preparation of the pending bill your committee did not lose sight of the condition of the national revenues, which imposes economy upon the national expenditures as an imperative obligation; and so wherever it could be done without detriment to the service the estimates submitted by the department have been reduced, the total amount of this reduction being $1,739,700. On the other hand, the committee has not lost sight of the fact that the Department of Agriculture is to a very considerable degree a revenue-producing department; that it is in a very large degree a wealth-creating department; and that the exercise of too great parsimony in the appropriation for its support would be extravagance and not economy; and it has therefore granted increases in certain of the bureaus over the amounts available for the current year in the aggregate sum of $1,208,820. As it stands your committee believes that the bill provides conservatively, and yet safely, for all the needs of the department, and that it appropriates funds sufficient to carry forward all the work which is likely to be imperatively needed during the coming year.

One feature of the bill to which I desire especially to call the attention of the committee at this time is the greater itemization of the lump-sum paragraph. Your committee recognized the justice of the criticism made last year against the bill in this particular, and, although the bill of last year did not sin to any greater degree in this matter than the previous bills had sinned, yet it was evident to us that the criticism was a just one, and so far as the committee has deemed it wise that criticism has been met in the rearrangement of the present bill. The itemization still lacks much of being as detailed as the committee would like to have it, but we realize the necessity of proceeding cautiously in a matter of this kind, because with a great scientific department such as that of Agriculture it would be very easy, by tying up the appropriation too closely, to very materially hinder the transaction of the necessary business of the department. We believe that a step has been taken in the right direction, and we hope that what has been done in that line will meet with the approval of the House.

Inasmuch as there is no disposition on the part of the committee to unreasonably hamper debate under the five-minute rule, I believe that any information which Members may require, touching the details of the bill, may be had when we come to discuss it under that rule. Therefore, I will ask for the reading of the bill. [Applause.]

The Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE.

Office of the Secretary: Secretary of Agriculture, $12,000; Assistant Secretary of Agriculture, $5,000; 1 solicitor, $4,500; chief clerk, $2,500, and $500 additional as custodian of buildings; private secretary to the Secretary of Agriculture, $2,500; stenographer and executive clerk to the Secretary of Agriculture, $2,500; private secretary to the Assistant Secretary of Agriculture, $1,600; stenographer to the Assistant Secretary of Agriculture, $1,600; stenographer to the Assistant Secretary of Agriculture, $1,600; at appointment clerk, $2,000; 1 chief of supply division, $2,000; 1 inspector, $2,500; 2 law clerks, at $2,000; ach; $1 alw clerks, at $1,600 each; 1 telegraph and telephone operator, $1,200; 2 clerks class 4; 3 clerks class 3; 6 clerks class 2; 9 clerks class 1; 7 clerks, at $1,000; ach; 4 clerks, at $1,000 each; 10 clerks, messengers, or skilled laborers, at $840 each; 8 clerks or laborers, at $720 each; 1 chief engineer, who shall be captain of the watch, $1,600; 1 assistant engineer, $1,400; 2 assistant engineers, at $1,000 each; 4 firemen, at $720 each; 4 elevator conductors, at $720 each; 1 construction inspector, $1,200; 1 cainet-maker, $1,100; 1 carpenter, $1,000; 1 electrical wireman, $900; 1 painter, $900; 1 painter, $720; 1 plumber, $900; 1 blacksmith, $840; 1 lieutenant of the watch, $1,000; 26 watchmen, at $720 each; 1 mechanic, $1,200; 2 mechanics, at $1,100 each; 6 assistant messengers, or skilled laborers, at $600 each; 7 laborers, at $600 each; 17 laborers, messenger boys, or charwomen, at $400 each; 6 assistant messengers, or charwomen, at $400 each; 1 charwoman, $540; 5 charwomen, at $240 each; for extra laborers and emergency employments, $7,600.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on the paragraph

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, the only new matter in this paragraph is increasing the salary of the solicitor and of the inspector.

Mr. MACON. I see here, on page 2, where you create 2 law clerks at $2,000 each and 3 law clerks at $1,600 each. Is not that new matter?

Mr. SCOTT. The new matter in this paragraph is as follows: The salary of the solicitor is increased to $4,500; the salary of the inspector is increased to $2,500. There have been added to the Secretary's roll two new places, one a clerk at $800 and one a mechanic at $1,200. All the other additions to the Secretary's roll are by transfer from the lump sum or from some one of the bureaus.

Mr. MACON. Are the 2 law clerks at $2,000 and the 3 law clerks at $1,600 new places?

Mr. SCOTT. These law clerks have been carried heretofore on the lump-sum roll of the Bureau of Chemistry, but they were used in the office of the solicitor; and inasmuch as the salary of the solicitor is carried on the Secretary's roll, it was the opinion of the committee that all of the clerks used by the solicitor ought also to be carried on the Secretary's roll, and not to be charged up to any particular bureau, and for that reason the transfer was made from the Bureau of Chemistry to the Secretary's roll.

Mr. MACON. Have you transferred to the jurisdiction of this solicitor five law clerks?

Mr. SCOTT. They are already under his jurisdiction. This transfer is only of the salary paid to the appropriation where it is used.

Mr. MANN. May I ask the gentleman what authority is there for paying these law clerks out of the Bureau of Chemistry appropriations, and then transfer these clerks to the Secretary's office?

Mr. SCOTT. Well, I presume they were paid out of the appropriation for the Bureau of Chemistry upon the theory that the larger part of their work was made necessary by the fact that upon the Bureau of Chemistry was laid the enforcement of the pure-food law.

Mr. MANN. That is the bureau especially where the law clerks belong.

Mr. SCOTT. It was the opinion of your committee, inasmuch as the solicitor is carried on the Secretary's roll, and inasmuch as he and all the assistants in his office are doing work not only for the Bureau of Chemistry but for all the other bureaus of the department whenever called upon, that the force of the office ought to be carried on the Secretary's roll.

Mr. MANN. Well, does not the gentleman think that in the Bureau of Chemistry, which has the duty of enforcing and construing the pure-food law, there ought to be law clerks familiar with the law, specially devoted to the enforcement of the pure-food law? Is not that the one place where the law clerks belong and where the solicitor properly belongs? Were not these law clerks created for the purpose of enforcing the pure-food law, and did they have any existence before this pure-food law was enacted?

Mr. STAFFORD. The committee is following the practice that obtains in the other departments. For instance, in the Post-Office Department the law clerks and the Assistant Attorney-General are under the control of the Postmaster-General, while their work is mostly in the office of the Third Assistant Postmaster-General. I suppose this committee is following that idea of having them under one head.

Mr. MANN. The jurisdiction there is in the Attorney-General.

Mr. SCOTT. Answering the question of the gentleman from Illinois, I wish to suggest that the enforcement of the pure-food law so far as it rests upon the Bureau of Chemistry, relates only to "the examination of the specimens of foods and drugs" taken for examination by the department under the pure-food law. That is referred to the Bureau of Chemistry; but the legal part of the work, the executive part of the work, is under the direct supervision of the Secretary of Agriculture; and it seems to me, therefore, that it would not be necessary for the Bureau of Chemistry to have a law clerk who is subject to the direction of the chief of that bureau, because the chief of that bureau has nothing whatever to do with the execution of the law so far as is concerned with the preparation of the testimony to go into court or anything of that kind. His duty consists in determining, under the language of the pure-food law, the character of the food and drugs submitted to him for analysis.

So it seems to me entirely proper that the entire legal force of the department should be under one head, and that head should be the Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. MACON. I would like to ask the chairman of the committee a question, if he has finished answering the question of the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. SCOTT. I yield to the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. MACON. Was not this solicitor's position originally that of a law clerk?

Mr. SCOTT. It began in the department as a law clerk. Mr. MACON. And has he not been insisting upon an And has he not been insisting upon an increase of about $500 a year nearly every year since the office was created?

Mr. SCOTT. Oh, he began, as I recollect, with a salary of $2,500

Mr. MACON. And his salary has been increased nearly every year.

Mr. SCOTT. His salary has been increased from time to time.

Mr. MACON. In 1904 the position was created, and the salary has been increased practically $500 a year up to the present time.

Mr. LAMB. It is not yet up to the amount paid the other solicitors

Mr. SCOTT. It is still $500 below the salary paid the solicitors of all other departments. It has been below the salaries of other solicitors ever since the position was created, as a matter of fact.

Mr. MACON. I can not understand why it is that, because one solicitor or a number of solicitors may be getting larger salaries, perhaps, than the revenues of the country will justify just now, you should increase the salary of another more than the revenues will stand.

Mr. SCOTT. The gentleman from Arkansas has studied departmental customs in Washington to very poor effect, it seems to me, if he has not discovered a marked tendency on the part of the people employed in all these departments to have men bearing the same title paid the same salary.

Mr. MACON. And they are more interested in the salary than the title, are they not?

Mr. SCOTT. The gentleman says that. Mr. MACON. I am asking the question.

Is it not true that the work in that office has Mr. WEEKS.

practically doubled in the last five years?

Mr. SCOTT. The work in the office has a great deal more than doubled in the last five years. I tried to call attention in my opening statement to the extent to which it had been increased. The imposition upon the department of the enforcement of the pure-food law, of the twenty-eight-hour law (under which nearly 700 cases were brought last year), of the meatinspection law, and of other laws has very materially increased the work of that office.

Mr. MACON. My information is that while the work may have doubled, he has been given two assistants during that period of time.

Mr. SCOTT. He has been given more than two assistants. Mr. MACON. So he is not doing, perhaps, more than a third of the work he was doing originally, and his salary has been increased all the time.

Mr. SCOTT. The change is subject to a point of order, and if the gentleman intends to insist upon it, I do not care to protract the debate.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman reserve his point of order? Mr. MACON. I will reserve the point of order? I will reserve the point of order to allow the gentleman from Illinois to make a statement.

Mr. MANN. As the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. Scorr] has declined to yield for interruption, I will take the floor in my own time.

Mr. SCOTT. I beg the gentleman's pardon. cline to yield for interruptions; I simply desired without interruption to answer the question of the gentleman from Illinois. The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Illinois in his own right.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I do not know whether these five law clerks are now in the office of the solicitor, all of them. They were most of them appointed primarily for the purpose of the enforcement of the pure-food law. They are paid out of the appropriation for the pure-food law, and if they were not appointed for that purpose they are illegally employed, probably, which I do not apprehend is the case,

Under the arrangement for the enforcement of the pure-food law there is a board of food control, consisting of the solicitor, Mr. McCabe; the chief of the Bureau of Chemistry, Doctor Wiley; and Mr. Dunlap. All of the questions go first before the Bureau of Chemistry. They do not originate with the solicitor. They are first passed upon in the Bureau of Chemistry.

It is just as essential for the proper administration of the maw that there should be some one familiar with law-and familiar with the law-in the Bureau of Chemistry as there is that there should be some one in the Attorney-General's office familiar with law. I do not know that this is an improper transfer. I could not ascertain from the gentleman in reference to that, but there ought to be some one in the primary place where the investigation commences who has some knowledge of of law. I have had a number of cases come under my observation where cases were transferred from the Bureau of Chemistry to the board of control, and where the board of control permitted the case to pass through them and ordered a prosecution to commence that never was contemplated by the law or by the board; and when their attention was called to it the board has very promptly, and very properly, corrected the mistake, which originated, no doubt, because some one in the Bureau of Chemistry with a technical knowledge of chemistry passed upon the question without proper technical knowledge of law.

Mr. SCOTT rose.

Mr. MANN. I will yield to the gentleman.
Mr. SCOTT. The gentleman will remember that the solicitor is a member of the board of control.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman had listened to what I said at the beginning, he would have heard me state that the solicitor is a member of the board of control.

Mr. SCOTT. I wanted to refresh the gentleman's memory that he had made that statement, in order to show the inconsistency of his subsequent statement. If the solicitor of the department himself is a member of the board, how did it happen that the prosecutions were begun without the knowledge of the board?

Mr. MANN. I stated to the gentleman that the case passed through the board, having originated in the Bureau of Chemistry, without being detected in the board, whereas if the perwho had originally passed on this question in the Bureau of Chemistry had had a proper technical knowledge of the law they would never have passed through without anybody noticing

It seems to me that if they passed through the board of which the solicitor is a member they would pass through the hands of any law clerk presumably less well posted in the law.

Mr. MANN. I want to say that I am not making any criticism of the solicitor or the board of control for letting the cases go through sometimes, because I suppose that is inevitable.

Mr. SCOTT. I do not see how it could be prevented by having a law clerk in the Bureau of Chemistry.

Mr. MANN. I think if the Bureau of Chemistry had a law clerk in that bureau through which every case was passed, in addition to going through the hands of the technical chemical expert, there would be much less danger of passing a case through which ought not to go through.

But I do not wish to be understood at all as criticising the solicitor. I have criticised the solicitor in the past on the floor of this House, but as I have learned more about the work he does—although I do not agree with him in many particulars in reference to his opinions on the board of control—the more I learn in reference to his work the more I become satisfied that Mr. McCabe is an efficient, earnest, hard-working solicitor, and personally I believe that his salary ought to be increased, so far as the salary is concerned. Nor do I doubt that he ought to have some law clerks; but I would like to know, if I may, whether all five law clerks are in his office or whether some are transferred from the Bureau of Chemistry.

Mr. SCOTT. There never has been, to my knowledge, a law clerk in the Bureau of Chemistry. The chief has never asked the committee for such an official, and the Secretary has never recommended it; and I presume it has been the opinion of the Secretary that sufficient legal advice would be given that bureau by taking the solicitor himself onto the board.

Mr MANN. I may say to the gentleman that with that statement I do not see how he could do otherwise than to transfer them and not pay them out of the appropriation for the enforcement of the pure-food law; although I think there ought to be a solicitor or law clerk in the Bureau of Chemistry, who would pass on the questions when they first come into the

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I would like to make one observation before closing debate. I wish the House to distinctly understand that there is not now, and never has been, a law clerk in the Bureau of Chemistry. All the clerks now under consideration are employed at the present time in the solicitor's office, and have been there ever since their appointment. They connect with the Bureau of Chemistry only through the pay roll. At present they are cared for under a lump-sum appropriation for the Bureau of Chemistry. It was the opinion of the com-mittee that it was better administration to have these clerks paid from the appropriation of the office in which they are doing their work, than to have their salaries paid from the office in which they are not doing their work

These clerks are doing work for all the bureaus of the department-writing contracts, looking up cases, and things of that sort-and it would be impossible to separate the work they do for the Bureau of Chemistry from that which they do for other bureaus. It seems to me clear that they belong in the office of the Secretary, and your committee therefore recommends that that transfer be made.

Mr. DRISCOLL. What bureau were they carried in before? Mr. SCOTT. For the purpose of getting their salaries they were carried in the Bureau of Chemistry, but they were doing their work in the solicitor's office.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Were they classified as law clerks?

Mr. SCOTT. Yes; under the lump sum of the Bureau of Chemistry

Mr. MANN. They were classified as clerks?
Mr. SCOTT. Possibly.

Mr. DRISCOLL. They were not classified as law clerks?

Mr. SCOTT. I am not certain as to their exact classification.

My recollection is they were classified as law clerks.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, I was to some extent brought up in a school of economy, and was taught that the best way to administer the affairs of any free government was to do it economically and honestly; to do it on the same principle that intelligent business men conduct their private affairs; and I have not outgrown my raising. If during a period of prosperity a great business enterprise were organized with several branches, and each branch had a manager, and a period of revenue de-pression were to set in afterwards, and the enterprise were to begin to run behind millions of dollars every year, spending millions of dollars more than its profits amounted to, do you think it would be wise for it to further exploit its revenues by entering upon a policy of increasing the salaries of its managers? Undoubtedly not.

Let us suppose that during the period of prosperity some of the managers from some cause had had their salaries raised a few hundred dollars above the salaries that some of the other managers were receiving. Does the House believe it would be wise while the enterprise was running in debt millions of dollars each year to have it enter upon a system of increasing the salaries of the other managers simply to bring them up to the amount paid the higher salaried managers? I think not. I can not believe the House will insist that that would be a proper thing to do.

Now that this Government is running behind millions of dollars each year, I think it is time for it to retrench. I understand its deficit will be approximately $150,000,000 the next fiscal year. I am advised that during the first seven months of the present fiscal year we have run behind something like $75,000,000; and that being the case, I can not understand why we, as Representatives of the people, should be called upon to increase the salaries of those officers who are not receiving quite as much, perhaps, as some others in their class are receiving, and in that way further distress the financial condition of the country. We all remember that a few years ago, when we had the war with Spain, we were taxed upon every legal instrument that was written or recorded and upon many other things of everyday use; and, sirs, if we go on exceeding our revenues by $150,000,000, $100,000,000, or $50,000,000 a year even, it will only be a question of a few years when we will have to resort to that kind of taxation again or else place some other kind of additional tax burden upon the people in order to raise revenues sufficient to support the Government. I rebel against so unhappy a contemplation as that, Mr. Chairman, and I insist upon a point of order against the words "five hundred," in lines 11 and 12, on the first page of the bill, and in line 9 of the second

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I concede that the point of order as to the solicitor and the inspector is well taken, being the point of order insisted upon by the gentleman from Arkansas.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order. Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to have the Clerk make the necessary correction in the bill, and in all totals, as the bill proceeds.

The CHAIRMAN. Unless objection is heard, it will be so ordered.

There was no objection. The Clerk read as follows:

WEATHER BUREAU.

Salaries, office of Chief of Weather Bureau: One chief of bureau, $6,000; 1 assistant chief of bureau, $3,000; 1 chief clerk, $2,250; 4 chiefs of division, at $2,000 each; 1 librarian, $2,000; 7 clerks, class 4; 7 clerks, class 3; 18 clerks, class 2; 27 clerks, class 1; 18 clerks, at $1,000 each; 9 clerks, at $900 each; 4 copylists or typewriters, at $840 each; 1 copylist or typewriter, $720; 2 assistant foremen of division, at $1,600 each; 1 proof reader, $1,400; 1 lchlef mechanic, $1,400; 1 lithographers, at $1,250 each; 2 pressmen, at $1,250 each; 10 compositors, at $1,250 each; 1 skilled mechanic, $1,200; 6 skilled mechanics, at $1,000; each; 2 pressmen, at $1,200; 6 skilled mechanics, at $1,000; 6 skilled artisans, at $840 each; 5 messengers or laborers, at $720 each; 3 firemen, at $720 each; 4 watchmen, at $720 each; 6 messengers or laborers, at $660 each; 13 messengers, messenger boys, or laborers, at $600 each; 4 messengers, messenger boys, or laborers, at $600 each; 4 messengers, messenger boys, or laborers, at $600 each; 13 messengers, at $450 each; 1 charwoman, $360; 3 charwomen, at $240 each; in all, $205,310.

Mr. EDWARDS of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on the paragraph, particularly on the provision for the salary of $6,000 to the chief of that bureau.

SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, the point is, of course, taken if it is insisted upon, but I really hope that it will not be pressed, because there seemed to your committee to be very strong reasons why this increase should be made. The present Chief of the Weather Bureau has been a member of that bureau for thirty-two years. He has been its chief for sixteen years, and during those sixteen years he has conducted its affairs with such signal ability that the Weather Bureau of the United States undoubtedly now stands in the very front rank of similar organizations the world over and is looked to from every other country in the world as a model for such organizations.

The chief of this bureau stands on a different footing also from the other chiefs of bureaus in the department, in that he alone is appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate, and in the absence of the Secretary and the Assistant Secretary he is the acting secretary for the department. A great deal of responsibility rests upon him, and he discharges his duty with marked ability. He has been long in the service, and the committee thinks that the promotion now granted is not unreasonable. I wish to say that in the event the point is not pressed and his salary is allowed to stand at the figure fixed by the committee, I shall favor an amendment to the effect that the additional thousand dollars shall go with the office only so long as it is held by the present incumbent. I do not care to say anything further. Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I want to say this about the Weather Service. I notice that the appropriation proposed here is $154,000 less than the appropriation made last year for this service. It is true there is a considerable saving in reference to the rebuilding at Mount Weather and elsewhere. It is also true, I think, from my own knowledge of the situation, that this service is the most economically administered service with the work that has been done in the governmental service anywhere; that the chief of that service is more careful about the expenditure of money; that he gets the best results from the expenditure of money, and gives way a fewer number of times to extravagances than any other chief in the service; and it seems to me-if I can have the attention of the gentleman from Georgia, to whom I am addressing these remarks

Mr. EDWARDS of Georgia. The gentleman has my earnest attention.

Mr. MANN. It seems to me it would be worth a good many thousands of dollars if Congress would advertise that where a bureau chief insists not only upon economy in the service under him, but himself exercises economy in making his appointments and does not ask for excessive appropriations, that in such a case we will slightly increase his salary. I think that under the circumstances the chief of this service is worth the money for the work that he has done. There is this fact in addition. I may say: The Weather Service is a service that constantly requires the presence of the chief of the bureau late at night. For years he was supplied with horses and vehicles, and his horses and vehicles, as far as government service is concerned, went the way of other higher officers than he who had the same class of vehicles; and he is required now, at his own personal expense, to maintain these horses and vehicles for the public use. and I know of no other government official in Washington who

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I want to join with my friend from Illinois in urging my colleague, if he can, to withdraw his point of order. I know this gentleman is entitled to all that has been said about him. I think the increase of salary is just and proper, and I hope my colleague can see his way clear to withdraw the point of order.

Mr. CANDLER. Mr. Chairman, I want to say a word along the line suggested by the gentleman from Georgia who has just taken his seat. I do not believe that we could get a man of the accomplishments and the ability of the Chief of this Weather Bureau for the amount of money he is now receiving if he did not have some patriotism as well as the desire for emolument for connection with this service. He is one of the most efficient public servants that this Government has ever had. As is well public servants that this Government has ever had. As is well known by the membership on the floor of this House, I, as a rule, do not favor an increase of salary very much; on the contrary, I have always heretofore opposed it. But believing that this is a just increase, I think it is a fit and proper recognition of great ability and of faithful service, and therefore I hope my friend will withdraw his point of order.

Mr. EDWARDS of Georgia. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I regret that I can not see my way clear to withdraw the point of order, as the gentlemen who have just spoken request me. I regret that I can not see it as they do. I feel that I must perform my duty here as a legislator.

I want to state my reasons for interposing this point of order. The bill provides that the Secretary of Agriculture shall receive $12,000 per annum. He is provided with an assistant at $5,000. Now, it is proposed to raise the salary of the Chief of the Weather Bureau from $5,000 to $6,000 per annum. The Chief of the Bureau of Animal Industry receives $5,000 per annum; the Chief of the Bureau of Plant Industry receives $5,000, and he has a chief clerk who does an abundance of work, and he gets only $2,250 per annum. The Chief of the Bureau of Forestry receives $5,000. The Chief of the Bureau of Chemistry receives $5,000. The Chief of the Bureau of Soils gets the pitiful sum of $3,500. The Chief of the Bureau of Entomology receives $4,000. The Chief of the Bureau of Biological Survey receives only $3,000. The Chief of the Division of Accounts and Disbursements receives $3,250. The Chief of the Bureau of Statistics receives $4,000. The Director of the Office of Public Roads receives $4,000.

Now, my position is: If we are going to increase salaries, we ought to increase the small ones first. We have just as competent men in the positions I have named with the lower salaries, some of them getting only $3,000 per annum. I am decidedly in favor of increasing the salaries of those officials of this department who are at present allowed only small amounts for their compensation. They are deserving gentlemen and filling important positions, and when we go to raising salaries

I favor looking after the smaller ones first.

I have not a word of criticism to offer against the Chief of the Weather Bureau, not a word; but, for example, here is the Director of the Office of Public Roads-at the head of one of the most important branches of the Agricultural Department—and he is receiving only $3,000 a year. We have to have competent men in these positions, and I think we have competent men in all of these bureaus, and we should pay them salaries of competent men and try to elevate the agricultural interest. It is far from me to strike one dollar from this bill intended for the benefit of the Agricultural Department, but in this case the salary that is now allowed to this able and efficient official is far in excess of that received by many of the chiefs in the Agricultural Department. If the Government has any money to place to the increase of salaries, I favor the increase of those who at present have the smaller salaries.

I feel it my duty, under the circumstances, to insist upon the point of order.

In former reports we have laid much stress on the importance of our forests and especially on the necessity for their preservation and proper use. As timber in the country decreases its value increases and its importance as a conservator of water supply more clearly appears. Many things have transpired during the year just closed to especially call our attention more pointedly than ever before to these matters. During the year 1908, two notable conferences were held at Washington, presided over by the President of the United States. These conferences were attended by nearly all the governors of the States, members of the Supreme Court of the United States. Cabiet officers, United States Senators and Members of Congress, presidents of colleges, agricultural and forestry schools, engineers, representatives of scientific societies, and many others, among whom were such notable personages as Mr. J. J. Hill and Mr. Andrew Carnegie. The facts produced and discussed by learned men at those conferences attracted the attention and startled the whole citizenship of this Republic. Through discussion had there the reports on facts collected by the National Conservation Commission, by the efforts of its members and state departments, all who read have been made aware of the importance and value of our national resources. The people are becoming comizant of the ominous conditions prevalent on every hand, the rapid diminution, the threatened shortage, and the disastrous results that invariably follow the destruction of a country's forests.

Then, foo, during the last summer and autumn a long protracted drought prevailed. The water in many streams dried up, fires sprang up everywhere as by magic, the timber growth on forest land, in spite of the most strenous efforts to protect it, was destroyed, and milions of dollars' worth of woodland propologo.

Then, foo, during the last summer and autumn a long protracted from the large resulting injury to reforestation that can not be well appeared to the most disastrous from which the

ADIRONDACKS AND CATSKILLS.

The following comparative statement of forest fires during 1908 with those of 1903, when the forest-fire loss reached its maximum, is interesting and instructive. The results attest the greater efficiency of this department as now administered.

	1903.	1908.
Number of fires	377	700
Acres of timber land burned	312,590 187,928	30,400 147,000

Total	883,116	643,986
Cost of fighting fires	153,000	138,000

These figures are very significant. The period of drought was more severe and considerably longer in 1908 than in 1903, thereby making the fire danger much greater and affording what was probably the most favorable condition for conflagrations ever known in the Adirondack region. Please note the larger number of fires in 1908, yet the acreage burned over was less than two-fifths of that of 1903, the loss one-fourth less, and the cost of fighting fire $15,000 less.

These results can not be explained, in view of the infinitely worse conditions of the past year, except by greater departmental activity and volunteer work done by individuals. An important factor was that for the first time we had established a thorough patrol on the railroads, whereby over 500 incipient fires were extinguished before serious damage was done. Many of these fires are not included in the above tabulation. Yet, as already said, there were 83 fires started along railroad lines which resulted seriously. There seems to be no good reason for the provision of law that requires the State to pay one-half of the cost of patrolling railroads. The condition is created by railroad companies and should be cared for by railroad companies. In order to get them patrolled, the State should have the right to put the patrols on as necessity requires, and the railroad companies should pay for the work necessary to protect the forests from fire from this cause.

Reasonable provision has never been made to protect our forests from Reasonable provision has never been made to protect our forests from fire. Fires are the one great danger. The cause and opportunity for fires, so far as possible, must be eliminated. That this may be done, a system of paid patrols should be established. For this work, only the best men will suffice. They ought to be well paid so that good men may be secured. The commission should have a free hand in selecting them. They should have ample authority to enforce their orders. Danger from fire is so imminent, the necessity for preservation so great, that, at whatever cost it may entail, railroad companies operating within the forest preserve of the State should be compelled to use some substitute for coal for fuel; something that will not create fire to be thrown from grates or stacks into the dry, powder-like growth that abounds along their rights of way. Plainly, it is a question of change in this respect or no forests. There ought to be no question about our choice, and no hesitancy about putting it into operation.

If the fuel question was eliminated, the problem would be much simplified. As in Vermont, a law should be enacted giving the governor authority to suspend the hunting season in time of drought, prohibiting hunters and campers from going into the forests. Ninety-five fires were set by hunters, 27 by campers, 18 by fishermen; 120 in all from these causes. All of this danger should be eliminated and severe penalties imposed on those who carelessly or negligently set or cause fires to start. In fact, every instrumentality should be given and applied to prevent forest fires. In fact, ev forest fires.

In fact, every instrumentality should be given and applied to prevent forest fires.

During last year in the United States, more timber was cut for commercial purposes than ever before in a given year. The total cut amounts to more than 41,000,000,000 feet board measure. Following close upon the heels of this great destruction in tree growth is the constant decreasing supply of water in our streams, greatly reducing the availability of many mills and factories, lessening their productiveness, distressing the people in many municipalities of the State by the shortage of pure water supply, affecting agricultural land to a marked degree, and gradually reducing the available water horsepower in nearly every mountain stream in the country.

Coincident with this rapid destruction of natural resources our population in the nation is augmenting so rapidly that, in fifty years, we will number at least 200,000,000 souls. The demand for lumber is increasing faster than our population, and the supply is decreasing faster than the increase of population.

In our last report we called attention to some of these facts and urged upon the people the immediate necessity of doing all in their power to conserve and restore these resources, so bountifully bestowed and so prodigally used. We now renew those suggestions. We again urge the necessity for a change in our law that will permit of better management.

The avenues of escape from a condition that will surely confront and and so prodigally used. We now renew those suggestions. We again urge the necessity for a change in our law that will permit of better management.

The avenues of escape from a condition that will surely confront and menace near future generations, though few, are plain and easy to follow. This observation at present applies to private land. Timber on state land under the present constitution, unfortunately, can not be cared for in a practical manner nor cut or used. We can only protect it from trespass and let it rot. We can not clean it out when burned or down ripe and old. The public can not have the use of timber that is fast depreciating in value, thereby shortening the supply, adding to the demand, and increasing the price. We can not utilize our enormous water power, which should yield to the State a large annual revenue. We can not, without great cost, reasonably protect our forests from fires, because of the thousands of fire traps left by lumbermen, by other fires and windfalls, ready for the spark from the locomotive, the carelessly left camp fire, or cast by lighted match. For these reasons, regulations suggested apply to private property, and will so apply until the State's property can be handled under an amended constitution in a more sensible and businesslike way.

It is the belief of this department that the State has ample inherent power to control the use of private property in such a way that public interests may be best served and protected. The power in the State for this purpose should be invoked to prevent in certain localities the cutting of trees below 10 inches in diameter and to compel the clearing up of refuse. This is a matter of regulation and may be done for the public good without the confiscation of private property. If this right to control private property to some extent does exist, then no one should be allowed to cut trees—at least in certain places where water sources would be affected—below 10 inches in diameter, and individuals should be compelled to clean up the débris removing opportunity for fires. The law should permit state property to be protected in the same way, at least so far as to remove the danger from fires.

To encourage tree planting for commercial purposes, it should be made as attractive as possible by legislative acts, encouraging thereby each one to plant trees who has a waste acre of land fairly safe from fires. Trees should be furnished below cost, and land dedicated to tree growing and planted ought to be exempt from taxation. These are the lines to follow, and the only ones that seem to lead to safety.

The State owns many acres of land outside of the blue line in the 16 counties in which our forest preserve lies. These lands are detached, widely separated, small parcels surrounded by private holdings, difficult to protect, most if not all of them having been lumbered. It would be wise to dispose of these parcels of land by sale, the proceeds to be used to purchase land within the blue line, or to exchange them for equally valuable lands inside the park limits and thereby consolidate our holdings. Under the constitution, this can not now be done. To us there appears no good business reason why the commission should not have this authority. To exchange or sell these lands would be that which any prudent man would do with his own property under like conditions.

Forests, if rightly used and managed, perform for the people certain definite and important offices. The more important ones may be enumerated as follows:

They constitute a home and breeding place for game animals and birds; they protect the source of water supply and regulate, to a great extent, the continued and even flow of water. By protecting the water supply fish life is sustained, pure water is insured, the soil is better irrigated and made more productive. Woods help to regulate the temperature, and, it is believed, have an appreciable effect in increasing rainfall in certain localities. They act as wind-breakers; they add oxygen to the air and purify it. One of their most important office the Constitution was literally enforced, no one could cut a stick of wood for a campfire; no one could cut a stick on which to hang a camp kettle. In many long reaches of the forest there would be no place where shelter could be found. A tent could not be staked down unless the stakes were carried in from other lands. The Constitution, with all the good intentions of its builders, with all the needs at the time for a restrictive provision in this respect, established a park and forest preserve for the people, built it round with a high wall, with a few excellent people inside, but left the great majority on the outside of the wall unable even to look in and see its great natural beauty and enjoy its manifold blessings.

The present law will not permit putting state forest land on a safe business basis. Under a slightly amended constitutional provision, leaving it absolutely safeguarded as to waste and improper use, it could be reasonably used by all, protected from fire, and made to yield an annual revenue through the utilization of the water, the removal of waste timber, and from rentals from those who tenant it. This arrangement would provide maintenance without further appropriation, and annually against the many? Are not. The following a special provide maintenance without further appropriation, and annually against the many? Are not. The following a special provide maintenance without further appropriation, and annually against the many? Are not. The protect water sources, while the water runs away unemployed, except to sustain fish life and water the lowlands, then the present method is right. If our forest preserves are to be used as well for those other and more valuable purposes, then the present method of using, holding, and managing our woodlands is all wrong.

The impracticability of the present law, which prevents realizing to the fullest extent upon this valuable natural asset, the woodland and water supply of the State, is illustrated by the situation at the proposed groet Ashokan reservoir. It i commend itself to every thoughtful person.

SUGGESTIONS AND RECOMMENDATIONS.

In view of the existing conditions and the facts hereinbefore stated, the following suggestions are made:

First. It would seem to be reasonable that the constitution should be amended to provide for the sale or exchange of land outside of the blue line as necessity may require and the interests of the State warrant, the proceeds received by sale or exchange to be applied to acquiring land within the blue line.

Second. It would also seem reasonable that the constitution should be amended in such a way that the commission may lease small tracts of land under strict regulations and forfeiture clauses for permanent cottage and camp sites. In that way a very large annual revenue may be obtained, many more people would visit and enjoy the forests, and each one investing money for such a purpose would necessarily become an interested forest protector.

Third. If the constitution was amended in a way to allow a well-defined good-road system of a few main highways to be built through the forest reserve on plans to be approved by this department, to the end that the forest may be more accessible, that more of our people may visit the Adirondack and Catskill regions and have a chance to see and enjoy their great beauty, it would be beneficial in many ways. The roads would be fire breaks, and furnish a quicker and better way to reach many sections now inaccessible and difficult to protect.

Fourth. If the constitution does not now admit of removing dead and down timber and to abate threatening conditions to lessen the danger from fire, it should be amended to allow the State itself, from time to time, to do so.

Fifth. In view of the physical conditions and the facts elicited by the Water Storage Commission, it would seem that the Constitution should be amended to allow the construction of water storage reservoirs under state control and regulation within the Adirondack and Catskill counties, and that a general state policy of water storage res servation is intimately connected with and affected by forest conservation.

Sixth. In relation to forest fires, I offer the suggestions in the form of resolutions adopted by a conference of 40 men, who represented nearly all the business interests of the forest preserve counties, and among whom were eminent lawyers, members of the last constitutional convention, and men of broad experience from many sections of the State. The conference was held at the commissioner's office December 29, 1908, and suggestions are as follows:

a. "Resolved, That it is the sense of this conference that if it be necessary to secure the use of oil fuel or other equally safe source of power on locomotive engines running through the forest, legislation should be enacted or executive action taken.

b. "That the railroad companies be made to pay the whole cost of patrolling their tracks under State supervision instead of one-half, as at present.

c. "That adequate moneys be provided to the forest, fish, and game commission for the establishment of a more complete and systematic fire patrol and signal system and, if necessary, legislation be enacted for that purpose.

d. "That more stringent laws be enacted for the punishment of persons through whose carelessness or negligence forest fires start.

e. "That the governor be empowered to suspend the hunting and fishing season in case of emergency."

Seventh. There should be a law enacted under which the State may control the cutting of trees on private land and clearing up and disposal of the refuse left after lumbering, to the end that danger from fires may be minimized and the forest cover may be retained to protect the watershed and conserve the water supply. This suggestion is based upon the belief that the State has the inherent right, at least in a limited way, to control the use and management of private property for the public good. This principle has been asserted and established by the highest court in Maine and in at least two other States, and seems to be sound doctrine.

Eighth. The rapidly increasing business of the department will require a larger office force, more foresters, and larger appropriations with which to hire power boats. It also seems that the time has come when the State, with the department's greatly increased revenue, can well afford to establish a modern game-bird farm, from which our depleted covers may be stocked.

Ninth. Appropriations for the department will necessarily have to meet the department's activities as new lines of work develop.

We submit this annual report with the satisfaction of knowing that better work was done during the year 1908 than ever before, and with the belief that, in view of the general awakening among all citizens of the State and Nation to the necessity for better protection for forests, fish, and game, advancement in these respects should be more rapid in the future than it has been in the past.

To avoid this error should be your first care, since it can have no effect upon a public that has learned to discount all so-called "official utterances" that are not germane to the body from which they issue and the subject to which they are supposed or pretend to relate; and since a wide scattering of subjects must prevent that full discussion of work and interests which alone can make it worth while for you to assemble in gatherings such as this germane to the body from which they issue and the subject to which they are supposed or pretend to relate; and since a wide scattering of subjects must prevent that full discussion of work and interests which alone can make it worth while for you to assemble in gatherings such as this.

For this reason I will confine myself very closely in what I have to say to the present state of the agricultural interest in this country; to the emergencies which ordinary foresight can distinguish in its near future; and to those remedies and improvements which our knowledge suggests, and which are not merely experimental, but ascertained fact. What we are here for is to consider how to increase the farmer's successes, lessen his failures, and place his work upon the most certain foundation. His occupation is the first to exist in a civilized state. It is the basis of all other industry. And only recently we are coming to realize that it is an exact science. The man no longer deserves the name of farmer who conceives of his industry as a scratching of the earth, a hit-or-miss scattering of seed, and a harvesting of such yield as soil and weather may permit. That is not farming, but a game of chance. This is, therefore, a gathering of representatives of a profession, and as such it is a first duty to consider the place of farm industry in the national economy, and to what extent it is prepared to meet present and future demands upon it. For grave national concerns, the state of civilizations, the condition of social life, and the fate of institutions, as well as the farmer's position and prosperity, will depend upon his readiness to meet the work surely coming in the advancing years.

After an army has been raised and before it can enter upon any campiler, the bravest and best-organized force will melt away in a week. Our national supply of food, in like manner, is fundamental to the organization of our social life and to the progress of all our industries. Here we have so many people. Here will be, in a few years, so many mor

Where and how are we to obtain loaves enough to feed these coming millions?

The average yearly consumption of wheat per capita varies considerably with seasons and prices, but it rises steadily with our constantly advancing standard of comfort. For the last three years it has been either slightly under or slightly over 7 bushels for bread and seed. Suppose that it is 6½ bushels per capita, which is certainly within the mark. It will then require, unless we are to fall to a lower scale of living, a total product of 1,300,000,000 bushels of wheat for our bread supply, if we did not export any. From 1880 to 1906, inclusive, our crop averaged 521,738,000 bushels annually. Twice only in our history have we exceeded the 700,000,000 bushel mark. It is fair to say that 650,000,000 bushels is our present average capacity. Of course, with increasing population may come a somewhat increased total production, though it will not advance as rapidly as many suppose. We grew 504,185,470 bushels in 1882, when our population was a little over 52,000,000, and 634,087,000 bushels in 1907, twenty-five years later. The increase in wheat yield during these years, when much of the new lands of the West was being brought under the plow, was a little over 25 per cent, while population increased 33,000,000, or over 63 per cent. Obviously supply and demand for bread will not move the increase of possible wheat yield by increasing acreage is limited. We have no longer an unlimited public domain awaiting the property of the sone land drained, and there are a few acres of public land; this is mostly devoted to the raising of truit and fodder plants. There will be some land drained, and there are a few acres of public land; the some land drained, and there are a few acres of public land; the some land drained, and it is more likely, on the whole, that the wheat acreage will be reduced, for raising all the other commodities out the property of the p ufacture. With 60 per cent ore, where 5 tons go to the making of 3 tons of pig, this makes the actual cost of the iron $11.66 per ton. Fifty per cent ore makes iron costing $14 per ton. Forty per cent ore makes iron costing $17.50 per ton. Low-grade ores, like those of the Southern States, can be used commercially because the ore, limestone, and coal are found in close proximity, thus reducing the cost of manufacture.

a tons of pit, this makes the action town of the normal pit per control pit per cont

30,000,000 or more persons who cultivate the land in this country is the problem. It is no longer one of method. Science has settled that and is adding more and more of value every year. It is merely how to move the farmer to apply to his own profit and the rescue of the Nation the better methods that are a familiar story.

It should appeal to him that the modern system is both a money-maker and a labor saver. The cost of rent and production for continuous wheat cropping averages $7.50 per acre. When, therefore, the farmer cotains, as so many of those in the Northwest do, a yield of 8 or 10 bushels per acre, it just about meets, at average farm prices, the cost of production, leaving him either nothing at all for his year's toil or else a margin of debt. For the same amount of labor, covering the same time but intelligently applied to a smaller area, he might easily produce by improved methods 20 bushels per acre, leaving him a profit of over $12. The not unreasonable yield of 28 bushels would not him $20, which is 10 per cent on a valuation of $200 per acre for his land. This gigantic waste, applying the same measure to the production of the entire country, is going on every year. If such associations as this Congress can stop it, it will pay for building two Panama canals every year; it will in two years more than pay the estimated expenses of improving every available waterway in the United States; it will save more money to the farmer than the railroads could if they carried all his grain to market free of charge.

What is true of wheat is true of all the other products of the farm. The splendid work done in this State where we are met is to the point. The average yield of corn in Wisconsin has been raised, by the application of scientific methods, from 27 to 47 bushels per acre. The new value thus created in a single State for a single year amounts to about $15,000,000. I need not go into other details, because they are similar in kind and anyone may examine them for himself. Such increase of the national tentiaries.

The Netherlands is a still more closely compacted population of 5,672,237 on an area of 12,648 square miles, or 448 per square mile. The advantage of this is that it forces small holdings and a more thorough tillage. The average wheat yield in the Netherlands is 34.18 bushels as against our 14; she produces an average of 53.1 bushels of oats per acre, where we are satisfied with 23.7 bushels in 1907, and an average of less than 30 bushels for the preceding ten years; her farmers gather 232 bushels of potatoes from every acre so planted, while in this country, with soil capable of fabulous yields, we took in 95.4 bushels last year and averaged a trifle less than 96 bushels for the last six years. The difference between 95 bushels and 230 bushels, at 50 cents a bushel, is over $60 per acre. Rather a heavy loss to pay for poor farming. It is not to be wondered at that the Netherlands, hardly larger than a big county out West, after deducting enough for home consumption, exported more than $140,000,000 worth of cereals, flour, butter, and cheese, and that her people do not have to pay any poor rates.

home consumption, exported more than $140,000,000 worth of cereals, flour, butter, and cheese, and that her people do not have to pay any poor rates.

To such a height we can bring the productivity of many of our own fields. When we have done so, and only then, will the specters that haunt our future vanish, and the questions that it now puts to us receive an answer worthy of men careful of their future and thoughtful for their race. Every respectable authority on agriculture in the country will indorse this statement. But at present we are doing little practically, out on the land, among the farmers, to accomplish the change, the revolution in ideas and methods that is involved.

It seems to me that this is the paramount duty and mission of an organization such as this. It could well afford to throw aside most other issues presented for its consideration, refuse to spend time upon alien or abstract questions, and concentrate its energies and resources upon a campaign for better farming in the United States. For, indeed, this reform makes way slowly. It required over half a century in Great Britain to bring it about, although alded by the influence of the great landed proprietors. It is no new doctrine in this country. I have been urging the essentials of better farming upon our whole people at every opportunity for more than twenty-five years. In all the agricultural colleges of the country it is taught. Farmers' institutes have done much to make it known. And still bad methods, soil exhaustion, skimming the cream of the land by single cropping, are the rule instead of the exception. The once matchless fields of the Northwest are deteriorating. The average wheat yield has fallen on some of our best land from 25 bushels or more to about 12. Something must be done to reverse the process. By constant iteration of well-established truths, by the appeal to self-interest, since the farmer can double his own gains for the same labor, by endiess agitation and patient instruction the work may be accomplished. That it m means to purchase it for our own population. The larmers of the Nation must save it in the future, as they have built its greatness in the past.

My suggestion, then, would be that each one of you individually and this association as a whole subordinate every activity to the educative idea; that you expend energy and resources without stint upon spreading everywhere a knowledge of the necessity, the feasibility, and the financial profit of improved farming methods. Work with your Senators and Representatives, and with your state legislatures, if necessary, for the establishment of model farms in every congressional district, and if possible in every agricultural county in your respective States. Nothing would be so effective as this practical object lesson. Every slack farmer would see the contrast between its fields and his own. Every man with a germ of intelligence would get more ideas and facts and insight into methods and the reason for them in a year by living as a neighbor to a well-run model farm, conducted by an expert in agriculture, than he would in a lifetime from reading books or listening to stump speeches. Above everything else, send your boys and girls, and insist that the farmers whom you know and can influence shall send theirs, to the agricultural colleges where modern systems of tillage are taught.

The opportunity is ample. There are 63 colleges and universities now receiving aid under acts of Congress as a condition of maintaining a course in agriculture. Keep them, if you possibly can, good agricultural schools, and save them from the temptation of trying to ape the airs of the university. They are to-day the most useful, the most fruitful educational institutions in the country. See that the children of the farm go where they will not be taught to despise the soil or long for a future freed from its labors, but will learn the fact, now being fully understood, that the right kind of farming offers scope for the keenest intelligence, occupation for the most active brain, and opportunity and reward for the highest ambition.

After all it is to the next generation mainly that we must look for the transformation of our greatest and most vital industry, though something may be done with this. In both fields, the man who assumes to be the farmer's friend or hold his interests dear will constitute himself a missionary of the new dispensation. It is an act of patriotic service to the country. It is a contribution to the welfare of all humanity, and will strengthen the pillars of a government that must otherwise waver in some popular upheaval when the land shall no longer sustain the multiplying children that its bosom bears. It is a high commission that is offered to you. By accepting it you will confer new dignity, worth, and satisfaction upon the calling in whose name you are gathered here, and help to garner health and comfort and happiness and an opportunity greater than our own for the coming millions, who are no strangers or invaders, but our own children's children, who will pass judgment upon us according to what we have made of the world in which their lot is to be cast.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amend-

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

Line 24, page 3, after the word "bureau," insert the word "five;" and after the word "dollars" add the words "$1,000 additional while the office is held by the present incumbent."

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, I have a few words Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BURLESON. This position is the only one in the department that is

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order. Mr. BURLESON. It is too late; I was on my feet and addressing the committee on the amendment before the point of order was raised.

Mr. MACON. I was on my feet at the same time; I was on my feet before the gentleman started to speak.

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman from Arkansas was on his feet trying to receive recognition, then the Chair must rule that he was in time.

Mr. MACON. I insist that the moment the last word of the amendment fell from the Clerk's lips I reserved a point of

Mr. BURLESON. I want to submit an appeal to the gentle-man from Arkansas [Mr. Macon] not to press the point of order. I do not subscribe to the proposition, though, that the point of order was reserved in time, but I will not take advantage of it. If the gentleman wants to reserve a point of order, I am perfectly willing that he should do it.

Mr. MACON. Does the gentleman question my statement?
Mr. BURLESON. I say that if the gentleman wants to reserve the point, I am perfectly willing that he should do so.
However, I want to submit this suggestion to the gentleman from Arkansas, the Chief of the Weather Bureau is the only bureau chief in the Department of Agriculture who, under the law, can be called to act as Secretary in the absence of the Secretary. I want to direct his attention to the fact that in every other department in the Government where an assistant secretary or any other official under law can be called to act in the capacity of secretary, that assistant or other official receives a salary in excess of $5,000. As a matter of fact, Professor Moore is the only bureau chief in the Department of Agriculture who can in the absence of his chief act under the law in his stead.

In every instance, in other departments, those who, under law, can act as Secretary are receiving a higher salary than is paid Professor Moore. Six thousand dollars is the minimum salary paid for this service. Now, I submit to the gentleman from Arkansas that this is a discrimination against this particular I appeal to the gentleman's sense of fairness. right that in the Department of Agriculture alone the official who acts as Secretary shall receive a smaller compensation than is allowed in every other department? In the light of this fact, I want to ask the gentleman if he will not withdraw the point of order?

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, I notice here on the first page of this bill a provision providing for an-Assistant Secretary of Agriculture, at $5,000.

Now, if he is not the proper official to take the place of the Secretary, instead of Mr. Moore, and does not take the place of the Secretary during his absence, then I would like to know what he is designated and appropriated for?

Mr. BURLESON. I will say to the gentleman that, so far as I am concerned, I have no objection to the increase of the salary of the Assistant Secretary; but that does not overturn the point

I make, namely, that in no other department but the Agricultural Department, where an official can be called upon to act as Secretary, does that official receive less than $6,000.

Mr. MACON. I think you are attempting to discriminate against the Assistant Secretary and against the other chiefs of bureaus of this department when you attempt to increase the salary of this officer. I want to say further, Mr. Chairman, I have felt called upon to act in this matter, that the gentleman from Texas ought himself to have very little respect for me if when I say that I am opposed to and have consistently opposed the increase of all salaries of all the officers of the Government when the revenues of the country are so depleted that they will not justify anything of the kind, if I were to allow this salary to be increased while I oppose the increase of others; if I were to make fish of one and fowl of

Mr. BURLESON. If the gentleman will permit, if I can show a discrimination being practiced against this department, surely that is a consideration that ought to weigh with the gentleman. Mr. MACON. I can not see how any discrimination could be practiced against anyone who has for sixteen long years re-ceived a fine salary at the hands of his employer, without any expense whatever to himself to obtain it, without any expense or trouble of travel, without having to leave the place of his employment, without having to be deprived of the society and comforts of home and family-I can not see, to save my life, how a man who has been served by his Government in this way for sixteen years can say he is discriminated against because Congress refuses to increase his salary at a time when it is not proper for it to increase salaries. Again, I have not been able to see where the discrimination comes in. This gentleman is performing the duties of his office satisfactorily, no doubt. But the same may be said of many other employees of the Government. It seems, Mr. Chairman, that the officer or employee whose salary it is proposed to increase is the very best officer or employee in the service of the Government. I undertake to say now that if some one were to move to increase the salary of the Chief of the Bureau of Plant Industry that he would be proclaimed-

Mr. MANN. It ought to be increased, too-

Mr. MACON (continuing). To be the best officer in the service of the Government.

Mr. MANN. And would not be wrong in saying it. Mr. MACON. I do not know that they would, but it would be the same with anyone else whose salary any Member of the House might propose to increase. If you can show where there is any discrimination against this gentleman, I am ready to be shown. I have not been up to this time.

Mr. BURLESON. I take the gentleman at his word.

Mr. MACON. I do not ask you to take it.
Mr. BURLESON. I take the gentleman at his word on that proposition. The gentleman evidently did not understand what I said, or he would certainly not so propose. There is no other department of the Government where in the absence of the Secretary the official who is called upon under the law to act for such Secretary is not receiving $6,000 or more.

Mr. MACON. Here is one right before me. The Assistant Secretary, who has to act in the absence of the Secretary-he does not receive but $5,000.

Mr. BURLESON. That is the very point I am making; a discrimination is being practiced against all these officials in the Agricultural Department.

Mr. MACON. Here is the Assistant Secretary of Agriculture. who is only getting $5,000, as stated a moment ago; and when you offer to raise this other salary you discriminate against him.

Mr. Chairman, consistency and economy demand that I insist upon the point of order. [Applause.]

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman reserve the point of order?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order?

Mr. SCOTT. I ask that the word "five" be substituted for the word "six" in this item.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it will be so ordered. There was no objection.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. Foster of Vermont, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the agricultural appropriation bill (H. R. 27053) and had come to no resolution thereon.

SENATE JOINT RESOLUTION AND BILL AND HOUSE JOINT RESOLU-TION REFERRED.

Under clause 2, Rule XXIV, Senate joint resolution and Senate bill and House joint resolution with Senate amendments were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees, as indicated below:

S. R. 102. Joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States respecting the succession to the Presidency in certain cases—to the Committee on Election of President, Vice-President, and Representatives in Congress.

S. 7883. An act to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to construct a bridge across the Little Colorado River, abutting on the Navajo Indian Reservation, in the Territory of Arizona, and for other purposes—to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

H. J. Res. 247. Joint resolution relating to the celebration of the one hundredth anniversary of the birth of Abraham Lincoln and making the 12th day of February, 1909, a legal holiday, and for other purposes-to the Committee on the Library.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. WILSON of Illinois, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 10986. An act for the relief of L. H. Lewis; H. R. 10987. An act for the relief of A. A. Lewis:

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, a letter from the Secretary.of War, transmitting correspondence, etc., relating to the payment of certain claims in Panama (H. Doc. No. 1411), was taken from the Speaker's table, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. BANNON, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which tion 10 of chapter 252, volume 29, of Public Statutes at Large, reported the same with amendments, accompanied by a report (No. 2025), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Messrs. WEEKS and LEVER, from the Committee on Agriculture, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 4825) for acquiring national forests in the Southern Appalachian Mountains and White Mountains, reported the same with amendments, accompanied by a report (No. 2027), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee on the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. FOSTER of Indiana, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 23864) authorizing the widening and extension of Minnesota avenue SE. from its present terminus near Pennsylvania avenue SE. to the Sheriff road, reported the same with amendments, accompanied by a report (No. 2031) which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 24152) for the widening and extension of Massachusetts avenue SE. from its present terminus near Fortieth street SE to Bowen road, reported the same with amendments, accompanied by a report (No. 2032), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. DAVIDSON, from the Committee on Railways and Canals, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 24853) to amend the charter of the Lake Erie and Ohio River Ship Canal Company, approved June 30, 1906, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 2022), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. CARTER, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. R. 83) for the relief of the firm of Fearon, Daniel & Co., of New York and Shanghai, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 915) thereon.

He also, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the amendment submitted by Mr. Fulton on the 27th ultimo, providing for the paving with asphalt of Connecticut avenue extended from Macomb street to Newark street, in the District of Columbia, intended to be proposed to the District of Columbia appropriation bill, reported it with amendments and moved that it lie on the table, which was agreed to.

IMPROVEMENT OF BLAINE HARBOR, WASHINGTON.

Mr. FRYE, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred Senate concurrent resolution 86, submitted by Mr. PILES on the 3d instant, reported it without amendment; and it was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to cause a survey to be made of the harbor at Blaine, Wash., to determine the cost and advisability of its improvement.

CANAL TO THE GULF OF MEXICO.

Mr. FRYE, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred Senate concurrent resolution 82, submitted by Mr. MILTON on the 29th ultimo, reported it without amendment; and it was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to, as fol-

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause a survey to be made to ascertain the most feasible and practicable route to build a canal or inland waterway on the shores of the Gulf of Mexico connecting St. Andrews Bay, in the State of Florida, and the Mississippi River near New Orleans, in the State of Louisiana, with a view to determining the advantage, best location, and probable cost of such canal or inland waterway, and to submit a plan and an estimate for such improvements.

IMPROVEMENT OF POPHAM BEACH, MAINE.

Mr. FRYE, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred Senate concurrent resolution 83, submitted by himself on the 1st instant, reported it without amendment, and it was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause a preliminary examination and survey to be made of Popham Beach, Maine, with a view to the building of a bulkhead or hreakwater along said beach for the protection of property of the United States and to prevent the deposit of sand in navigable waters adjacent thereto.

WASHINGTON, SPA SPRINGS AND GRETTA RAILROAD.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I am directed by the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (S. 9006) to amend an act authorizing the Washington, Spa Springs and Gretta Railroad Company, of Maryland, to enter the District of Columbia, approved February 18, 1907, to report it favorably without amendment, and I submit a report (No. 908) thereon. I ask for the present consideration of the bill.

The Secretary read the bill; and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MILITARY ACADEMY AT WEST POINT.

Mr. WARREN. I am directed by the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred Senate resolution 256, submitted by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. Dick] on the 20th ultimo, to report it favorably with an amendment, and I ask for its present consideration.

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be directed to furnish to the Senate of the United States copies of all reports, recommendations, and other correspondence of record in the War Department, or at the United States Military Academy at West Point, relative to the subject of hazing at the Military Academy since January 1, 1908; also copies of all reports, recommendations, and other correspondence of record in the War Department relative to cadets of the Military Academy reported as deficient in either conduct or studies, or both, as a result of the last general examination held at the Military Academy.

The amendment of the committee was, in line 6, after the date "1908," to strike out the remainder of the resolution.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

DEWITT EASTMAN.

Mr. SCOTT. I am directed by the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 8588) to amend an act entitled "An act for the relief of Dewitt Eastman," approved January 8, 1909, to report it favorably with an amendment, and I submit a report (No. 913) thereon. I call the attention of the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. Nelson] to the bill.

Mr. NELSON. I ask for the present consideration of the bill.

It relates simply to the removal of a charge of desertion.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. CULBERSON rose.

Mr. SCOTT. It only amends an act that has already passed, in which a mistake was made in not giving the man an honorable discharge. It simply corrects that.

Mr. CULBERSON. It seems to be a short bill. Let it be read.

The Secretary read the bill; and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The amendment of the Committee on Military Affairs was to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

That Dewitt Eastman shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a member of Battery I, Fourth Regiment U. S. Artillery, on the 13th day of June, 1865: Provided, That no pay, bounty, or other emoluments shall accrue by virtue of the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT ASTORIA, OREG.

I am directed by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the bill (S. 7374) to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon at Astoria, in the State of Oregon, to report it favorably with amendments, and I submit a report (No. 912) thereon. I call the attention of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. FULTON] to the bill.

Mr. FULTON. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

The Secretary read the bill; and there being no objection the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consid-

The amendments were, on page 1, line 11, before the word "hundred," to strike out "five" and insert "one;" after the word "hundred" to insert the words "and seventy-five;" and after line 11 to strike out the remainder of the bill down to and including line 9, on page 3, so as to make the bill read: A bill (8, 7374) to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon at Astoria, in the State of Oregon.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to acquire, by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, a site and cause to be erected thereon a suitable building, including fireproof vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, and approaches, for the use and accommodation of the United States post-office in the city of Astoria and State of Oregon, the cost of said site and building, including said vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, and approaches, not to exceed the sum of $175,000.

The building shall be unexposed to danger from fire by an open space of at least 40 feet on each side, including streets and alleys.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

COURTS FOR TRIAL OF ENLISTED MEN.

Mr. PERKINS. I am directed by the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6252) to promote the administration of justice in the navy, to report it favorably with an amendment, and I submit a report (No. 911) thereon. I ask for the present consideration of the bill. I will state that the Senate passed a bill a few days since, and it is offered as a substitute for the House bill. If the bill is now passed, I propose to recall the Senate bill from the House with a view to its indefinite postponement.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The amendment of the Committee on Naval Affairs was to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

The amendment of the Committee on Naval Affairs was to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

That courts for the trial of enlisted men in the Navy and Marine Corps, for minor offenses, may be ordered by the commanding officer of a naval vessel, by the commandant of a navy-yard or station, by a commanding officer of marines, or by higher naval control, by a commanding officer of marines, or by higher naval authority.

Sec. 2. That such courts shall be known as "deck courts," and shall consist of one commissioned officer only, not below the grade of lieutenant in the Navy or captain in the Marine Corps, who, while serving in such capacity, shall have power to administer oaths, to hear and determine cases, and to impose, in whole or in part, the punishments prescribed by article 30 of the Articles for the Government of the Navy: Provided, That in no case shall such courts adjudge discharge from the service or adjudge confinement or forfeiture of pay for a longer period than thirty days.

Sec. 3. That any person in the Navy or Marine Corps, under the command of the officer by whose order a deck court is convened, may be detailed to act as recorder thereof.

Sec. 4. That the officer within whose command a deck court is sitting shall have full power as reviewing authority to remit or mitigate, but not to commute, any sentence imposed by such court; but no sentence of a deck court shall be carried into effect until it shall have been so approved or mitigated.

Sec. 5. That the courts hereby authorized shall be governed in all details of their constitution, powers, and procedure, except as herein provided, by such rules and regulations as the President may prescribe.

Sec. 6. That no person who objects thereto shall be brought to trial before a deck court. Where such objection is made by the person accused, trial shall be ordered by summary ourts-martial may be carried into effect upon approval of the convening authority or his successor in office.

Sec. 7. That all sentences of summary ourts-martial issue.

SEC. 12. That every person not belonging to the navy of the United States, who, being duly subpœnaed to appear as a witness before a general court-martial or court of inquiry of the navy, willfully neglects or refuses to appear, or refuses to qualify as a witness or to testify or produce documentary evidence which such person may have been legally subpœnaed to produce, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, for which such person shall be punished on information in the district court of the United States; and it shall be the duty of the United States district attorney, on the certification of the facts to him by such naval court to file an information against and prosecute the person so offending, and the punishment of such person, on conviction, shall be a fine of not more than $500 or imprisonment not to exceed six months, or both, at the discretion of the court: Provided, That this shall not apply to persons residing beyond the State, Territory, or District in which such naval court is held, and that the fees of such witness and his mileage, at the rates provided for witnesses in the United States district court for said State, Territory, or District, shall be duly paid or tendered said witness, such amounts to be paid by the Bureau of Supplies and Accounts out of the appropriation for compensation of witnesses: Provided further, That no witness shall be compelled to incriminate himself or to answer any question which may tend to incriminate or degrade him.

himself or to answer any question which may tend to incriminate or degrade him.

SEC. 13. That the depositions of witnesses may be taken on reasonable notice to the opposite party, and, when duly authenticated, may be put in evidence before naval courts in cases not capital, as follows: First, depositions of civilian witnesses residing outside the State, Territory, or District in which a naval court is ordered to sit; second, depositions of persons in the naval or military service stationed or residing outside the State, Territory, or District in which a naval court is ordered to sit, or who are under orders to go outside of such State, Territory, or District; third, where such naval court is convened on board a vessel of the United States, or at a naval station not within any State, Territory, or District of the United States, the depositions of witnesses may be taken and used as herein provided whenever such witnesses reside or are stationed at such a distance from the place where said naval court is ordered to sit, or are about to go to such a distance as, in the judgment of the convening authority, would render it impracticable to secure their personal attendance.

SEC. 14. That all acts or parts of acts inconsistent herewith are hereby repealed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read the third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

Mr. PERKINS. I move that the House be requested to return to the Senate the bill (S. 7872) to promote the administration of justice in the navy.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. PERKINS. I enter a motion to reconsider the vote by which the Senate bill 7872 was ordered to a third reading and passed.

JOHN M. BRYAN, JR.

Mr. OWEN. I am directed by the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. 8555) to relinquish the interest of the United States in and to certain lands in Dade County, Fla., to John M. Bryan, jr., to report it favorably with an amendment, and I submit a report (No. 914) thereon. I ask for the present consideration of the bill.

The Secretary read the bill.

Mr. TALIAFERRO. I ask that the bill may go over until I can look into it

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection to present consideration made. The bill will go to the calendar.

Mr. TALIAFERRO subsequently said: I wish to withdraw the objection to the consideration of Senate bill 8555, that was read a moment ago.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The amendment of the Committee on Public Lands was, at and patent shall issue therefor: Provided. The said John M. Bryan. jr., pay $1.25 an acre for the land referred to prior to the issuance of the patent to him.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PARCELS-POST SYSTEM.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I introduce a joint resolution, and I ask that it be read.

The joint resolution (S. R. 124) authorizing the Postmaster-General to test in not to exceed four counties and report to Congress the practicability and expense of a rural parcel-post system confined entirely to rural routes, was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Postmaster-General be authorized and directed to experiment and report to Congress on the 1st day of December, 1909, the practicability and expense of establishing a rural parcel-post system on the rural-delivery routes throughout the United States, said test or experiment to be confined exclusively to rural-delivery routes in not to exceed four counties in the United States for packages of fourth-class matter originating on a rural route or at its distributing post-office for delivery by rural carriers to the patrons thereof. That for the above-mentioned purpose rates of postage on such parcels shall be as follows: Five cents for the first pound and 2 cents for each additional pound or fraction thereof; on parcels weighing I pound or less, 5 cents; Provided, That no package weighing more than 11 pounds shall be received for conveyance under the provisions hereof.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President, I do not ask for the present consideration of the joint resolution, but that it may lie on the table for the present. But at an early day I shall ask that it be taken up and considered. However, I do at this time crave the indulgence of the Senate for two or three minutes for some brief words of explanation.

There have been many objections to this country's adoption of the parcels-post system. The point has been made that it would injure the dealers in small towns by concentrating the trade in the cities.

It has occurred to me, upon reading the recommendation of the Postmaster-General and because of a letter to the Postmaster-General from a postmaster in my own State, which he asked to be referred to me, and which the Postmaster-General has referred to me, that the only way of determining the validity of the objections to a parcels-post system on the one hand or its usefulness to the people on the other hand, would be by an experiment to be made in three or four counties of the country. If it proves impracticable, certainly little injury can result

I ask that the letter of the Postmaster-General transmitting the letter from Postmaster Starr, of Goshen, Ind., shall be incorporated in my remarks without reading.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, permission is granted.

The matter referred to is as follows:

UNITED STATES POST-OFFICE, Goshen, Ind., January 22, 1909.

United States Post-Office, Goshen, Ind., January 22, 1909.

The honorable Postmaster-General, Goshen, Ind., January 22, 1909.

The honorable Postmaster-General, Washington, D. C.

Sir: Referring to that portion of your interesting and comprehensive report for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1908, in which you recommend that the "Postmaster-General be authorized to establish experimentally a limited parcels post, confined entirely to rural delivery routes in not to exceed four counties in the United States," for the purpose of testing the practicability of such a system, I beg to assure you that, in my opinion, the suggestion is timely and worthy of adoption. Such a practical test would be educational and tend to dispel opposition existing in the minds of some people who, perhaps, have not considered the matter from the right view point.

In this connection, I beg to state that I would be very glad indeed if Elkhart County might be one of the four counties designated for the experiment in the event your excellent recommendation is carried into effect. In support of this suggestion it occurs to me that some very good reasons can be given in favor of Elkhart County, namely:

Complete county service is well established; service is never suspended on account of bad roads, and I believe that the condition of the highways throughout the county is above the average.

Elkhart County has a population of about 50,000, Goshen, the county seat, having an estimated population for city directory purposes in 1906 of 10,905; and Elkhart, the largest city in the county, claims about 18,000 inhabitants, while Nappanee, Wakarusa, Middlebury, Millersburg, Bristol, and New Paris are thriving towns rating in size and importance in the order named.

The merchants in all the cities and towns named are enterprising, and the rural population comprises a thrifty people and above the average in intelligence.

Therefore it seems to me that conditions existing here are favorable to giving the system a fair test in a rural community, and I res

OFFICE OF THE POSTMASTER-GENERAL,

Washington, D. C., January 29, 1909.

My dear Senator: I beg leave to transmit herewith, in compliance with the suggestion of Mr. Martin V. Starr, postmaster of Goshen, Ind., a copy of his letter to me of the 22d instant, concerning the establishment of a special local parcels post on rural-delivery routes.

Mr. Starr has been advised of this action.

Faithfully, yours,

Hon: Albert J. Beveridge,

United States Senate.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I ask also that the paragraph of the Postmaster-General's report upon this subject shall be incorporated without reading

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, permission is granted.

The matter referred to is as follows:

In order to demonstrate that this recommendation is a valuable one and to ascertain its practicability on the rural routes throughout the United States, I urge that the Postmaster-General be authorized and directed to establish experimentally a limited local parcels post, confined entirely to rural delivery routes in not to exceed four counties in the United States for packages of fourth-class matter originating on a rural route or at its distributing post-office for delivery by rural carriers to patrons thereof at such special rates of postage and under such regulations as the Postmaster-General may deem advisable; and that no parcel shall be accepted from any person acting as representative for any person or company not a resident on such rural delivery routes or in the town from which they emanate, and that only such parcels shall be received for delivery at the special rates of postage as are offered by bona fide merchants or dealers whose regular places of business are on such rural delivery routes in the ordinary and regular course of their business and in their individual capacity by residents on such routes. The result of the experiment to be reported to Congress at the beginning of the Sixty-first Congress.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Now for the explanation. This joint resolution is precisely the same kind of a joint resolution by which the practicability and usefulness to the people of rural free delivery was originally tested. It provides that four counties shall be selected by the Postmaster-General. These counties are not to be contiguous, but are scattered over the country. If he should be given this authority this is exactly what would occur in each of those counties: A farmer living any place in the county and not having time to spare from his work to go to town to order anything that he might need, groceries or anything else, would write a postal card, a letter, or he would telephone to the nearest town and have the merchant send his purchases by that day's rural delivery. It thus would seem, that, upon the one hand, the trade of every town, small as well as large, would be increased; and, on the other hand, that the time of the purchaser would be saved.

The prices that are named for this service in the joint resolution have been carefully computed. They are about the same as those now charged by express companies for a like service; but, of course, this is a service which express companies can So, on the one hand, the trade of the towns will be increased, and, on the other hand, the convenience of the people of the country would be subserved.

If any injurious effects resulted it would be confined to these four counties, scattered throughout the whole Republic, and it would last for less than six months. Certainly it would throw great light upon the feasibility of the entire project.

Just one further word. By reason of some closeness of com-munication with the farmers of the country for the past two or three years on another subject, and from a large correspondence with them, I know, as a matter of fact, that this experiment is not only desired by the rural population of the United States, but is demanded by them.

I think, Mr. President, that is all I have to say in general explanation of the joint resolution, and I am very much obliged to the Senate for its courtesy in permitting me to say this much at this time, out of order. In a few days I shall ask that the resolution be taken from the table; and I shall then submit further considerations in its support.

Mr. TILLMAN. Would the Senator from Indiana be kind enough to answer me a question?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I will if I can.
Mr. TILLMAN. The Senator said it was doubtful in the minds of a great many whether a parcels post would be good for this country or not. I think I caught that expression

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Yes; there is doubt.
Mr. TILLMAN. Is not a parcels post in existence in almost every country in Europe? Mr. BEVERIDGE. Yes.

Mr. TILLMAN. It is not confined to rural routes, because they have not anything there like we have here.

I want to ask the Senator why we should confine the parcels post to rural routes.

In answer to the Senator's very clear Mr. BEVERIDGE. and intelligent question, I will say that I do not know that it should be confined to rural routes. The purpose of the joint resolution

Mr. TILLMAN. I understand the purpose perfectly well. Mr. BEVERIDGE. It is merely to test this system in a most limited and immediately practicable way; that is all.

Mr. TILLMAN. In the hope that if we drive the point of the wedge in we will then drive it up?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Not to do anything one way or the other, except to get light on the subject. Light on the subject will be shed by this experiment. If it is bad it can not hurt anybody and will give us light. If it is good it can help everybody and also give us light. In either event we get information which we otherwise can not possibly have.

Mr. TILLMAN. We already have information as to the working of the parcels-post system in European countries.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Certainly, in European countries; but the point has been made on this floor in the discussion of the postal savings banks bill that conditions in this country are not similar to the conditions in European countries. That may or may not be a good point. My mind is perfectly open. I am not a devotee of the parcels-post idea on the one hand, nor its opponent upon the other hand; but what the National Legislature must have before it can proceed with the best intelligence is information on the subject; that is all.

Mr. TILLMAN. The Senator will agree, however, that we have the eastern portion of this country as densely populated as almost any European country.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Perhaps so. Mr. TILLMAN. Therefore while it might not be permissible on account of the expense in the large areas in the West where there are few people, it inevitably must be a good thing in the eastern portion of the country; and in view of the fact that we have never hesitated to afford mail facilities to the western people because of the extra expense, we could just as readily, I think, provide for a parcels-post system that would be selfsustaining and perhaps give us revenue by putting on such a charge as would enable us to extend the benefits of the parcels post throughout the land.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Undoubtedly, if the system is a good thing at all. The Senator's remark shows very wise statesman-

Recurring to the particular point, this is designed as an experiment to test its benefits or its harmfulness.

Mr. TILLMAN. That would involve confining its benefits to a limited area

Mr. BEVERIDGE. No. Mr. TILLMAN. Well, the rural route is only 25 miles, and therefore it would not extend out from a city more than 25 miles in any given direction.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The Senator apprehends the general purposes of the joint resolution, but he does get confused upon one point. The only reason why the rural route is mentioned here is because it is the most convenient instrument at hand to ascertain how this thing will work when we have the machinery. It does not at all preclude the idea of a general system. I am inclined to think the Senator is right about it. In case the system is good at all we should have a system that will not only include rural free-delivery routes, but also those sections of the country to which the Senator refers. I am not sure about that, but I am inclined to that view now. The object is merely to get information by actual experience, so that in case it is shown that the experiment is successful a bill may be drafted with a knowledge of the conditions.

Mr. TILLMAN. As I understand the Senator, then, he is not prepared to say to-day that he favors a parcels-post system?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I am not prepared to say to-day or any other day that I am for or against any system until I get the fullest information possible to get upon it.

Mr. TILLMAN. If the Senator is satisfied with walking around the question in that way, I am perfectly content with that.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. If informing one's self before acting is walking around, then I walk around. It is better to get your information before legislating than to legislate before getting your information. We can not have too much of that kind of walking around.

Mr. TILLMAN. I want to say that I am perfectly convinced—

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President, I should like to know under what rule the discussion is going on?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. None at all, except the courtesy of the Senate.

If it requires unanimous consent, I object.

Mr. TILLMAN. I will say in conclusion that I am absolutely in favor of a parcels post.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Let the joint resolution go over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will go over.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. GAMBLE submitted an amendment proposing to reserve land in Boreman County, S. Dak., for cemetery purposes for the perpetual use of the Indians of the Standing Rock Indian Reservation, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the Indian appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to pay to the Flandreau tribe of Indians in South Dakota, per capita, the balance remaining in the Treasury to their credit, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the Indian appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs and ordered to be printed.

Mr. DIXON submitted an amendment proposing to amend the act of Congress approved May 30, 1908, relative to surveying allotments of lands on the Fort Peck Indian Reservation, Mont. and the sale and disposal of all the surplus land after allotment, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the Indian appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs and ordered to be printed.

Mr. LODGE submitted an amendment providing for the appointment of a commission to investigate the condition of diplomatic and consular affairs, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and ordered to be printed.

Mr. GORE submitted an amendment authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to patent or grant a permanent permit, with or without charge, in his discretion, to any of the cities in Oklahoma to the right of way across the segregated coal lands in that State where said right of way is necessary to establish waterworks, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the Indian appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs and ordered to be printed.

CREWS ON PASSENGER TRAINS.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, 12 States of the Union have passed laws relating to the number of men who shall be required to operate a passenger train. I have the compilation here, and I ask that it may be printed as a document (S. Doc. No. 692)

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

THE IMMIGRATION COMMISSION.

Mr. GARY. I submit a resolution and ask that it be read and lie on the table subject to call.

The resolution (S. Res. 279) was read, as follows:

The resolution (S. Hes. 279) was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Immigration Commission, created by section 39 of "An act to regulate the immigration of aliens into the United States," approved February 20, 1907, be, and hereby is, directed to report forthwith to the Congress a brief summary of its acts, doings, and present work, together with an itemized statement of its expenditures, giving the amounts, purpose for which spent, to whom and for whom or what paid, and a list of all persons that have been or now are employed by the commission, directly or indirectly, their residence at time of appointment, the length of service, salary paid, and all allowances, and such other information as will give the Senate an idea of the amount of money and length of time it will take the commission to complete its labors and make its recommendations and final report.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let the resolution go over under the

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from South Carolina

asks that it may lie over, subject to call.

Mr. CULBERSON. The Senator from South Carolina asked that the resolution might be printed, and lie on the table subject to call.

Mr. GALLINGER. Oh, there is no objection to that,

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from South Carolina asks that the resolution lie on the table, subject to call. Is there objection? The Chairs hears none, and it is so ordered.

CLAIM OF ADOLPH G. STUDER, DECEASED,

Mr. LODGE submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 278), which was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to:

Resolved. That the President be requested, if not in his judgment incompatible with the interests of the public service, to furnish the Senate with copies of all the correspondence in regard to the claim of the late Adolph G. Studer, deceased, a citizen of the United States, against the Sultan of Johore, between the Government of Great Britain, in charge of the foreign affairs of the said sultanate, and the Department of State, and also between the said department and the said claimant or his attorneys, arranged in chronological order.

AMENDMENT OF THE RULES.

Mr. LODGE submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 277), which was referred to the Committee on Rules:

Resolved, That the rules of the Senate be, and they hereby are, amended as follows:

RULE XI.

OBJECTION TO READING PAPERS.

Strike out Rule XI and adopt in lieu thereof the following:
"When the reading of a paper is called for and objected to, or when the reading of a paper by a Senator is objected to, such objection shall be determined by a vote of the Senate without debate."

RULE XIX.

Change the numbers of paragraphs 4 and 5, of Rule XIX, to numbers and 6, respectively, and add new paragraph, No. 4, to said rule, as follows:

"4. No Senator in debate shall refer offensively to either of the other coordinate departments of the Government or to the other branch of the Congress."

RESIGNATION OF JUDGES.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 4535) entitled "An act to amend section 714 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, relating to the resignation of judges of the courts of the United States," which were, in line 7, after "United States," to insert "appointed to hold his office during good behavior;" in line 9, after "years," to insert "continuously;" and in line 10, to strike out all after "during," down to and including "resignation," in line 12, and insert "the residue of his natural life, receive the salary which is payable at the time of his retirement for the office that he held at a time ten years before his resignation."

Mr. KNOX. I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Finance:

H. R. 24135. An act to amend an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1896, and for other purposes;

H. R. 24337. An act to amend section 2625 of the Revised Statutes of the United States; and

H. R. 27238. An act to amend section 2619 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Public Lands:

H. R. 24833. An act to declare and enforce the forfeiture provided by section 4 of the act of Congress approved March 3, 1875, entitled "An act granting to railroads the right of way through the public lands of the United States;" and

H. R. 24835. An act authorizing the necessary resurvey of public lands.

H. R. 26829. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the Fayette Bridge Company to construct a bridge over the Monongahela River, Pennsylvania, from a point in the borough of Brownsville, Fayette County, to a point in the borough of West Brownsville, Washington County," approved April 23, 1906, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The following bill and joint resolution were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Military

H. R. 27051. An act authorizing the Secretary of War to furnish one condemned brass or bronze "Napoleon" gun, carriage, and cannon balls to the State of Iowa; and
H. J. Res. 241. Joint resolution to authorize the Secretary of War to furnish one condemned bronze cannon and cannon balls to the city of Robinson, Ill.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of House bill 25392, known as the District of Columbia appropriation bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 25392) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1910, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with; that the bill be read for amendment; and that committee amendments be first considered.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Hampshire asks unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with; that the bill be read for amendment; and that committee amendments be first considered. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill. The first amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations was, under ment reported by the Committee on Appropriations was, under the head "General expenses," on page 1, line 12, before the word "dollars," to strike out "five thousand" and insert "six thousand five hundred;" on page 2, line 2, before the word "dollars," to strike out "two hundred and eighty" and insert "one thousand seven hundred and eighty;" and in line 3, be-fore the word "dollars," to strike out "five thousand" and insert "six thousand five hundred," so as to read:

For executive office: For two commissioners, at $6,500 each; engineer commissioner, $1,780 (to make salary $6,500).

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I do not wish to unduly delay the bill in any particular, but I desire to say, in the beginning, that these appropriation bills, carrying large sums of money, come to us and are seen by Senators who are not members of the Committee on Appropriations for the first time when the bills are called up. It is impossible for us to give any due consideration to the appropriations of these large amounts unless the bill is read with some degree of slowness and particularity. I am moved to make this statement by the fact that the Clerk reads an amendment, and it is pronounced "agreed to" by the Chair before we even have an opportunity to know what it is.

Speaking for myself, I do not feel that I am primarily responsible in any degree for these matters of appropriation; but it does occur to me that the time has come when the Senate should take a more general interest in the items of appropriation bills than we have done heretofore-at least, I feel that for myself. I should like the bill to be proceeded with without undue delay, but in such a way that we can at least keep up with the Clerk as he proceeds with its reading.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair supposed that he had put distinctly the question as to whether each amendment so far considered was to be agreed to. If any Senator should not hear the submission of an amendment for the consideration of the Senate, it will, of course, be resubmitted upon request.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I offer amendments in behalf of the committee, which I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendments proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire will be stated.

The Secretary. On page 2, line 11, it is proposed to strike out the word "at," the first word in the line, and to insert the words "one at."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the amend-Without objection, it is agreed to. The next amendment proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire will be stated.

The Secretary. On page 2, line 11, after the word "thousand," it is proposed to strike out "two" and to insert "four."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the amend-Without objection, it is agreed to. ment?

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I am utterly in the dark as to what those amendments are.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will again state the amendments

Mr. BACON. I heard what the Secretary stated; but unless we can see something of the connection we can not tell what the amendments are.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will state to the Senator what the committee contemplates: In the bill, as reported from the committee, there is a provision for two clerks at $1,200 each.

Mr. BACON. Very well.

Mr. GALLINGER. And these amendments contemplate giving one clerk at $1,400 and one clerk at $1,200. That is the only change.

Mr. BACON. That is entirely intelligible, but before the Senator's statement it was absolutely unintelligible.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think the Senator from Georgia is right.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. For the information of the Senate, the Secretary will state the amendments which are proposed by the committee, and then the text of the bill as it will read if amended.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, at the beginning of line 11, it is proposed to strike out the word "at."

Mr. GALLINGER. Let the word "one" be inserted before the word "at," in place of striking out "at."

The Secretary. On page 2, line 11, before the word "at," the first word in the line, it is proposed to insert the word "one;" in the same line, after the word "thousand," it is proposed to strike out the word "two" and insert the word "four;" and in the same line, after the word "dollars," it is proposed to strike out "each" and the semicolon and insert the words "and one at $1,200."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendments

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendments will be agreed to. The Secretary will now read the text as it has been amended.

The Secretary. As amended, the clause will read:

assistant secretaries to commissioners, one at $1,400 and one Two ass at $1,200.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 3, line 11, after the word "dollars," to insert "deputy inspector of buildings, $2,000;" and in line 14, before the word "assistant," to strike out "ten" and insert "eleven," so as to read:

Building inspection division: Inspector of buildings, $2,750; deputy aspector of buildings, $2,000; principal assistant inspector of buildings, 1,600; 11 assistant inspectors of buildings, at $1,200 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, line 10, after the word dollars," to insert "index clerk, $720," so as to make the clause read:

Plumbing inspection division: Inspector of plumbing, $2,000; principal assistant inspector of plumbing, $1,400; 5 assistant inspectors of plumbing, 1 at $1,200 and 4 at $1,000 each; clerk, $1,200; temporary employment of additional assistant inspectors of plumbing and laborers for such time as their services may be necessary, $2,000; draftsman, $1,350; sewer tapper, $1,000; index clerk, $720; 3 members of the plumbing board, at $300 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. I offer the amendment which I send to

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire will be stated.

The Secretary. On page 4, after line 12, it is proposed to Child-labor inspectors: For 2 inspectors of child labor, at $1,200 each,

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriation's was, on page 4, line 14, to increase the total appropriation for maintenance of executive office from $104,254 to $112,647.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let the total be changed to correspond with the additional amendment which has been made.

The Secretary. It is proposed to amend the amendment by changing the total on page 4, line 14, so as to read "$115,274."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. BACON. I should like to ask the Senator from New Hampshire a question in regard to the amendment which he has proposed for child-labor inspectors. Is that matter provided for in the child-labor law heretofore passed?

Mr. GALLINGER. I will say to the Senator that we passed the child-labor law, but failed to give the necessary force to execute it. This simply provides the necessary force.

Mr. BACON. It creates the office as well as provides for the payment'

Mr. GALLINGER. No. The office was created by law at the last session, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. BACON. I understood the Senator to say that we failed in the law which we passed to provide the necessary force

We did not Mr. GALLINGER. Yes; that is it, precisely. make any

Mr. BACON. This bill, then, adds to the force, does it, and also provides for the pay?

Mr. GALLINGER. It provides the inspectors for which we failed to provide in the bill when it was enacted.

Mr. BACON. That is exactly the question I asked the Senator from New Hampshire. Mr. CLAY. With the So With the Senator's permission-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. CLAY. We have passed over page 3, line 10. The matter escaped me at the time, but I wish to recur to the item under the building-inspection division, which reads:

Inspector of buildings, $2,750; deputy inspector of buildings, $2,000; principal assistant inspector of buildings, $1,600; 11 assistant inspectors of buildings, at $1,200 each.

It seems to be peculiar language—"inspector of buildings, $2,750; deputy inspector of buildings, $2,000; principal assistant inspector of buildings, $1,600." Why should it not simply read "twelve assistant inspectors?" The proper language, it strikes me, would be "inspector of buildings, $2,750; 12 assistant inspectors, at $1,200 each." The bill provides one "deputy inspector of buildings" and also a "principal assistant inspector of buildings." I must confess that I can not see the reason for these designations, unless there is a difference in the duties or something of that character.

Mr. GALLINGER. So far as the title "principal assistant inspector of buildings" is concerned, the other body is responsible for that. It has been in the bill ever since I have been in the Senate. I will say to the Senator that the difference is that in certain cases we expect to get a higher grade of service, and the Senator will observe that a larger salary is paid to the deputy inspector and the principal assistant inspector than to the other assistant inspectors. That is the purpose of the provision.

Mr. BACON. It is in line with the precedent we established when we passed the bill which authorized an Under Secretary of State, is it not?

Mr. GALLINGER. Exactly.

Mr. BACON. It was suggested at the time that it would be taken as a precedent.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, I have just secured a copy of the report accompanying this bill. It is report No. 897. notice that the bill as passed by the House carried a total of $9,955,049.52. The Committee on Appropriations of the Senate present this bill with a total of $11,974,722.16, being a net increase of this bill over the bill as it came from the House of $2,019,672.64.

The report, Mr. President, it is true, states the items of increase; but there is nothing in the report, so far as I have seen, which states the reasons of the committee for increasing the total appropriation by this extraordinary amount. I should like to have the Senator from New Hampshire—and I am sure he can do so—state the reasons for the increase, not taking up each item separately, but taking up the large items commencing with the proposed increase of the salaries of the commissioners from $5,000 to $6,500.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I am very much gratified to find so keen an interest displayed in the District of Columbia appropriation bill. I believe this is the first time since my service in the Senate that such interest has been manifested. bodes well for good legislation, and it is a great gratification to me to discover it.

Mr. CULBERSON. In reply to the Senator from New Hampshire, I will say that I have made the same request at this session of every Senator having in charge a large appropriation I agree with the Senator that the interest displayed bodes well for legislation upon this bill and upon other matters.

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes. Now, Mr. President, if the Senator will turn to the hearings before the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations, a copy of which I will send him, embracing 228 printed pages, he will find in detail our reasons for making these increases. The commissioners were interrogated on every point, and we only inserted a portion of their recommendations. The estimates of the commissioners were over $16,000,000, but we kept the bill down to $11,000,000. thought that was a fair amount.

The question of the increase of the salaries of the commissioners is one that was determined by the subcommittee, and subsequently by the full committee, without any consultation with those gentlemen concerning the matter. The committee thought it was but fair to make a reasonable increase in the salaries of those very diligent and very hard-worked officials, who work almost every day in the year and who have all the great interests of the District of Columbia on their hands to care for. I do not know whether it was a wise thing to do or not, but it appealed to me, and I voted for it. I hope it will remain in the bill and go to conference, where it can be further considered.

The other large increases are, to a considerable extent, for schoolhouses and other matters that are very urgent in this District. In fact, Mr. President, in my judgment, we ought to have at least a million dollars more on this bill for the purchase of land and the construction of schoolhouses in the District of Columbia; but realizing the fact that we ought not to swell this bill inordinately, we made provision for only a very small part of what we thought was absolutely necessary.

We made large increases, Mr. President, in the appropriation for sewers

Mr. BURKETT. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. BURKETT. While the Senator is on that point, would he state how much extra appropriation is made for schoolhouses? Mr. GALLINGER. I think about $297,000, or something like

Mr. BURKETT. That would provide something like five additional buildings, would it not?

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator, if he will turn to the bill under that head, will discover exactly what we have done. We shall reach that in due time.

We made a large additional appropriation for sewers. were some members of the committee, at least, who felt that the public health was of great concern and that we could not have a good condition here, so far as the public health was concerned, unless we had a complete system of sewerage. We did not do one-half in that connection that we ought to have done, but we did something, and we hope it will remain in the bill. Other important matters I would allude to, but I presume it is not necessary at this time.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Hamp-shire yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly. Mr. CULBERSON. Before the Senator passes entirely from the question of buildings and grounds for the public schools, I note on page 3 of the report that the total increase amounts to $349,000. At the last session of Congress, I think, I introduced a resolution asking the Committee on the District of Columbia to inquire into the safety of the school children of the District with reference to fire protection in the buildings. That resolution has never been reported back to the Senate from that committee, and I do not know what has become of it. I now ask the Senator in charge of this bill if this $349,000 increase includes any additional fire protection to the children of the District of Columbia in the schoolhouses?

Mr. GALLINGER. I will say to the Senator in that connection that we made a very large appropriation for that purpose last year in the last District of Columbia appropriation bill; I have forgotten the exact amount, but it enabled the building inspectors' division to make very radical changes, to fireproof stairways and exits so that at the present time it is believed the school buildings are very safe. Of course, we could spend a great deal more money in that direction, and I hope we shall do so in the near future, but, as I recall, we have not any appropriation in this bill for that specific purpose, believing, as we did, that having made a large appropriation in the last Congress perhaps we could get along without making a further appropriation this year.

Mr. CULBERSON. I am gratified to know that the Committee on the District of Columbia, while it did not report the resolution back to the Senate, has taken action with reference to increased protection from fire in the public schools. I note now-and I am sure the Senator will justify this inquirythat on page 3 of the report there is a statement of an increase for the public schools of $101,335 under the general head "Miscellaneous." We should like to know at least some of the larger items of that increase.

Mr. GALLINGER. Well, would not the Senator be willing to restrain his intense interest in this matter until we reach that item in considering the bill? When we reach that page we can discuss it.

Mr. CULBERSON. If it will suit the convenience of the Senator better, I shall be glad to defer it.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think that would be the better way.

Mr. CULBERSON. I trust the Senator will not fail to point out the items of miscellaneous expenditures under the head of 'Public schools.

Mr. GALLINGER. I shall be delighted to do that when we come to that part of the bill.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 5, line 4, after the words "United States," to strike out "one-half," and in line 5, after the words "District of Columbia," to strike out "and one-half as miscellaneous receipts," so as to make the clause read:

The Commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby authorized and directed, from time to time, to prescribe a schedule of fees to be paid for permits, certificates, and transcripts of records issued by the inspector of buildings of the District of Columbia, for the erection, alteration, repair, or removal of buildings and their appurtenances, and for the location of certain establishments for which permits are now or hereafter may be required under the building regulations of the District of Columbia, said fees to cover the cost and expense of the issurance of said permits and certificates and of the inspection of the work done under said permits; said schedule shall be printed and conspicuously displayed in the office of said inspector of buildings; said fees shall be paid to the collector of taxes of the District of Columbia, and shall be deposited by him in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the revenues of the District of Columbia.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President I notice that the striking out of Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I notice that the striking out of those words is an amendment to the bill as it came from the House. I simply desire to ask the Senator, without occupying any time in so doing, whether that has been the law heretofore and it is now sought to change it?

Mr. GALLINGER. I will say to the Senator that I do not know whether the other House made a mistake in that matter, or whether they purposely put that provision in the bill; but the revenues as provided in this paragraph are revenues of the District of Columbia, and they should go into its treasury.

Mr. BACON. I quite agree with the Senator. As an original proposition, that strikes me favorably. I simply desired to know what has been the law heretofore in that regard.

Mr. GALLINGER. Always precisely as we propose to amend

Mr. BACON. Then I think the amendment is entirely proper. The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 5, line 17, after the word "each," to insert "two laborers, at five hundred dollars each;" in line 22, before the word "watchmen," to strike out "eight" and insert "nine;" and in line 24, before the word "and," to strike out "thirty-seven thousand four hundred," and insert "thirty-nine thousand," so as to read:

For care of District building: Clerk and stenographer, $1,500; chief engineer, $1,400; three assistant engineers, at $1,000 each; electrician, $1,200; two dynamo tenders, at $875 each; three firemen, at $720 each; three coal passers, at $600 each; one electrician's helper, $840; eight elevator conductors, at $600 each; two laborers, at $660 each; two laborers, at $500 each; two chief cleaners, who shall also have charge of the lavatories, at $500 each; forty cleaners, at $240 each; chief watchman, $1,000; assistant chief watchman, $600; nine watchmen, at $600 each; one pneumatic-tube operator, $600; in all, $39,030.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I want to make a suggestion to the Senator from New Hampshire, if he will permit me. should like to suggest, in the interest of time, that as each amendment is reached, he would, as briefly as he may see proper, state the cause for it, so as to prevent the necessity for any interruption or expenditure of time in asking any question about it. Very frequently there are items which we do not understand, and as to which we should like to have some statement, but, at the same time, we do not like to interrupt the Senator to ask it of him.

Mr. GALLINGER. Does the Senator desire an explanation as to the insertion of the words "two laborers, at $500 each?"

Mr. BACON. I do not as to that item particularly. My suggestion was more of a general character than relating to that particular item.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will say to the Senator that the small increases we have made in the force, not only for the care of the District building, but in other parts of the bill, are a very small part of what we were asked to grant. Realizing the fact that some increase ought to be made, we gave them these two appointments.

Mr. BACON. I repeat that my suggestion did not relate to that particular item, but was intended to be general.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. TILLMAN. I was merely going to remark, having been on the subcommittee with our laborious friend from New Hampshire [Mr. Gallinger], that our work was mainly in resisting the importunities of the Commissioners of the District, who had asked, I believe, for about double or more than double what we have given them. They seemed to be very importunate and insistent on getting more, more, more of every-thing—more money and more employees. We resisted as far as we were able apparently; at least I did, and the Senator from New Hampshire was even more repugnant to granting some of their demands than I was. We did the best we could.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is right.

Mr. CLAY. Will the Senator from New Hampshire yield to me for a minute?

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. CLAY. Mr. President, we spend more money to keep up the city of Washington by $2,000,000 than is spent for the state government of Texas. Texas has a population of 4,000,000 people, and it spends $10,000,000 per year. In Georgia we now have a population of probably two million and a half, and we spend about $4,000,000. Maine has a population of about six or seven hundred thousand, and she spends a little over two and a half million dollars. I have mentioned Georgia. We spend in this city about $12,000,000.

I agree that Washington ought to be a beautiful city. It belongs to the people of the United States. But in a period of twelve years we have leaped from $5,000,000 to $12,000,000. But this increase has not gone on so rapidly as have increases in other departments of the Government. In the same period of time you have seen the naval appropriation go from $30,000,-000 to $134,000,000, as it probably will be when the bill shall have passed the Senate. You have seen the army appropriation bill grow from $28,000,000 to $120,000,000. We know at this time that imports from other countries into this country during the last year have fallen off by more than $300,000,000, and our exports have fallen off $170,000,000. We have been discussing on the floor of the Senate for the last three or four years what we would do with our $300,000,000 of surplus. I stand here in my place and predict that in less than twelve months from to-day there will not be a single dollar of surplus in your Treasury, and that at the rapid speed at which we are going in less than two years, unless your revenues increase, the Government will be called upon to issue bonds for the purpose of maintaining the Government.

I have no criticism to make of the Senator from New Hamp-shire. He has a herculean task before him. He is besieged day after day for these appropriations; and I do not desire to be niggardly in my course in regard to this great city. But when we study the history of our finances and the increases that have gone on during the last ten or twelve years it is absolutely I do not charge it to the other side; I do not charge it to this side of the Chamber, but my observation teaches me that there is growing among the people the sentiment "how much money can Senators and Representatives bring from the National Treasury into the different States;" and our efficiency is judged by how much money we get for our constituents, forgetting that every single dollar of public funds must come from the people by taxation.

Mr. TILLMAN. I should like to suggest to the Senator that they are great idiots if they think the money can come from any other source than the people.

Mr. CLAY. That sentiment is growing in South Carolina. It is growing in Georgia. It is growing in every State of the Union, I believe. The people simply clamor, "What have you done? How much money have you brought to the State?" Unless the Government is administered more economically in the next ten years than it has been in the last ten, I can not tell where it will end. In a period of ten years it cests as much money to repair a battle ship as to construct it.

Mr. President, our expenditures have grown more rapidly in the last seven or eight years than in any other period in the history of our country.

Mr. OVERMAN. May I ask the Senator from Georgia a question?

Mr. CLAY. Certainly.

Mr. OVERMAN. I notice that in the statement the Senator made he compared the expenses of this city with those of some of the States. Has he ever made any comparison between the expense of carrying on this city and other cities of the same size?

Mr. CLAY. I have not; but I am going to have some figures made

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President

VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. CLAY. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. The comparison the Senator from Georgia has made is an unfortunate one. In Georgia they have not only a state appropriation, but they have expenses in every county in the State and in every town or township. In the District of Columbia this is a sum that covers the expenditures of the entire District. We will take as an illustration the little State of New Hampshire, with a few more people than the District of Columbia. Our state tax has been only $500,000. I believe they are going to increase it this year. But when you reckon what the town and township taxes are, it swells the amount enormously. So a comparison between the appropria-tions for the District of Columbia and the state taxes of any given State is an unfortunate one.

I think our appropriations for the District of Columbia are kept well within bounds, and I have every reason to believe that every dollar appropriated is judiciously and honestly expended. We have a pride in the belief, at least—and I think it is well founded—that in no municipality in this whole country is the business transacted with such scrupulous integrity as in the District of Columbia. Of course, we would be glad to keep the appropriations down still lower if we could, but, as the Senator from South Carolina has stated, we sat in the committee room hour after hour-

Mr. TILLMAN. Day after day.

Mr. GALLINGER. Day after day, and we acted upon our best judgment, resisting importunities that were sometimes almost persuasive, and we have reported such a bill as we thought about right.

Mr. CLAY. I did not intend to criticise the Senator from New Hampshire,

Mr. GALLINGER. I did not take it that way.

Mr. CLAY. I esteem him most highly. There is no Senator more zealous in the discharge of his duties than the Senator from New Hampshire. He has before him a task I would not want. I am fully aware of the fact that when the subcommittees are in session they are compelled to devote most of their time to appeals for appropriations for improvements in different parts of the city, and my remarks were not intended to complain especially of extravagance in the city of Washington. I concede that the city of Washington ought to be the most beautiful city in the world; but I was making this comparison of the rapid increases which have been made in other departments to show the point we have reached.

The Senator from New Hampshire will concede that two or three years ago we thought we had more money than we could utilize. We had $250,000,000 deposited in the national banks in the United States, and criticisms on both sides of the Chamber were made against collecting more revenue than we needed for the purpose of paying the expenses of the Government; and the Senator from New Hampshire will concede now that the time is bound to come, unless there is either an increase in the revenues or a decrease in expenditures, when we will have no surplus, but a deficit.

We are going to be called upon in a short time to revise the tariff, and some of our folks on this side of the Chamber have been clamoring day and night for a reduction of the tariff, but I am frank to confess that some of my constituents, when they see revision near at hand, are not so strong on that line. But how are you going to revise it unless you arrange at least by your schedules to get as much money as you spend? It is a difficut problem. If we had $300,000,000 surplus in the Treasury, it would not be a difficult task to revise the schedules and get at This theory may be true; you may reduce your schedules as to articles coming into this country in competition with articles made in this country, and by such methods our imports may be greater and consequently our revenue greater.

Mr. TILLMAN. I wish to ask the Senator a question. Does he not believe from his information of the tariff that if the duties were lower the income would be greater because of the fact that many of the duties now are prohibitive and therefore the imports are restricted?

Mr. GALLINGER. But if the Senator will permit me, what, under those circumstances, is to become of our American industries?

Mr. TILLMAN. If we really want to increase our revenue, we must reduce the duties.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am afraid our people under those circumstances would not have anything with which to buy foreign

Mr. CLAY. I have always been taught the doctrine that we ought to have sufficient revenue to pay the expenses of the Of course, when duties become prohibitive, we do Government. not get much revenue. But let us look now at the difference between the Republican party and the Democratic party. The Republican party is insisting that we shall have a tariff for protection, and the Democratic party a tariff sufficient to pay the expenses of the Government, economically administered, which means incidental protection. But if our expenditures are going to reach a billion or a billion and a quarter dollars a year, and you raise enough money to pay the expenses of the Government, that will be all the protection any man in this country would want, because the expenses have grown so large. The very fact that you have to raise enough money to meet these expenses will certainly give all the protection that the people of any section of our common country can want. The strongest protectionist ought to be satisfied with this situation.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, the tariff question having been disposed of, I hope the reading of the bill will be proceeded with.

Mr. BACON. May I interrupt the Senator long enough to say that the very high tribute which he has paid to the scrupulous care with which the business of the District is managed is a very strong argument against the proposition to change the character of the government of the District.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think that is right.

The reading of the bill was resumed and continued to the end of line 4, on page 6, the last paragraph read being as follows:

Hereafter policemen shall not be detailed for duty as watchmen at the municipal building.

Mr. BACON. Will the Senator explain why these policemen shall not be detailed? Is it considered that no such guardianship is needed?

Mr. GALLINGER. I will say to the Senator that this is a House provision. It seems that last year, I think, two policemen were detailed from the force for duty at the municipal building. We feel that with the bill, especially as the Senate has amended it, they will have force enough, and we know of no reason why the policemen should not be kept at the duties that it is contemplated they shall perform.

Mr. BACON. There are other officers who can perform the

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes; we felt so. Mr. FRAZIER. I notice that in line 22, page 5, the number of watchmen is fixed at nine. I desire to ask the Senator from New Hampshire if heretofore it has not been the custom to assign old and somewhat decrepit policemen, long in the service, to the discharge of the duties as watchmen, and if five of those have not been heretofore thus assigned?

Mr. GALLINGER. There is constant clamor that we have not policemen enough, not only on the part of the commissioners, but on the part of the public and on the part of men in public life, and we felt that we ought to keep our policemen at their proper duties, and not have them at the will of the commissioners detailed for work of a different character. We did increase the number of watchmen by one. They asked for two more. We gave them one, and we have no doubt they will get along under the provisions of the bill.

Mr. FRAZIER. Is it not a fact that only five policemen have been thus employed to do the work now proposed to be done by nine watchmen?

Mr. GALLINGER. We do not deal with the question of policemen at all. They were detailed by the commissioners.

Mr. FRAZIER. Has it not been the custom to detail policemen at all policemen at all policemen at all policemen are set their policements.

men who have had long service, and who by reason of their long service are more or less disabled, to discharge the duties of watchmen? Is not that a very proper way to dispose of those faithful public servants who for many years have been in the employment as policemen doing outdoor work?

Mr. GALLINGER. I know of no law that would warrant a detail of that kind. If there are policemen who are incapacitated, they ought to be retired. We give them a liberal pension. They ought not to be kept in the service. The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 6, line 5, after the word "repairs," to insert "mechanics and labor, not to exceed $3,000," and in line 7, before the word "thousand," to strike out "twenty-six" and insert "twenty-eight;" so as to make the clause read:

For fuel, light, power, repairs, mechanics, and labor, not to exceed $3,000, and miscellaneous supplies, $28,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 6, line 26, to increase the appropriation for the salary of clerk in the assessor's office from $600 to $720.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 7, line 1, to increase the total appropriation for maintenance of assessor's office from $44,100 to $44,220.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 7, line 15, to increase the appropriation for salary of deputy collector for collector's office from $1,800 to $2,000; and in line 23, to increase the appropriation for salary of messenger in collector's office from $600 to $720.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 7, line 24, to increase the total appropriation for maintenance of collector's office from $21,300 to $21,620.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 8, line 5, after the word "clerk," to insert "and deputy auditor;" in line 6, before the word "dollars," to strike out "two hundred and fifty" and insert "five hundred;" in line 14, before the word "hundred," to strike out "five" and insert "eight;" and in line 18, before the word "dollars," to strike out "two hundred and fifty" and insert "eight hundred," so as to make the clause read:

For auditor's office: For auditor, $4.000; chief clark and deputy and

For auditor's office: For auditor, $4,000; chief clerk and deputy auditor, $2,500; bookkeeper, $1,800; 2 clerks, at $1,600 each; 3 clerks, at $1,400 each; 3 clerks, at $1,200 each; 5 clerks, at $1,000 each; 2 clerks, at $900 each; clerk, $720; messenger, $600; disbursing officer, $3,000; deputy disbursing officer, $1,800; 1 clerk, $1,200; 1 clerk, $900; messenger, $480; in all, $34,800.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 9, line 11, after the word "dollars," to insert "hostler and laborer, $365," and in line 13, before the word "dollars," to insert "three hundred and sixtyfive," so as to make the clause read:

For coroner's office: For coroner, $1,800; morgue master, $720; assistant morgue master and janitor, $480; hostler and laborer, $365; in all, $3,365.

Mr. GARY. I should like to ask the Senator in charge of the bill if the office has not gotten along heretofore without this hostler and laborer; and if so, what is the necessity for him now?

Mr. GALLINGER. I will read from the hearings. Commissioner Macfarland said:

The note explains the necessity for adding a hostler and laborer to the coroner's office at $365. There are only two men, of course, in that office, the morgue master and assistant morgue master; and two men should go with the morgue wagon, for it is difficult, if not impossible, for one person to remove bodies.

Senator GALLINGER. Who takes care of the horses now?

Commissioner Macfarland. They pay a man between themselves.

Upon that representation, that there were two men where there ought to be three, which they have insisted upon for several years, and in view of the fact that these two men were paying another man, the committee felt that the increase should be

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Committee on Appropriations.

The amendment was agreed to.
The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 10, line 13, after the word "dollars," to strike out "second assistant sealer of weights and measures, $900" and insert "two assistant sealers of weights and measures, at $900 each;" and in line 17, before the word "and," to insert "nine hundred," so as to make the clause read:

For office of sealer of weights and measures: For sealer of weights and measures, $2,500; first assistant sealer of weights and measures, $1,200; two assistant sealers of weights and measures, at $900 each; clerk, $1,000; laborer, $480; in all, $6,980.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 10, line 21, to increase the appropriation for salary of engineer of bridges from $2,100 to $2,250.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 11, line 10, to increase the appropriation for salary of superintendent of repairs in the engineer's office, record division, from $1,500 to $1,800.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 11, line 13, to increase the appropriation for salary of assistant superintendent of trees and parkings from $1,000 to $1,200.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued to the end of line 16, on page 11.

Mr. BACON. I simply desire to know whether the copy of the bill which I have is correct. The Clerk read, in lines 15 and 16, as follows:

Four assistant engineers, at $1,800.

In my copy the word "each" follows those words.
Mr. GALLINGER. "Each" should be in—"four assistant engineers, at $1,800 each."
Mr. BACON. It is in the copy I have, but it was not so read by the Clerk. I thought my copy was incorrect.
The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary inadvertently omitted the word.

the word.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in the item for engineer's office, record division, on page 11, line 22, after the word "dollars," to insert "duplicating clerk, $900," so as to read:

One assistant engineer, $1,200; 2 transitmen, at $1,200 each; 1 transitman, $1,050; duplicating clerk, $900.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the item for engineer's office, record division, on page 12, line 3, before the word "two," to strike out "two draftsmen, at $1,350 each" and insert "draftsman, $1,500; draftsman, $1,350," so as to read:

Eight rodmen, at $780 each; 12 chainmen, $650 each; draftsman, $1,500; draftsman, $1,350.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 12, line 23, to increase the appropriation for salary of chief clerk in engineer's office, record division, from $1,900 to $2,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 14, line 4, to increase the appropriation for salary of assistant inspector of gas and meters from $840 to $900.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 14, line 5, to increase the appropriation for salary of messenger in engineer's office, record division, from $540 to $600.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the items for engineer's office, record division, on page 14, line 11, after the word "dollars," insert:

municipal architect, whose duty it shall be to supervise the preparation of plans for and the construction of all municipal buildings, and the repair and improvement of all buildings belonging to the District of Columbia under the direction of the Engineer Commissioner of the District of Columbia, $3,600; and all laws or parts of laws placing such duties upon the inspector of buildings of the District of Columbia are hereby repealed.

Mr. GARY. This municipal architect seems to be a new office that is created. I should be glad if the Senator in charge of the bill would give us some explanation of it.

Mr. GALLINGER. It is a new office. The work heretofore has been a divided work, the inspector of buildings having charge of it, and outside architects, at the usual fee of 21 per cent, frequently being employed to make the plans.

It will be remembered that a great deal of complaint has been made about the buildings in the District not being properly inspected. The inspector of buildings has so many duties placed upon him that some neglect in that direction has doubtless resulted.

The other House, after a hearing upon the matter, inserted this paragraph and it went out on a point of order. The Senate committee had a full hearing on it and were fully satisfied upon the representations made that it would be in the line of economy as well as of good administration to have an architect for municipal buildings.

It will be remembered that we have a great many buildings in the District of Columbia belonging to the District. a great many school buildings and we are building new ones constantly. We have fire stations, police stations, and buildings of other kinds. Beyond a doubt, an architect will have his hands full if he performs this service, and it will relieve the inspector of buildings from that duty, so that he can give more time to a proper inspection of the buildings that are being constructed in the District, and not have two of them tumble down, as they recently did, one of them occasioning loss of life. The committee were fully satisfied that this was a proper thing to do, and that it would result in economy rather than in a waste of the public money.
Mr. BURKETT.

Has the inspector of buildings done this work in the past?

Mr. GALLINGER. It has been in his care. He has been charged with that duty. Of course he had to go outside and employ architects to a greater or less extent.

Mr. BACON. He himself is not an architect? Mr. GALLINGER. He is not an architect.

Mr. BACON. Heretofore, I understand the Senator to say, the expense has had to be incurred of employing outside architects, at the rate of 2½ per cent on the valuation for the plans.

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes; that was brought out in the House hearing more particularly.

Mr. BACON. I understand, then, from what the Senator says, that hereafter this work will be done solely by the municipal architect.

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes.

Mr. BACON. And the expense of outside architects will not be incurred?

Mr. GALLINGER. It will be entirely saved.

Mr. BACON. I think myself that that will be in the line of

I simply desire to ask the Senator one question in regard to the inspector of buildings of the District of Columbia. He is retained?

Mr. GALLINGER. He is retained.

Mr. BACON. At the same salary or an increased salary? Mr. GALLINGER. At the same salary. Mr. BACON. I have, of course, every confidence in the investigation made by the committee, but let me ask if there is enough work still left for him to occupy his time?

Mr. GALLINGER. Oh, yes; he is a very hard-worked man.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 14, line 20, to increase the total appropriation for maintenance of engineer's office, record division, from $196,462 to $201,982.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BACON. I will take advantage of this opportunity to ask the Senator a question, as it follows a section in which there is a large enumeration of salaries. We are unable to there is a large enumeration of salaries. We are unable to ascertain, of course, from an inspection of the bill to what degree the House has raised existing salaries. I see only here and there that the Senate committee has proposed to amend the House schedule of salaries. I desire to ask the Senator in charge of the bill whether it is true that in the bill as it comes from the House there is a general increase of salaries over those now fixed by law?.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have an impression that there is not a single increase in the bill as it came from the House over what was allowed last year, but that the House kept it down to the rates of the former bill.

Mr. BACON. The amendments proposed by the committee, then, I will not say entirely, but practically all of the increases that there are are in the way of a raise?

Mr. GALLINGER. They are; and I will say-

Mr. BACON. And in each instance there has been, then, a recognition of the propriety of a general raise?

Mr. GALLINGER. Not at all. Wherever an increase was allowed it was done upon the representation that the man had been in service for a good many years; that he was very faithful; that he had unusual responsibilities placed upon him; and that a small increase might properly be made.

Mr. BACON. I wish to say, Mr. President, that my inquiry was not suggested by any indisposition on my part to make any proper increase in salaries. On the contrary, as Senators may remember, I myself at the last session favored an increase in the salaries of clerks in the departments. I did not know but that if there had been a general increase in the bill as it came from the House it might manifest a desire on the part of the Committee on Appropriations to make a general increase for department clerks.

I confess that I have myself felt somewhat dissatisfied by the fact that we have generally raised salaries all along the whole line of high officials and that we have utterly neglected, and not only neglected but refused, to give increased salaries to the class of government employees who are probably more in need of it than some of us who have had an increase.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I sympathize profoundly with the Senator in what he has just stated, and if a schedule of increased salaries for the government clerks is worked out,

I shall vote for it very gladly.

I will say to the Senator that all through the bill there are salaries that are utterly inadequate, as $720 a year for a young man performing clerical service or as a telephone operator. The salaries ought to be increased, but the committee did not feel, in view of circumstances I do not care to discuss, like taking up the entire matter and making an advance all along the line.

Mr. BACON. I fully appreciate, of course, that any move-ment of that kind ought to be of a general character and ought to be one which should not be limited to the District. If it is undertaken it ought to be general. The Senator is an honored and very valuable member of the Committee on Appropriations, and he is in a position where, I think, he can more efficiently inaugurate that movement than those of us who are not in so advantageous a position.

I repeat, Mr. President, with the utmost sincerity, I do not think it to the credit of the lawmaking department of the Government that we have not only increased our own salaries, but increased the salaries of almost all high officials, and that we have utterly neglected and refused to give a needed increase to those who are not in a position to insist upon their demands, but who are in a position where, if they attempt to do anything which may further their interests, they are in danger not only of rebuke but of absolute loss of that which they now have.

I am not content with the situation, Mr. President, and I do not think it is to the credit of the lawmaking department of the Government. The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will resume the reading of the bill.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill.

The next amendment was, on page 14, line 23, after the word "dollars," to insert "2 clerks, at $1,500 each;" in line 24, before the word "clerks," to strike out "seven" and insert "five;" and on page 15, line 2, before the word "hundred," to strike out "twelve thousand nine" and insert "thirteen thousand five," so as to make the clause read:

Special assessment office: For special assessment clerk, $2,000; 2 clerks, at $1,500 each; 5 clerks, at $1,200 each; 2 clerks, at $900 each; and 1 clerk, $750; in all, $13,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 16, to insert:

Automobile board: For acting secretary of the automobile board, $300. Mr. BACON. I possibly ought not to make prominent my ignorance, but I want the Senator in charge of the bill to tell us what the automobile board is.

Mr. GALLINGER. It is a board that issues permits; and I will say to the Senator that the income is quite large-several thousand dollars.

Mr. BACON. The name of the board did not indicate the character of its duties. I recognize, of course, that there must be such a board. I was in hopes that it might be a board which had a little more extensive duties, and that it might be a board which would see somewhat to the enforcement of the law in this city in the movement of automobiles.

Mr. TILLMAN. I should judge that that would be a police regulation.

Mr. BACON. I did not know but we had an automobile board that had charge of the enforcement of the law and, of course, supervision of the duties of policemen in that regard. The law is undoubtedly most grossly violated in this city every hour of the day, and, I might say, almost every minute, and particularly in the night.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated by the Secretary.

The Secretary. A bill (S. 6484) to establish postal savings banks for depositing savings at interest, with the security of the Government for repayment thereof, and for other purposes. Mr. CARTER. I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Montana asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BACON. I am not going to take up any time in discussing the matter. The Senator knows what my view is on the subject. I do think that people who have the right, or liberty rather, of the use of the streets in a degree which, even when they comply with the law, endangers the safety of the public ought not to abuse that liberty, but ought to confine themselves to a proper and necessary observance of the law.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, I agree entirely with what the Senator from Georgia has said, because every time I take a walk, and I do a good deal of it, I am dodging these things. If the Senator from New Hampshire will aid us by some provision in some way or some interview with the persons in au-thority to see that the laws in regard to the speed of automobiles are observed, I am sure he will earn the gratitude of nearly all the people in this city.

I am not like the Senator from Texas [Mr. Bailey], anxious to see the automobile out of use, because I think it is one of those advances along with railroads, the telegraph, and other modern inventions that we are compelled to recognize as having their place and being very useful, but I do not think these automobiles ought to run over people or frighten them, and all that kind of thing; and if we have a regulation here in regard to speed the police ought to be compelled to observe it and arrest

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President— Mr. TILLMAN. I did not know the Senator had come in or

I would not have said a word.

Mr. BAILEY. I want to say to the Senator from South Carolina that I am very much less concerned about whether they run over people than I am about the other aspect of the matter. I am very frank to say that I do not believe there is any true progress in a course of commercial or political conduct that substitutes a product of the factory for a product of the farm; and I believe, in the larger sense, that this country will be infinitely worse off when it withdraws its population from the farm, because they can not prosper there, and concentrates them in the great cities. That course of events has already progressed so far until the cities are overcrowded and the farms are not sufficiently cultivated. When we aggravate that condition still further by taking our rural population and concentrating them in the cities, then all the vices of idleness and extravagance and all the crimes of murder, theft, and arson will multiply themselves many times over.

And at the risk of standing in the way of progress, I protest against the Government still further accelerating this tendency by rejecting what the farms produce and substituting what is manufactured in the cities.

I want to say, besides, Mr. President, if I sought any political advantage, I would not want a very much better issue in a congressional election in the rural districts of America than this naked proposition of the product of the farm against the product of the factory

It was stated in the House of Representatives the other day that the secretary to the President has announced that if the appropriation of $12,000 for automobile expenditure remains in the bill as the House has restored it, it is the intention of the President to discard horses and substitute the automobile. We do a great many things in this world according to the fashion, and people in high places sometimes set the fashion. When the President turns his horses out to die, then everybody who wants to imitate the President does the same thing, and the example extends itself down, not only to everybody who can buy an automobile, but to a good many people who can not afford to buy one. Thus you are depriving the farmers of a valuable customer for one of the necessary products of the farm. I say "necessary," because it is necessary if the farmer is to have a profit.

If we are, in high places, to set the example of discarding the horse and substituting the machine, the people who have raised him and who must thrive, if they thrive at all, by providing the hay and corn and oats to feed him, which the city folks have heretofore been buying from the farmer, and the farmers of the American Republic know it, I am willing to go to them on that question in the next congressional election. If it is true that the farmers are content to stand by and see their Representatives constantly and systematically displacing the product of the farm for the product of the factory, then they ought to walk.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, I had no desire or purpose to enter into a discussion with the Senator from Texas. fact, I did not know the Senator had come in. He did not approach me in any furtive way, but I am blind on one side, and it seemed like exploding a bomb under me when he started into the debate in that way.

While I always differ with reluctance from my friend, and especially shun a contest in logic with him, I think his position is entirely untenable. For instance, in the product of the farm, take the horse as a concrete example, which he is advocating and so earnestly pressing. If it is bad to have automobiles substituted for carriages, then it is fearful to have railroads substituted for wagons, because if we did not have any railroads to transport our products we would have to have millions of horses to carry them, and some of them never could reach the market at all.

I do not hesitate to assert that if it were not for the railroads the West, which is blossoming like a rose, would not have reached out and reached out until we have even crossed the desert after having gotten to its borders. But for the railroads transporting the products of those very farms those States would be prairie to-day and be inhabited by buffaloes, or their products would have rotted on the farms and the price would have been probably a third or a half less than what the western farmers now obtain.

Coming to the other proposition, it does not follow at all that the use of the automobile in the way it is used now is going to concentrate our population in the cities, for the simple reason that I happen to have had the necessity as well as the pleasure of visiting London during the last year.

Mr. BAILEY. Whenever a man goes abroad— Mr. TILLMAN. Wait a minute. I went there in search of health and I thank God I have a reasonable share of it.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President—
Mr. TILLMAN. Wait until I get through.
Mr. BAILEY. Let me make a comment right there.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. TILLMAN. Surely; I yield always. Mr. BAILEY. I rejoice that the Senator found health, but I am sorry he brought back with him some of the foreign notions.

Mr. TILLMAN. Wait a minute. I did not bring back foreign notions, because I was calling attention, if the Senator had permitted me-he went off half-cocked-to the fact that while I was in London, where the greatest aggregation of human beings ever was assembled in a given area—having been told by those who know that there are 7,500,000 within 5 miles of Trafalgar Square-I did not see half a dozen automobiles, and there is no population with a greater concentration of a vicious and poor element of men anywhere else on the globe.

Therefore, it does not follow at all that automobiles are necessary to make people poor or to concentrate them in cities. The Senator's position is entirely untenable and illogical, and he will have to confess it before he gets through.

Mr. BAILEY. The Senator from South Carolina ought to have extended his knowledge a little more than his personal observation. Within the last twenty days I have read an extract from one of the principal publications in Great Britain, in which it is asserted that the progress of the various motive power has been such that if Great Britain were to become involved in a war to-day she would be unable to mount her cayalry; that the breeding and raising of horses has been discontinued to such an extent in the Kingdom of Great Britain that she could not mount her cavalry if a foreign army were to attempt to invade her shores. That is not what I say; it is not what some American agricultural paper says; but that is the assertion of a great publication in Great Britain.

Now, Mr. President, I want to say to the Senator that there is no argument more fallacious than that based on an analogy, when the analogy is either carried too far or stops too short; and as to the assertion of the Senator that because I protest against displacing the horse from work which he can do, and do just as well as these machines, therefore the same logic would have compelled me to have resisted the construction of railroads; with all deference to the Senator, when he talks about lack of logic he lacks it woefully right at that point.

In the first place, the horse could not have carried the great commerce which we now produce on our farms and in our factories; and the extension and development of the railroads have helped, as he well says, to make a market for the very things which the horse produces and which the farmers produce with the aid and by the labor of the horse.

But this is not a proposition to extend markets for farm products. Of course I know there is a kind of argument which tells us, and which asks us with some show of reason to accept it, that as you withdraw people from the farms and crowd them into the cities you have less competition in the production of farm products and a greater consumption of them. In other words, they tell us that if you take people from the farms and crowd them into cities you reduce the production in the country and increase the consumption of the farm products. There is some force in that; but we come to the other fatal objectionthat as you take people from the country where the air is free and pure and where they breathe a kind of spirit of patriotism and crowd them into the narrow tenements and dark places of a city, you convert a good citizen too often into a riotous one.

Nobody disputes that. TILLMAN.

Mr. BAILEY. Then, if nobody disputes that, everybody must admit that just in the same proportion as you substitute the product of the factory for the product of the farm you are taking from the rural population of this country and concentrating in the cities. No curse, in my opinion, could match that In the cities, when men are without bread and when men are not comfortably housed, when women and children live with the light and air of God shut out of their apartments, I do not wonder that they have a sentiment in their soul that would welcome any change, even the subversion of social order and governmental regulation, as an improvement in their condi-

It is in the city where we breed the anarchy, where we breed the socialism, where we breed all the vices that threaten the stability of this Republic. If I had my way, I would take the elements that are now crowded in the cities and I would send them to our smaller farms, and the problem which confronts us would be infinitely less serious than it is to-day. I do not plead for this merely because of the profit of the farmer. I plead for it as a condition which makes farm life attractive as well as profitable.

Mr. President, I have had some experience in this regard; I was raised in an agricultural country; all my life I have lived among an agricultural people; and I can tell what kind of folks I am going to find in a house, if they will let me first go through the barnyard. If I go through there and find the cattle well tended and find the horses and the mules sleek and well kept and I see them comfortably housed and I see the vehicles are such as men of spirit and women of refinement love to use, I know that when I go into the house, though I may not find the walls covered with paintings, though I may not find the house decorated with fine furniture, I will find the kind of men and women and children there that make a republic great and permanent. On the other hand, if I go there and find the cow's horn off, the horse's hip down, and the buggy looks as though it were ready to fall the first time anybody gets into it, I know I shall find the same kind of people when I get into the house. The test of a farmer's prosperity, I will say to the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. Tillman], is always the live stock with which the farmer surrounds himself. I may not be able to maintain that when the horse disappears from the farmer's economy.

Mr. TILLMAN. Does the Senator from Texas reckon that we shall ever get to plowing with automobiles?

Mr. BAILEY. No; I think not; and yet the Senator from South Carolina is not unmindful of the fact that they are using steam plows on all the great farms.

TILLMAN. And they could not raise those immense crops of wheat and oats and various other things if they did not have other than horsepower to break up those vast areas that they are putting in wheat and oats in the Dakotas, eastern Oregon, and Washington.

Mr. BAILEY. If we could take some of the uncomfortable and dissatisfied people from the cities and send them out there, we would not need steam plows to cultivate the land, and the country would be better off.

Mr. TILLMAN. That may be; but somehow or other the fellow prefers to stay in the city; because, probably, he can get more wages than the farmer is able to pay him. I remember I found in the West a couple of years ago that there was a great clamor for labor, but the trouble was that, though they could get a dollar and a half a day, the denizens in the cities the dwellers in dark streets and attics and all that kind of thing—would not go there. I do not know why.

Mr. BAILEY. It may be true that they do not like to work. and it may be true that a man would rather work around a furnace where the heat was artificial than he would to work in the field where the heat is made in God's own way. I can not quite comprehend how a man likes the artificial heat better than the sun's heat: but the Senator from South Carolina must remember that the reason people of the city will not go to the farm is because $1.50 a day is not a permanent wage. If it were, they would go; but that is only now and then. They realize that a man can not afford to travel from New York to the Dakotas for the purpose of getting $1.50 a day for sixty or ninety days.

I want to say to the Senator from South Carolina, furthermore, that one of the reasons people like to stay in the cities, instead of on the farm, is the very course of legislation we are now pursuing—always preferring the prosperity of the city above the prosperity of the agricultural communities; always legislating so as to draw the men from the country which God made into the town which men have made. That is not the course of legislation which wise men ought to pursue; and, if persisted in, it will bring results too awful to contemplate.

In my time I have seen the farmers of this country prosperous, and then I have seen their prosperity sink to a low ebb; and I have seen every time that the farmer prospers that the balance of the country prospers; and then, when I have seen him descend into that valley over which falls the dark shadow of bankruptcy and poverty, I have seen others from the city walking by his side. There can be no real, substantial, or permanent prosperity in this Republic unless it is based upon the earth, for it is true in political economy, as in the physical world, that it all at last rests upon the earth. The men who till that earth, the men who tickle it with a hoe and make it laugh a field's rich harvest, are the men who perpetuate free institutions in this and all other countries.

If it be to stand in the way of progress when I stand up for men like that, I cheerfully bear the opprobrium of being op-posed to progress, science, and invention, for, Mr. President, while I believe in progress, I believe infinitely more in safety.

That is my philosophy.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, there is so much eloquence and truth in what the Senator from Texas contends for that I hardly know what portion of his argument to pick out for an-I am not in a contentious mood anyway; I am a peaceably minded man, if people will let me alone [laughter], and, as I said, I had no idea or purpose in the world of arousing my leonine friend on my left. I want, however, to call his attention to a thought which struck me as he went along. I agree to almost all he says as to country life, because I am still a farmer, while he has left the farm and gone to practicing law.

Mr. BAILEY. The Senator from South Carolina is mistaken. I do both.

Mr. TILLMAN. I am not able to do both, because I was never admitted to the bar, and would not be competent to practice law if I had been; but I am a pure, simple farmer, nothing else as a matter of business. The Senator from Texas perhaps, being a capitalist or having more money than I have, has invested in land that which he has made as legal fees.

But I want to call his attention to the danger of quoting an isolated fact as a basis for an argument, such as he has been giving us. Speaking of England not being able to mount her cavalry because there are so few horses being raised in England in competition with the machines, automobiles, and other things of that character that have taken the place of horses. I want to say to the Senator that if England depended on her own products, if Britain-taking England, Scotland, Ireland, and Wales-were to depend on the horses produced there they would be in the same fix that they are in regard to food. If you were to shut off the supply of imports from Englandits bread and its meat—for ninety days, you would put the whole island on the verge of starvation. That is the reason why England is compelled to maintain the great fleet that she does to protect her commerce and bring to her doors the food which is necessary to preserve the lives of her people. She has those vast colonies of Australia, Canada, New Zealand, and colonies in Africa and in every part of the world from which to draw her cavalry horses, or she can come over here and buy them, as she did in the Boer war.

It is not worth while for us to run off on the contemplation of the beautiful picture the Senator from Texas has drawn of farm life and the necessity for and the value of maintaining a sturdy yeomanry, which everybody recognizes as the very essence of good citizenship and the basis for all the armies of the world that ever have done any fighting worth doing. The denizens of the cities have never been noted for their soldierly qualities. The Romans went to the country to get their soldiers, just as England has had to go to the country to get hers, and we shall have to go to the country in case we have a death grapple with any other nation.

But, as I said in the beginning, I did not intend to arouse my friend here. While I have been very much edified by his eloquent words, setting forth the beauties of farm life and pleading for the maintenance of the farmer's opportunity and right to live and to get some of the good things of this world, I think the Senator is still mistaken in his dread of the effect of automobiles on rural life. He just "boos" and "shoos" at the automobile, without taking into consideration that it is a part of the progress of the world and serves its good uses the same as railroads and other things do, and that the horse is not going out of business because we have got automobiles; but I do want the automobiles in Washington to go out of the business of scaring me. [Laughter. I

Mr. BAILEY. I was going to ask the Senator the questionand I will not prolong the colloquy-if it necessarily follows that every invention is an improvement? We have invented a kind of pistol now that all you have got to do is to try to shoot once and you can shoot five or six times.

Mr. TILLMAN. You have just got to pull the trigger until the gun is empty.

Mr. BAILEY. No; you do not have to pull the trigger but once. It is a kind of automatic arrangement. I do not believe that is any progress. I believe it ought to be made a crime for a man to have one of those pistols in his possession, provided, of course, that the State in which he happened to possess it made it a crime. It is not civilized warfare; it is almost like shooting a man with a poisoned bullet, and I think the possession of that kind of an invention ought to be prima facie evidence that a man intends to commit a crime, because, if he uses it on one of his fellow-citizens, he does not give him a decent chance for his life. I could name more than one invention that I do not think marks any degree of progress in the world's history.

The automobile is one of that kind. The Senator from South Carolina himself says that it runs over people.

Mr. TILLMAN. That is because the policemen will not stop them and make them run at a reasonable rate of speed.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I doubt if the police can always The policemen seem to do their duty. stop them in time. am told-I do not know whether it is true or not-that when a man rides in one of these automobiles he gets what is called the "speed craze," and does not want to go at all unless he goes very fast.

Mr. TILLMAN. If he breaks his own neck I do not care, but [Laughter.] I do not want him to run over me and break my leg.

Mr. BAILEY. I do not want him to break his own neck. a man transgresses the law and is hurt in the transgression, he is still not beyond the pale of my sympathy I do not want anybody hurt. Of course, I had rather the occupant of a machine be hurt than some innocent user of the public highway; but if men will persist in having automobiles, I suppose we shall reach the time which, I am told, the French people have already reached. I am told that if a man gets run over in France by one of these automobiles, they punish him instead of the man who runs over him, upon the theory, I suppose, that the machine has the right of way, and the pedestrian must get out of the way or be killed. The Senator from South Carolina has been abroad, and I have not, and I should like to know if that is the law in France.

Mr. TILLMAN. I did not make any examination into automobiles, for I never have had any use for the things here or anywhere else, because I am scared of them. [Laughter.] But I will say for the Senator's benefit that neither he, nor I, nor anybody else will ever be able to stop the use of automobiles. because they mark a distinct advance in motive power, such as the locomotive invented by Stephenson. A machine which, by the use of water and fire, could run itself was regarded as one of the great inventions of the age, and to-day it is just as inevitable that that same instrumentality or mechanism should be run upon any ordinary road, if it is well graded and properly ballasted, as that 2 and 2 make 4. I am surprised the Senator does not confine his appeals for the horse to a legitimate channel, and not go away off yonder straying into the realms of—I will not say what. [Laughter.]

Mr. BAILEY. Language fails the Senator at that point. Mr. TILLMAN. "Illegitimate logic," I will say, if the Senator wants me to fill it out. [Laughter.]

Mr. BAILEY. I am not trying to prevent people from using automobiles. I am not one of the men that invoke the law to keep people from doing what they have a right to do.

Mr. TILLMAN. If the Senator will permit me— The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. BAILEY. I do. Mr. TILLMAN. The The Senator was speaking about how to stop them. I will tell him how we stopped them in Anderson County, in my State, when they came "puff, puff, puff" down there.

Mr. BAILEY. They shot one, I guess.
Mr. TILLMAN. Yes; they did. When these machines got to scaring the horses of the farmers and their wives and daughters out on the roadways, it got so that every man who started off put his trusty old shotgun in his buggy, and when one of these things came along he just simply reached down and held the fellow up. They then got very polite and obeyed the law very quickly. [Laughter.]

Mr. BAILEY. I hardly think the Senator from South Carolina would recommend that example.

Mr. TILLMAN. I would not have anybody shot here for disobeying the law; but if you will capture these men, as they can be captured, and make them pay heavy fines for disobeying the law and the police regulations, you will stop them running through the streets of Washington at 30 miles an hour.

Mr. BAILEY. I believe the laws ought to be obeyed Mr. TILLMAN. They ought to be enforced, if they are not obeyed.

Mr. BAILEY. I was just going to observe, if the Senator had not interrupted me in the middle of a sentence, that all laws ought to be obeyed and that all laws are obeyed by good citizens, and when a man is not willing to obey them, the police ought to enforce them against him. I cordially unite with the Senator in thinking that the police ought to arrest and that the magistrates ought to punish men who disregard the law that limits the speed of automobiles.

Mr. TILLMAN. The automobile board, the one which brought about this discussion, ought to revoke the license of anyone who is guilty of transgressing the rules.

Mr. BAILEY. Any kind of punishment that is sufficient to insure obedience to the law would satisfy me, and I think probably a revocation of the license would be a very effective means of punishment. But I pause here to say to the Senator from South Carolina that the shotgun policy as a means of vindicating each man's right to the public highway is not one to be recommended. I should much prefer the orderly and peaceable way.

But, to go back a moment, I want to say to the Senator that if he understands me as advocating a law to prevent people from using automobiles I have been very unfortunate in my use of words. I would not prevent any man from using any invention, whether a machine or whatever genius might contrive, so long as he could use it without endangering the lives or the limbs of other people, provided always that he did not endanger their health or their happiness. I expressed on a former occasion my belief that the use of the public highway by automobiles is dangerous. I do not believe that anyone in this world has the right to use the public highways in such a manner as to endanger the safety of other people who also have the right to use it. In stating that I not only stated what I consider to be a sound principle of legislation, but I consider that I state what is the universal rule of law.

I hear it sometimes stated that if the horse is afraid of what genius has created the horse ought to give up the highway, but I am rather inclined to think that the horse has the oldest right to the highway. He has what the lawyers call an "ancient and prescriptive right;" and if it is impossible for him to enjoy this right without this modern machine also enjoying the same right, the horse having the older right, his right must prevail.

But that is apart. What I am protesting against now is that the Government shall itself set this example and invite everybody to follow it. In a great city like New York, where distances are from 15 to 20 miles from one part of it to another, I can readily understand the necessity of having some means of locomotion quicker than the horse furnishes. stand even how elevated railroads and the underground subway would still not provide for everybody and at every place; I can readily understand how, under a condition like that, men would want a different means of locomotion, and they would have the right to purchase it and to use it. But distances are not so great in Washington that men can not go from one place to another with very comfortable dispatch by using a horse.

Most of the Senators walk. I think it would be better for us all if we walked more and rode a little less. I think it would be conducive to our health. But that is aside from what I am now contending. If a Senator wants to ride, let him go and buy his own machine and ride in it; but the Government of the United States ought not by its example to teach the people of this country to discard the horse and to adopt the machine where the horse can serve the purpose, because, when it does so, it encourages, I repeat, the rejection of a product of the farm and the substitution of the product of a factory. It is against that that I protest—against the Government encouraging men to do it.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, a single observation of a practical nature. I want to say to Senators that we have a very good automobile law in this District. I think the penalties for its violation are pretty severe, and if it is not observed it is not the fault of the Congress, but, of course, the fault of the officers who ought to enforce the law. I think this discussion will have a very good effect, and that the officers will take notice of the fact that there are some men in Washington who complain that the law is being habitually violated. Now, I hope that the reading of the bill will proceed.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill on page 16, line 3, and read as follows:

Department of insurance: For superintendent of insurance, $3,500; examiner, $1,500; statistician, $1,500; clerk, $1,000; stenographer, $720; temporary clerk hire, $1,200; in all, $9,420.

Mr. OVERMAN. I inquire of the Senator from New Hampshire what is meant by the provision just read? Do they have an insurance company under the District government?

Mr. GALLINGER. We have a department of insurance in the District of Columbia that is bringing into the treasury of the District, I think, some $75,000 a year or more. They have supervision over the fire and life insurance companies that are doing business in the District, and see that they pay proper fees for the privilege.

Mr. OVERMAN. Yes.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, in connection with the discussion on automobiles, I desire to have it printed in the RECORD, so that Senators may see it for themselves, the law of the District of Columbia in that respect.

Mr. BACON. Will the Senator, without stopping to read it all, give us in substance the regulation as to speed?

Mr. GALLINGER. The law provides that within the fire limits of the District of Columbia they must not make a greater speed than 12 miles an hour between intersecting streets and avenues; nor at a greater rate of speed than 15 miles an hour through any of the parks within said District; nor across streets at a greater speed than 8 miles an hour; nor at a greater rate of speed than 6 miles an hour around the corners of any street or avenue; nor at a greater rate of speed than 4 miles an hour on the east side of Fifteenth street NW. between the south building line of G street and the south curb line of New York avenue; nor on the west side of Fifteenth street NW between the line which would be the south building line of G street if extended to the west side of Fifteenth street, and from said extended line north to the north curb line of Pennsylvania avenue, and so forth.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I want to say, without the slightest hesitation, that that law is violated every minute and every second of the day, and grossly and undisguisedly violated.

Mr. GALLINGER. As to penalties, I think the law is pretty severe. I will say that the author of this law is Mr. Sims, of the House of Representatives, who is not a lover of automobiles, I believe. We discussed the propriety of revoking the license after two or three offenses, but it was argued that if we revoked a license, the automobile could be turned over to another man, who would get a license and go along running the same machine, so we put into this law penalties as follows:

Machine, so we put into this law penalties as follows:

And the driver or operator and the owner or proprietor riding thereon or therein violating any of the provisions hereof shall, upon conviction for the first offense, be fined not less than $5 nor more than $50, and shall, upon conviction for the second offense within one year from the commission of the first offense, be fined not less than $10 nor more than $100, or imprisoned for not less than five days nor more than thirty days, at the discretion of the court; and shall, upon conviction for the third offense within one year from the commission of the first offense, and for any and all subsequent offenses, be fined not less than $50 nor more than $250, and be imprisoned in the workhouse for not less than thirty days nor more than six months.

Mr. BACON, I want to say that my observation and I

Mr. BACON. I want to say that my observation-and I have observed the matter a good deal, because it irritates meis that most of the gross violations of this law do not occur when the owners of the machines are in them, but they occur when the chauffeurs are running the machines about without the owners of them. Then they seem to be absolutely reckless and regardless of the law or any consideration for the safety of human beings. It is frequently the case in the part of the city in which I live that these machines are run at a speed of at least 30 miles an hour across streets, around corners, and in every other way

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask that the law in reference to automobiles in the District of Columbia may be printed in the

The VICE-PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, permission is granted.

The law referred to is as follows:

[Public-No. 361.]

An act regulating the speed of automobiles in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

and for other purposes.

Be it enacted, ctc., That no person shall drive or propel, or cause to be driven or propelled, any automobile, horseless or motor vehicle, bicycle, or horse-drawn vehicle within the fire limits of the District of Columbia, as said fire limits are now defined or may hereafter be defined from time to time in and by the building regulations of said District, upon any street, avenue, alley, or public highway at a greater rate of speed than 12 miles an hour between intersecting streets and avenues; nor at a greater rate of speed than 15 miles an hour through any of the parks within said District; nor across streets at a greater speed than 8 miles an hour; nor at a greater rate of speed than 6 miles an hour around the corners of any street or avenue; nor at a greater rate of speed than 4 miles an hour on the east side of Fifteenth street NW. between the south building line of G street and the south curb line of New York avenue; nor on the west side of Fifteenth street NW, between the line which would be the south building line of G street if extended to the west side of Fifteenth street NW, between the line which would be the south building line of G street if extended to the west side of Fifteenth street NW, between the line which would be the south building lines of the intersection of Ninth and F streets NW, between the building lines of the said streets; nor at the intersection of Ninth and G streets NW, between the building lines of said streets; nor at the intersection of Eleventh and F streets NW. between the building lines of the said streets; nor at the intersection of Eleventh and G streets NW. between the building lines of the said streets; nor on any public roadway, street, avenue, or alley within said District outside of said fire limits at a great rate of speed than 20 miles an hour; and when meeting or passing any other vehicle the speed shall not exceed 12 miles an hour, and any automobile shall be brought to a full stop whenever the driver of a horse-drawn vehicle shall signal by raising the hand, and said vehicles shall at all times be under the control of the driver or operator; and the driver or operator and the owner or proprietor riding thereon or therein violating any of the provisions hereof shall, upon conviction for the first offense, be fined not less than $5 nor more than $50, and shall, upon conviction for the second offense within one year from the commission of the first offense, be fined not less than $10 nor more than $100, or imprisoned for not less than five days nor more than thirty days, at the discretion of the court; and shall, upon conviction for the third offense within one year from the commission of the first offense, and for any and all subsequent offenses, be fined not less than $50 nor more than $250, and be imprisoned in the workhouse for not less than thirty days nor more than six months.

imprisoned in the workhouse for not less than thirty days nor more than six months.

Sec. 2. That prosecutions for violation of the provisions of this act shall be on information filed in the police court of the District of Columbia by the corporation coursel or any of his assistants.

Sec. 3. That this act shall not be held to take away the authority of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to make police regulations not inconsistent herewith.

Approved June 29, 1906.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I perceive that the bill is going along rapidly, and I have been unable to keep up with its I wish the Senator from New Hampshire in charge of the bill would tell me on what page is the amendment which has been discussed.

Mr. GALLINGER. Page 16.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 17, line 4, before the word "dollars," to strike out "five thousand" and insert "six thousand five hundred," so as to make the clause read:

For services of temporary draftsmen, computers, laborers, additional field party when required, purchase of supplies, care or hire of teams, purchase and maintenance of a motor vehicle, $6.500; all expenditures hereunder to be made only on the written authority of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, and may include the purchase of a motor vehicle at a cost not exceeding $1,500, said vehicle to be driven by a member of the field party using the same.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 17, line 12, to increase the total appropriation for maintenance of surveyor's office from $28,425 to $29,925.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 17, line 18, after the word dollars," to insert "chief, useful arts department, $1,200," so as to read:

Free public library: For librarian, $3,500; assistant librarian, $1,500; chief, circulating department, $1,200; chief, circulating department, $1,200; chief, useful arts department, $1,200.

Mr. CULBERSON. I will ask the Senator if that is a new department of the library that has been organized recently?

Mr. GALLINGER. I think it was organized recently. The librarian stated to the committee that it was very largely patronized, and he felt that he ought to have some one to take charge of it.

Mr. CULBERSON. The amendment reads:

Chief, useful arts department, $1,200.

Apparently a new department having been created in the library.

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes. The librarian, I think, designates the various departments. For instance, the librarian asked for a chief of the order department. We did not allow that, · Certain subordinates, I suppose, were doing the best they could to care for the departments not specifically provided for. He also asked for a chief of catalogue department, and so on, but we only allowed this one clerk—he is nothing but a clerk after all to care for that particular department, which the librarian said was a very important one.

This library is doing a great work, the patronage is increasing by leaps and bounds, and unquestionably the force now there is very inadequate to give proper service. In fact, I am told, and not by the librarian, but by others, that a long row of people oftentimes is there to get waited on, and because of the inadequate force the people have to wait and take their turn, which is sometimes rather provoking to them. The committee felt that they ought to give this library a little additional force, and among other things they allowed this chief for the useful-arts department.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. May I ask the Senator from New Hampshire a question?

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. What does the department of useful arts do? I am not thinking of objecting to the item. The Senator from Maine [Mr. Hale] suggests to me that I ask what it does not do. Of course, in his answer the Senator might include both.

Mr. GALLINGER. I fear I can not specifically answer the question. I have not recently gone through the testimony; but, as I say, the librarian, who is a very competent man-and he is being advised by the Librarian of Congress, who is now on the board—has, in the exercise of his judgment, made certain departments in the library, and this is one of them; and I have no doubt that if the Senator could investigate the matter a little more carefully than he can do to-day and get more definite information than I can give him he would find that this is a department which ought to be sustained. At any rate there is no one in the library—and I know all about it—from the top to the bottom who is not kept very busy, and unquestionably they need more service than they have at the present time.

I wish that I could answer the Senator more definitely than I can at present, but I confess I do not know what the exact duties of this person may be.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I think the Senator has answered in a way that ought to be satisfactory to all Senators. I agree with the Senator that the Government has not a more useful and accomplished officer than the librarian in charge of this library, and the fact that he recommends it carries very great weight with me. I was merely attracted by the curious wording there—some person in charge of the department of useful arts.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER subsequently said: While I am anxious to proceed with the bill as rapidly as possible, I wish to read from the House hearings, which I had before me in the committee but which I had forgotten, the statement of the librarian concerning the useful arts department. I recall the fact that he made an oral statement before our committee. He said:

The useful arts department has been in operation for one year. It has been successful from the outset. Its chief users are men who come with the definite problems of engineering or of their trades or their business affairs to solve. It was established partly to relieve the overcrowded condition of the main reference room and partly because the library wished to make itself practically helpful to business men, engineers, and mechanics. It is accomplishing this purpose, but it is doing so with an inadequate force and at the expense of drawing the assistant librarian away from most of his administrative work.

The librarian stated that evenings there are a very large number of business men, engineers, and men of practical affairs in the room, and that they remain until the library closes, and they get very useful knowledge; which statement impressed the

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in the item for free public library, page 17, line 19, to strike out "assistant, $900," and insert "two assistants, at $900 each;" in line 21, before the word "assistants," to strike out "four" and insert "five;" on page 18, line 5, before the word "attendants," to strike out "five" and insert "six;" and in line 18, before the word "dollars," to strike out "thirty-eight thousand six hundred and eighty" and insert "forty-two thousand and forty" so as to read: sand and forty," so as to read:

Free public library: For librarian, $3,500; * * * chief, useful arts department, $1,200; 2 assistants, at $900 each; 5 assistants, at $720 each; * * 2 assistants, at $480 each; 6 attendants, at $540 each; * * in all, $42,040.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 19, line 4, to increase the appropriation for purchase of books for the free public library from $7,500 to $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 19, line 7, after the word to insert "purchase and maintenance of transportation vehicles;" and in line 10, before the word "dollars," to strike out "seven thousand five hundred" and insert "eight thousand," so as to make the clause read:

For fuel, lighting, fitting up building, purchase and maintenance of transportation vehicles, including lunch-room equipment, and other contingent expenses, $8,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 19, line 11, to increase the total appropriation for miscellaneous items, etc., free public library, from $18,500 to $21,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 20, line 7, before the word "thousand," to strike out "thirty-five" and insert "thirty-eight," so as to read:

For contingent expenses of the government of the District of Columbia, namely, * * $38,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued to the end of line 16, on page 20.

Mr. FLINT. Mr. President, I desire to inquire whether individual amendments are now in order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Only committee amendments are now in order.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 21, line 14, to increase the appropriation for postage for strictly official mail matter from $8,000 to $9,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 21, line 19, to increase the appropriation for necessary expenses in the collection of overdue personal taxes from $3,500 to $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 22, line 5, to increase the appropriation for livery of horse or horse hire for coroner's office, jurors' fees, witness fees, removal of deceased persons, etc., from $3,000 to $3,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 23, after line 11, to insert:

For making surveys to obtain accurate data with reference to old subdivisions in the District of Columbia, $2,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 23, after line 14, to insert:

For the office of the register of wills: For furnishing to the office of the assessor copies of wills, petitions, and all necessary papers wherein title to real estate is involved, $900.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 23, after line 22, to insert:

For extra services necessary to classify, arrange, and rebind the old records of the District of Columbia, including the corporations of Washington, Georgetown, and the levy court, with authority to employ clerks of the auditor's and other offices after office hours, $1,500.

Mr. BURKETT. Mr. President, it seems to me the whole amendment is bad, but I desire to move to amend it on page 24, line 2, by striking out the words beginning in line 2:

With authority to employ clerks of the auditor's and other offices after office hours.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nebraska proposes an amendment to the amendment, which will be stated.

The Secretary. On page 24, line 2, after the word "court," it is proposed to strike out "with authority to employ clerks of the auditor's and other offices after office hours."

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I will say just a word before the question is put. That item was placed in the appropriation bill upon the representation that the clerks in the office who are experienced and competent were very much more qualified to do this work than some outside person. pressed with the belief that that was doubtless so; and I think the words ought to remain in the bill. Mr. BURKETT. Mr. President, my opinion is that the extra services will not be very great. It will simply be getting the books that are torn ready for rebinding. Those books ought to be taken down and arranged in office hours. If you put in this authority, the work will be done after office hours. Here is a thing that has occurred very often in my experience. ple come in for employment after office hours. It has always been the belief of the committees of Congress that that is a bad practice. In the first place, if the office hours are not long enough, they ought to be lengthened and the salaries made greater in proportion. But more particularly, in my opinion, if the words that I have moved to strike out are left out, this work will be done by the clerks, and it will be done in office hours, and we will save that much, because they are not going to get any outside help. The work will be done in office hours if we strike out the authority to pay them for work after office hours. That is my opinion about it; and I think we would save that much. I think we ought not to encourage clerks, for example, or departments to come in, and on a pretense of some little extra work get authority to do it after office hours and have extra pay for it.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, it is safe to say that if the words go out, and it is expected that this work will be done by the clerks now in the office, it will not be done at all. They have been asking for this for three or four years, to my knowledge. The work has not been done. The clerks have an abundance of work to do during the regular office hours; and it is a mere question whether we will permit those clerks to do it, or whether an additional clerk shall be appointed under the provision of this paragraph. If the words which the Senator objects to are stricken out, beyond a question a fifteen hundred dollar clerk will be appointed and will go into the office for the purpose of doing that particular service. I hope the amendment will not be agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Nebraska to the amendment. [Putting the question.] By the sound the "noes"

Mr. BURKETT. A division!

The VICE-PRESIDENT. A division is demanded.
Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, it is manifest that that will develop the absence of a quorum, and if the question is to be contested I will call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. BURKETT. I withdraw the request.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Nebraska to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 24, after line 4, to insert:

For repair of buildings owned and used by the District of Columbia when injured by fire, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 24, after line 6, to insert: For fireproof steel file cases for the office of register of wills of the District of Columbia, $1,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 24, line 10, after the word "wiring," to strike out "system" and insert "and gas systems," so as to make the clause read:

For the installation of a permanent electric-wiring and gas systems for lighting and power in the western District of Columbia Market, $800.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 25, line 5, to increase the appropriation for the elimination of grade crossings from $150,-000 to $200,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 25, in line 6, after the word "dollars," to insert the following proviso:

word "dollars," to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby authorized to use such portion of the unexpended balances of the appropriations for elimination of grade crossings, District of Columbia, improvement of plaza, as may be necessary for the construction of the three flagstaffs shown upon the approved plans for "Plaza improvement, Union Station," on file in the office of the Engineer Commissioner of the District of Columbia: And provided further, That the Washington Terminal Company shall first convey to the United States all that portion of the terminal area, as described in the act of February 28, 1903, providing for a union railroad station in the District of Columbia, lying north of the north line of Massachusetts avenue and south of the line of balustrades of islands "C," "D," "E," and "F," and of the north line of lamp-posts of the central island, as shown on the plans referred to above.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 25, line 24, to increase the appropriation for assessment and permit work from $160,000 to $200,000.

Mr. OVERMAN. I should like to ask the Senator from New Hampshire what is meant by the term "assessment and permit work." I do not understand it. The amendment increases the appropriation from $160,000 to $200,000.

Mr. GALLINGER. It is work on the streets. I will say to the Senator, where permits are issued to make certain improvements, and it is assessed ordinarily against the holders of the property and some part of it returned to the revenues of the District. But it relates wholly to street improvements. The term "permit work" has been used I guess since the time of the organic act in the District, and is well understood at the District building.

Mr. BURKETT. If I understand it aright, the alleys are paved and the sidewalks are builded in a different way from that in which the streets are paved. One-half of the sidewalk is paved by the property owner, but the District pays it, puts up the money, and assesses the half back, as I understand, and that is what this fund is used for. It is the fund they use every year in the paving of sidewalks.

Why do they call it "permit work?" Do Mr. OVERMAN. we pay for work that we permit somebody else to do?

Mr. BURKETT. Where the term "permit" comes in I have never understood, but I have had it explained to me—

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator from Nebraska has stated it accurately; and I think the term "permit" is used for the reason that they have to get a permit to do the work. That is about all, as I understand.

Mr. OVERMAN. They have to get a permit to do the work, and then the Government pays for it?

Mr. GALLINGER. The Government pays one half of the cost of building a sidewalk and the abutting owner pays the other half; but the District, I understand, puts up the money in the first place and then assesses it back, and thus recoups itself. That is the way I understand it. I may be wrong. But it is a matter that has gone along for a great many years without any difficulty.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 26, line 6, to increase the appropriation for work on streets and avenues from $35,500 to $100,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 26, line 10, to increase the appropriation for the Georgetown schedule from $1,000 to $3,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 26, line 12, to increase the appropriation for the northwest section schedule from $7,000 to $12,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 26, line 13, to increase the appropriation for the southwest section schedule from $10,000 to $15,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 26, line 15, to increase the appropriation for the southeast section schedule from $5,000 to $35,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 26, line 19, to increase the appropriation for the northeast section schedule from $12,500 to $35,000.

Mr. BURKETT. I should like to ask the chairman about this work on streets and avenues. There is so much enumerated for each section of the city. The commissioners usually, I think, submit a list of the streets they propose to improve. Is there anything here which provides, or is there anything to that effect in the law, that they must follow those and improve them down the list as far as the amount that is appropriated will make the improvements, or is there something omitted from this bill? It occurs to me that always heretofore there has been a provision in this bill that this fund should be used as far on the list of streets in that particular division as it would go. It occurs to me that the language here omits something and leaves it discretionary. They may improve the last street on the list as well as the first under this language. Perhaps there is a general law on the subject.

Mr. GALLINGER. The commissioners in their estimates submit a list of streets in each section of the city which the amount appropriated will enable them to improve. Last year the appropriation was $88,500, as I remember it, and for some unexplained and unexplainable reason the House reduced it to $35,500 this year. The commissioners estimated this year $100,000 and apportioned it precisely as it is amended in this bill, and then submitted the list of streets that the amount named in each schedule would improve. So they are compelled to improve all the streets named in the schedule, there being money enough for that purpose.

Mr. BURKETT. There is money enough? That answers the question.

Mr. GALLINGER. There is money enough for that purpose. The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations. The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 27, after line 23, to insert:

Nineteenth street NW., between Pennsylvania avenue and N street, 30 feet wide; on P street NW., from Wisconsin avenue to Twenty-eighth street, 40 feet wide, and for paving with old granite block Sherman avenue north of Florida avenue with a width of 40 feet, $45,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 28, after line 3, to insert: Seventh street NW., from Q to R street, $7,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 29, line 6, after the word "dollars," to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That $2,000 out of said appropriation, or so much thereof as may be necessary, shall be used to fill to its full width of 160 feet that portion of Sixteenth street that lies south of Piney Branch.

So as to make the clause read:

Northwest: Sixteenth street extended, grade and improve, $10,000; Provided, That $2,000 out of said appropriation, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 31, after line 23, to insert: Northeast: Rhode Island avenue extended, grade and improve, provided the land necessary to open this avenue to its full width to the District line be first dedicated to the District of Columbia without cost, $15,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 32, after line 2, to insert: Northwest: Thirteenth street, Euclid street to Park road, grade and improve, 40 feet wide, $17,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 32, after line 5, to insert: Northeast: Rhode Island avenue, Lincoln road to Fourth street, grade, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 32, after line 7, to insert: Northeast: T street, Lincoln road to Second street, grade and improve, $6,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 32, after line 9, to insert: Southeast: Pennsylvania avenue, grade and improve, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 32, after line 11, to insert: Southeast: Twenty-third street, Naylor road to Minnesota avenue, and from Q street, Twenty-third to Twenty-fifth street, grade and gravel, $4,900.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 32, after line 15, to insert: Northwest: Fessenden street, River road to Wisconsin avenue, grade and improve, $7,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 32, after line 18, to insert: Northwest: Rittenhouse street, from Georgia avenue to Blair road, grade and improve, $12,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 32, after line 21, to insert: Northeast: Fourth street, from end of present pavement to Rhode Island avenue, macadamize, $1,400.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 32, after line 24, to insert: Northwest: Thirteenth street extended, between Park road and Monroe street, widen 10 feet on the easterly side, and grade and improve, $2,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 33, after line 2, to insert: Northeast: Seaton place, from North Capitol street to Lincoln road, pave 30 feet wide, $2,600.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CULBERSON. If I mistake not, the amendment proposed, from the top of page 31 to the top of page 33, inclusive, carries an increase over the House appropriation of $85,000.

I suggest that the Senate is entitled to some explanation of this extraordinary increase, in view of the amount appropriated by the House and the condition of the Treasury.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will say to the Senator, Mr. President, that in addition to the appropriation for paving streets, made that in addition to the appropriation for paving streets, made in the bill as it came to the Senate, the Commissioners of the District had estimated for a very large number of other streets which, in their judgment, needed improvement. The Senate committee examining that list, which had been left out, felt that they could with propriety add something to the House bill, and they added the streets that appear in italies on pages 21, 22, and 22. It is only a prest of what had been left out. 31, 32, and 33. It is only a part of what had been recommended by the commissioners. Upon the representations which were made to the committee we felt that these streets very greatly needed to be improved; and the persons living on those streets, or near them, have been very insistent upon the committee that they ought to be included in the bill.

It will go to conference if the items are left in the bill. hope they will all remain in the bill, but I have very little expectation that they will. However, we probably will get a little addition to what the House allowed for this very necessary

A great deal will have to be done on the streets of Washington yet to make them as passable as they ought to be in a city of this kind. We thought very carefully in selecting these improvements, and I can assure the Senator from Texas, while it does make quite an addition to the bill, the improvements really ought to be made, and the Senate conferees will do the best they can to keep at least a portion of the items in the bill.

Mr. BACON. I should like to inquire of the Senator whether those particular items were before the House or the House committee, and were rejected by them?

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes; they were.

Mr. BACON. They were considered and rejected by the House?

Mr. GALLINGER. They were not inserted.

They were not, then, brought for the first time Mr. BACON. to the Senate?

Mr. GALLINGER. Oh, not at all.

Mr. BACON. They were originally presented to the House? Mr. GALLINGER. They are on the schedule that was made up on the estimates of the commissioners.

Mr. BACON. I understood from the former statement of the Senator that they had been estimated for.

Mr. GALLINGER. They had been estimated. Mr. BACON. I did not know whether they had been presented to the House.

Mr. GALLINGER. They were presented to the House committee, I will say to the Senator.

The next amendment was, on page 33, line 6, to increase the total appropriation for the construction of county roads and suburban streets from $133,600 to $218,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 33, after line 7, to insert: For grading Massachusetts avenue and N street SE., from the Bowen road to Thirtieth street, including the construction of the necessary culverts: Provided, That said thoroughfares, between the limits named, be first dedicated to the District of Columbia, without cost: And provided further, That the sum of $7,000 be deposited with the collector of taxes of the District of Columbia as an addition to the above appropriation, to be expended as a part of the same for the purposes named, including all incidental and contingent expenses, $7,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 33, line 23, before the word "thousand," to insert "and fifty," so as to read:

Repairs streets, avenues, and alleys: For current work of repairs of streets, avenues, and alleys, including resurfacing and repairs to concrete pavements with the same or other not inferior material, of which sum $50,000 shall be immediately available, $350,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 34, after line 23, to insert: For replacing sidewalks and curbs on the east and north sides of the United States Treasury Department building, $5,600.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 35, to insert:

For replacing sidewalks and curbs on the east and north sides of the Government Printing Office, $3,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 35, line 5, before the word "thousand," to insert "and twenty-five," so as to make the clause read:

Repairs county roads: For current work of repairs of county roads and suburban streets, $125,000, of which sum $20,000 shall be immediately available.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 36, to insert:

For removal of the superstructure and substructure of the old Anacostia Bridge, $10,000: Provided, That the unexpended balances of appropriations heretofore made for the construction of the new Anacostia River Bridge and its approaches shall continue available during the fiscal year 1910 for all necessary expenses to complete said bridge and its approaches.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 36, after line 7, to insert: Sixteenth Street Bridge across Piney Branch: For widening bridge across Piney Branch on the line of Sixteenth street, said bridge to be widened to a width over all of 65 feet, $85,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 36, after line 11, to insert: Anacostia flats: For employment of special counsel to investigate and determine the ownership of the land and riparian rights along the Anacostia River, for the purpose of improvement of the Anacostia flats, $5,000.

Mr. GARY. I should like to ask the Senator in charge of the bill for some information concerning this item. It seems to be a rather unusual item, appropriating $5,000 for a lawyer to examine titles. I should like to ask if there are not attorneys employed already whose business it is to do just such work.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will read for the information of the Senator what occurred at the hearing before the subcommittee.

The chairman said:

There is an item here for employment of special counsel to investigate and determine the ownership and riparian rights along the Anacostia River for the purpose of the improvement of the Anacostia flats, $5,000.

Commissioner Macfarland. That was put in by the House committee and, I think, went out on the floor in some way.

A point of order was doubtless made against it.

Senator Gallinger. I think we had it in the bill last year. Do you think it desirable?

Commissioner Macfarland. I think it desirable in order to get at think it desirable?

Commissioner Macfarland. I think it desirable in order to get at the question of title.

Senator Gallinger. The corporation counsel finds it impossible to attend to that?

Commissioner Macfarland. It is quite impossible for him to take this burden. The House committee agreed to it. It is just a question of having your concurrence.

This question has been up before, I will say to the Senator from South Carolina, and some time in the future very great improvements will have to be made along the river front at Anacostia. There is a condition there which is not creditable to this great city, and doubtless a very considerable amount of money will have to be spent when we reach the point where the improvement will be made.

In the meantime there is a controversy as to the title to a very considerable part of the land, and it is extremely desirable that that matter should be settled in some way. office of the corporation counsel say that they are unable to do it; in other words, that some man with special knowledge as to riparian rights, and all that sort of thing, would be a better man to take up this work than any one of the assistants to the corporation counsel. Beyond a doubt the corporation counsel and his assistants are kept very busy in the ordinary work of the office.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly. Mr. CULBERSON. The Senator from New Hampshire has stated that the corporation counsel has a number of assistants. I will ask him how many?
Mr. GALLINGER. He has four.
Mr. CULBERSON. What is the

What is the total salary paid to that office?

Mr. GALLINGER. I should think likely $8,000 or $9,000, possibly $10,000. The assistants are not paid large salaries.

Mr. CULBERSON. What is the salary of the corporation counsel?

Mr. GALLINGER. For a guess I would say $3,000. That may not be accurate; I think it may be above that amount.

Mr. CULBERSON. He has four assistants? Mr. GALLINGER. He has four assistants.

Mr. GALLINGER. He has four assistants. Mr. BURKETT. The corporation counsel is paid $4,500.

Mr. GALLINGER. Forty-five hundred dollars.
Mr. BURKETT. The first assistant receives $2,500, the second assistant $1,800, the third assistant $1,600, and the fourth assistant $1,500.

Mr. GALLINGER. Then the aggregate of salaries is a little in excess of $10,000. I was not accurate in stating the salary of the corporation counsel. When I made the statement I thought that likely I had not put it high enough, but I was not well informed on the subject.

Mr. GARY. I move to amend the committee amendment by striking out "$5,000" and inserting "$2,500."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from South Carolina proposes an amendment to the amendment, which will be read by the Secretary.

The Secretary. In line 15, strike out "$5,000" and insert

"$2,500."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. CULBERSON. I should like to have a vote on the amendment itself.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let it be stated again.
The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment of the committee will be read by the Secretary.

The SECRETARY. On page 36, after line 11, it is proposed to Anacostia flats: For employment of special counsel to investigate and determine the ownership of the land and riparian rights along the Anacostia River, for the purpose of improvement of the Anacostia flats, $5,000.

Mr. BURKETT. Mr. President, I wish to suggest to the Senator who moved to amend the amendment and to those who have called for a vote that in my opinion this is a pretty important matter. Senators will remember that a year ago we had a question as to the right to a piece of property that, apparently, we lost over here, not knowing exactly what our rights were. It was a piece of property that had been filled in here There is a good deal of this property here which probably belongs to the District filled in with accretions. If the corporation counsel can not look after the title, in my opinion somebody ought to look after it, and he ought to look after it very soon.

I will say, also, that there is another piece of land in the District of Columbia, and in my opinion the District government ought to hire special counsel for a considerable time in investigating title to it and the Government's right in it. In my opinion this amendment, from what I have known of the matter in times past and some information I have had, ought not to go out of the bill. This allowance ought to be made some time, somewhere, and there should be a report on these titles to find out what are the rights of the Government so as to prevent others from getting rights by reason of our negligence.

I will say, with reference to the office of the corporation counsel, that I remember when the number of assistants to the corporation counsel was increased to four. I happened to be upon the subcommittee of the Committee on the District of Columbia handling the bill in the House. The committee of the House, I will say, enlarged the office force of the corporation counsel, and before the House committee did it they investigated the matter very thoroughly to find out what work was being done that he had to do. At that time Mr. Duvall, a very hard-working attorney, in whom we had a good deal of confidence, was the corporation counsel, and an additional force was given at that time, including the clerks who were needed to provide for the work he had to do.

It has occurred to me that since that time the work of the office might have depreciated, in view of the fact that some of the titles with reference to street condemnations have been settled. The corporation counsel, it seems to me, ought not to have quite so much work to do as he had two or three years ago. However, I presume in the growth of the District and the multiplicity of important matters that need legal attention perhaps the work of the office has grown with the growth of the District, and therefore he is as busy as he was when he had that special work upon him. But taking the word of the commissioners that the office of the corporation counsel is fully employed, I submit that this is an important matter and we can hardly afford to have it stricken out.

Mr. GALLINGER. Before the amendment is voted on I wish to offer an amendment to it. After the word "dollars," in line 15, I move to insert a comma instead of the period, and to add "or so much thereof as may be necessary."

Mr. McCUMBER. I should like to have the Senator in charge of the bill explain the necessity of employing a special attorney for this work. I understand we have attorneys connected with the government of the District of Columbia who are paid regular salaries for that purpose. Why can not those attorneys be called upon to do this work, and what basis has the Senator for fixing $5,000 or any other fee for this particular work?

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, the Senator, I presume, was out of the Chamber when I stated that the office of corporation counsel is already kept busy with the usual work of that office, and both the corporation counsel and the District Commissioners say that it is utterly impossible for them to take up work of this kind. It is not a small work; it is a very important work, and it will require a good deal of time and a good deal of talent to determine these titles.

Mr. McCUMBER. Will the Senator tell me how much we are paying the corporation counsel at the present time?

Mr. GALLINGER. I have just gone over that, I will say to the Senator; but I presume it can be repeated.

Mr. McCUMBER. The Senator can just tell me generally.

Mr. GALLINGER. The aggregate salary is a little over $10,000 for the corporation counsel and four assistants.

Mr. McCUMBER. That would be less than $2,000 for each. Mr. GALLINGER. The corporation counsel is paid $4,500 and the other $4,000 or $5,000 is divided between four men.

Mr. McCUMBER. Why not put in another man, if they have not enough, and allow another assistant for the next year to put in all of his time on this one question, if it is necessary? Then we would not be paying him any more for a whole year's work than it is proposed to pay one man, and we would be paying him at the rate of $2,500.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I think if the Senator stops and reflects he will see that work of this kind will require special talent. A man who is qualified to do this work would not take the position of fifth assistant corporation counsel at a salary of $1,200 or $1,500 a year, I feel sure.

Mr. McCUMBER. I will answer the Senator by saying that any man who is qualified to hold the position of assistant is qualified to pass upon a question of title. If he is not qualified for work of this kind, he is not qualified to be an assistant attorney to the corporation counsel

Mr. GALLINGER. I am willing that the matter shall be voted on. The committee went over it with great care and were satisfied that the provision is as it ought to be in the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the head of "Sewers," on page 36, after line 18, to insert: For the purchase and maintenance of one motor truck for use in cleaning and repairing sewers and basins, $2,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 37, line 3, to increase the appropriation for suburban sewers from $50,000 to $120,000. The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 37, line 9, to increase the appropriation for continuing work on extension of east side intercepting sewer from boundary sewer to Brookland from $40,000 to $50,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 37, after line 14, to insert: For changes in grade vicinity of Seventeenth and B streets NW. and Second and N streets SW., required by the abandonment of two sewer canals by the construction of the sewage-disposal system, and for the protection of the said system from flooding by river overflow at these points during the high water, $50,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 37, after line 20, to insert: For the Rock Creek west side intercepting sewer: For beginning work on the intercepting sewer on the west side of Rock Creek northward of P street (estimated cost $298,000), $50,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 37, after line 24, to insert: For Piney Branch valley trunk sewer: For beginning the construction of the Piney Branch valley trunk sewer between Sixteenth street and Georgia avenue (estimated cost $300,000), $30,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Streets," in the item for "sprinkling, sweeping, and cleaning," on page 38, line 17, before the word "cents," to strike out "nineteen" and insert "twenty-one;" in line 23, before the word "cents," to strike out "twenty" and insert "twenty-two;" and on page 39, line 1, before the word "thousand," to strike out "two hundred and fifty" and insert "three hundred and twenty-four," so as to make the proviso read: four," so as to make the proviso read:

Provided, That whenever it shall appear to the commissioners that said latter work can not be done under their immediate direction at 21 cents or less per thousand square yards, in accordance with the specifications under which the same was last advertised for bids, it shall at once be their duty to advertise to let said work under said specifications to the lowest responsible bidder; and if the same can not be procured to be done at a price not exceeding 22 cents per thousand square yards, they may continue to do said work under their immediate direction, in accordance with said specifications; $324,000, and the commissioners shall so apportion this appropriation as to prevent a deficiency therein.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 39, after line 3, to strike out-

For cleaning snow and ice from cross walks and gutters, under the act approved March 2, 1895, $4,000—

And in lieu thereof to insert:

For cleaning snow and ice from streets, sidewalks, cross walks, and gutters, in the discretion of the commissioners, including services and not exceeding $10,000 for the purchase of necessary implements, $35,000, to be immediately available and until expended.

Mr. OVERMAN. Why is the appropriation in that case increased from $4,000 to $35,000? The snow is about all gone. I can not understand the reason for the increase.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will suggest to the Senator from North Carolina that if he will look at the provision stricken out he will find that it is only "for cleaning snow and ice from cross walks and gutters," while this provision reads—

For cleaning snow and ice from streets, sidewalks, cross walks, and

The purpose being to give an appropriation sufficiently large to enable the Commissioners of the District, when we have a storm such as we recently had, to put a force of street cleaners and their teams on the work, and do it expeditiously and prop-We have made the sum sufficiently large—and we hope to retain it in the bill—so that we shall never have a repetition of the condition of things that we had a week or two ago, which was protested against by the newspapers, as well as by public men, by citizens of the District, and by visitors to Washington. That is the purpose.

Mr. BACON. I should like to inquire of the Senator from New Hampshire if he thinks the provision made—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. BACON. I desire to ask the Senator if he thinks the provision made will result in such work as will prevent the accumulation of snow remaining upon the sidewalks for as much as a day?

Mr. GALLINGER. I think so. The provision is to enable the commissioners to buy machinery. That means snowplows. The provision is, "$10,000 for the purchase of necessary implements." They have their horses; they have their men; and they will, with this $10,000, buy whatever implements are necessary. When the snow comes they can immediately put their force at work and clean it off, I should think, in a very short time.

Mr. BACON. That refers more to the work on the streets than it does to the work on the sidewalks, does it not?

Mr. GALLINGER. This includes sidewalks.

Mr. BACON. I know; but I am speaking about the machinery contemplated.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think plows would be for sidewalks rather than for streets.

Mr. BACON. Well, of course I may be in error about it, but it strikes me that the snow on the sidewalks is generally not deep, and that plows would not be very efficacious. We had a law which required the property owners to clean off sidewalks, but I believe that was declared by a judge of the District to be unconstitutional.

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes.

Mr. BACON. I never had occasion myself to examine the decision. I want, however, to inquire of the Senator from New Hampshire whether there has ever been any effort made to test the correctness of that decision?

Mr. GALLINGER. I would say to the Senator from Georgia that the law was declared unconstitutional by the courts. Then the Commissioners of the District undertook by regulation to accomplish the same result. That was tested, and went to court, and that was declared unconstitutional. In the committee of which I chanced to have been chairman for the last two years the lawyers of that committee-some of them very good ones-have been struggling to evolve a law on this subject that would stand the test of the courts, and they have about given They have found it impossible to formulate a law that would in their judgment be any more efficacious than that which the courts have declared to be unconstitutional.

Mr. BACON. That was the object of my inquiry, because if such a law can be framed I think it very important. I do not think that any rule or regulation of a municipality, if I may so term the District of Columbia, can be sufficiently efficacious, because the streets are very extended; and while it is a very small work for each property holder, it would require a tre-mendous force to go over the sidewalks of this city; and the sidewalks, it seems to me, are the portions of the streets which require most immediate attention.

Mr. GALLINGER. Undoubtedly.

Mr. BACON. It would be a comparatively easy matter for each householder, by very slight attention when snow first falls, unless it is an extreme snowfall, to clear at least enough of the sidewalk so that pedestrians could walk with some degree of safety; for it is not simply a matter of comfort, but it is absolutely a matter of safety. Pedestrians are very much interesed in that part of it.

Mr. GALLINGER. I quite agree with the Senator from Georgia; but, unfortunately, in some of the States similar laws have been declared unconstitutional, among others in my own city, where our supreme court declared the law unconstitutional, taking the ground that it was the business of the municipality to keep the sidewalks clear, as well as the streets.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I have never examined the question myself, but I confess that, without such examination, I very seriously doubt the correctness of that decision. I know that in a great many jurisdictions the power of a municipality to require property holders to pave the streets in front of their houses is enforced and held to be legal. Of course, if we can compel such property holders to pave the street, we can compel them to keep that portion of the street clear of such obstructions.

Mr. GALLINGER. In this city it is not claimed that we have the power to compel them to lay a sidewalk.

Mr. BACON. I was going to say that I am very sorry that that decision was not tested to its final limit, for I do not believe that any regulation will ever be efficacious which does not impose that burden upon the property holders.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will say further to the Senator from Georgia that the subcommittee of the Committee on the District of Columbia, named the "judiciary committee," has now a bill before it to which they are giving some consideration, and I should be delighted if the Senator would examine that bill.

Mr. BACON. I quite agree with the Senator from New Hampshire that there are able lawyers upon that committee, and I am very willing and content to rest on their judgment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 40, line 4, before the word "dollars," to strike out "one thousand five hundred," and insert "two thousand;" and in line 6, after the word "thoustand," to insert "five hundred," so as to make the clause read:

Bathing beach: For superintendent, $600: watchman, $450; for temporary services, supplies, and maintenance, $2,000; for repair of houses, bathing pools, and grounds, $500; in all, $3,550.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 40, after line 6, to insert: For construction of swimming pool at present bathing plant, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 40, after line 8, to insert: For improvements of pools for colored bathers at present plant, $3,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 40, after line 10, to insert: For one dressing house on river front, at point to be determined by the commissioners, and for services and supplies in operating and main-taining said house, $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 40, after line 13, to insert: All the appropriations herein made for the bathing beach, except for salaries of superintendent and watchman, to be immediately available.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 40, after line 18, to insert: Deep wells: For drilling deep wells and maintenance of same, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 40, line 21, after the word "maintenance," to strike out "and renewal of equipment" and insert "equipment, and supervision;" and in line 24, before the word "dollars," to strike out "one thousand five hundred" and insert "ten thousand," so as to make the clause read:

Playgrounds: For maintenance, equipment, and supervision, and planting trees for outdoor playgrounds, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 41, to insert: For the improvement and equipment of the Georgetown site, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 41, after line 5, to insert: For one new public-convenience station under the sidewalk on the east side of Ninth street NW., between F and G streets, $22,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 41, after line 8, to insert:

For one public-convenience station on the west side of Fifteenth street, near New York avenue, $27,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 41, after line 11, to insert: For one public-convenience station on the triangle west of Dupont rcle, between Twentieth and P streets and Massachusetts avenue, $15,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 41, after line 14, to insert: For one public-convenience station to be located on the south side of Pennsylvania avenue between First and Third streets north, $22,500: Provided, That the above public-convenience stations be located on public space to be selected by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, and the jurisdiction and control of such portion of any public reservation so selected as shall be required for the location of such stations and their approaches is hereby transferred from the United States official having charge of said reservation to the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, such transfer to take effect on the date of notice by the said commissioners to the said United States official of the location of the sites for said stations.

Mr. BURKETT. Mr. President, I want to read that over. call the attention of the Senator in charge of the bill to the language beginning in line 18, which reads:

That the above public-convenence stations be located on public space to be selected by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, and the jurisdiction and control of such portion of any public reservation so selected as shall be required for the location of such stations and their approaches is hereby transferred from the United States official having charge of said reservation to the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, such transfer to take effect on the date of notice by the said commissioners to the said United States official of the location of the sites for said stations.

Does that express the intention of the committee to transfer any public grounds that belong to the Government of the United States to the District Commissioners?

Yes; to transfer the jurisdiction and con-Mr GALLINGER. trol of that small bit of ground. That is the purpose of it. Of course, if it is not placed in their control there will be no control whatever. If it is left under the control of the United States Government, we can readily understand that it would be utterly neglected.

Mr. BURKETT. I understand one of these stations would be located in some part of the Botanic Garden. Is that correct?

Mr. GALLINGER. Well, probably somewhere along there. Mr. BURKETT. Have not the District Commissioners now within their control for police purposes all of these parks, or all portions of ground the Government may own in the District?

Mr. GALLINGER. I think they have no control over the arks. The officer who is at the head of the public buildings and grounds of the District of Columbia, Colonel Bromwell, I think has jurisdiction over the Government's property

Mr. BURKETT. It seems an unusual authority to be granted, but still I shall not object.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 42, line 12, before the word "dollars," to strike out two thousand five hundred" and insert "four thousand," so as to make the clause read:

Condemnation of insanitary buildings: For all expenses necessary and incident to the enforcement of the provisions of an act entitled "An act to create a board for the condemnation of insanitary buildings in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes," approved May 1, 1906, including personal services, when authorized by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, not to exceed $1,200, $4,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Electrical department," on page 42, line 15, before the word "dollars," to strike out "five hundred" and insert "seven hundred and fifty;" in the same line, after the word "dollars," to strike out "superintendent, $1,600," and insert "assistant electrical engineer, who shall perform the duties of the electrical engineer in the absence or disability of the latter and shall have the same qualifications as to ability and technical knowledge as is required by law of the head of the department, $2,000;" in line 23, after the word "dollars," to insert "draftsman, $1,200;" and on page 43, line 4, before the word "dollars," to strike out "six hundred" and insert "seven hundred and twenty," so as

For electrical engineer, $2,750; assistant electrical engineer, who shall perform the duties of the electrical engineer in the absence or disability of the latter and shall have the same qualifications as to ability and technical knowledge as is required by law of the head of the department, $2,000; three electrical inspectors at $1,200 each; inspector of lamps, $1,000; electrician, $1,200; draftsman, $1,000; 3 telegraph operators, at $1,200 each; 3 inspectors, at $900 each; expert repair man, $960; 4 repair men, at $900 each; 3 telegraph operators, at $120 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 43, line 21, to increase the total appropriation for the force in the electrical department from $44,735 to $46,945.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 44, line 5, to increase the appropriation for general supplies, repairs, new batteries, battery supplies, etc., in the electrical department, from $12,000 to $15,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the item for the electrical department, on page 44, line 11, to increase the appropriation for placing wires of fire-alarm, telegraph, police-patrol, and tele-phone service underground in existing conduits, etc., from $10,000 to $12,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the item for the electrical department, on page 44, line 17, to increase the appropriation for extension of police-patrol system, including purchase of new boxes, purchase and erection of the necessary poles, etc., from $4,300 to $4,800.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the item for lighting, on page 45. line 2, to increase the appropriation for illuminating material, lighting, extinguishing, repairing, and cleaning public lamps on avenues, streets, etc., from $253,000 to $280,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the item for lighting, on page 45, line 3, before the word "dollars," to strike out "fifteen" and insert "eighteen;" in line 8, before the words "per annum," to strike out "$18" and insert "$20.85;" and in line 9, before the words "per annum," to strike out "$20" and insert $22.80," so as to make the proviso read:

Provided, That no more than $18 per annum shall be paid for each gas lamp equipped with a self-regulating flat-flame burner so adjusted as to secure under all ordinary variations of pressure and density a consumption of 5 cubic feet of gas per hour, nor more than $20.85 per annum for each gas and $22.80 per annum for each oil lamp equipped with an incandescent mantle burner of not less than 60 candlepower.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 46, after line 13, to insert: Hereafter contracts shall be entered into for lighting avenues, streets, roads, and alleys in the District of Columbia by gas or electricity for a period of not exceeding three years.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, I ask the Senator in charge of the bill what is the present limit, if any, as to these contracts?

Mr. GALLINGER. I will say to the Senator that prior to last year the commissioners were given authority to make contracts for three years. Under that provision they made a very considerable saving; they got better terms than they could have gotten for one year; but last year-and I do not know what reason was urged—they were limited to a yearly contract. commissioners represent that if they can get authority to make contracts for a term not exceeding three years, they can make quite a saving to the District. The committee put this provision in the bill for the purpose of sending it to conference and looking it over with the conferees on the part of the other House, with the idea of adjusting it. Of course, we may have to recede from it. My own opinion is that it ought to remain in the bill, because, beyond a question, it will be a matter of some saving to the District and to the Government.

Mr. CULBERSON. I ask the Senator if this will be affected in any way by the present inquiry in reference to gas?

Mr. GALLINGER. Not at all. I will say to the Senator—and I want to be very frank about this matter—that on the preceding page the Senate struck out the amount allowed by the House per lamp and put in the amount that was in last year, with a view of having that influenced by the legislation that is pending, especially if any legislation shall be enacted, because we propose to reduce the price of gas.

Mr. CLAY. With the Senator's permission—
Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly.
Mr. CLAY. I understood the Senator to say that legislation was pending to fix the price of gas.

Mr. GALLINGER. It is; yes.
Mr. CLAY. Does the Senator think that legislation will likely go through at this session of Congress?

Mr. GALLINGER. I will refer that question to the Senator from Kansas [Mr. Long], who is chairman of the subcommittee having that matter in charge.

Mr. CLAY. Does that legislation attempt to fix the future rate on gas?

Mr. GALLINGER. It does.

Mr. CLAY. I will ask the Senator—
Mr. GALLINGER. I will say to the Senator that the House has passed the bill reducing the price of gas.

The House has passed the bill? Mr. CLAY.

Mr. GALLINGER. The House has passed the bill reducing the price of gas from $1 to 85 cents per thousand cubic feet. They have likewise passed other gas legislation, and are now struggling with the monoxide question.

Mr. CLAY. Is this provision in conformity with the bill passed by the House relative to gas? I see that the Senate committee puts this item at $20.85.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is for lighting lamps. was that the Senate committee struck it out for the purpose of sending it to conference; and, if we have gas legislation, it will influence the amount which we will place in the bill.

I know there has been a great deal of agitation Mr. CLAY. on the subject, though I have not been very familiar with it. There has been a contention that the price of gas was too high. Whether or not that is true, I presume the Senator is perfectly familiar with the fact.

Mr. GALLINGER. We are taking the question up in good faith, and hope to have proper legislation before the end of this Congress, I will say to the Scnator.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The restained of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 46, line 20, before the word "dollars," to strike out "nineteen thousand four hundred and twenty-five" and insert "twenty-five thousand;" and in line 21, before the word "dollars," to strike out "eighty" and insert "eighty-five," so as to make the clause read:

For electric arc lighting, and for extensions of such service, not exceeding $125,000: Provided, That not more than $85 per annum shall be paid for any electric arc light burning from fifteen minutes after sunset to forty-five minutes before sunrise, and operated wholly by means of underground wire; and each arc light shall be of not less than 1,000 actual candlepower, and no part of this appropriation shall be used for electric lighting by means of wires that may exist on or over any of the streets or avenues of the city of Washington.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 47, line 9, to increase the appropriation for the purchase of 15 additional fire-alarm boxes and for the purchase and erection of necessary poles, etc., from $3,000 to $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 47, after line 9, to insert: For purchase of one motor delivery wagon with extra tires and equipment, $1,200.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Washington Aqueduct," on page 47, line 23, to increase the appropriation for care, including salaries of all necessary employees, maintenance, and operation of the Washington Aqueduct, District of Columbia, etc., from $82,000 to $85,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Rock Creek Park," on page 48, line 8, after the word "Park," to insert "and of the Piney Branch parkway entrance to said park from Sixteenth street extended;" in line 12, before the word "thousand," to strike out "fifteen" and insert "twenty;" and in line 13, after the word "dollars," to insert "and the said board of control is hereby authorized to purchase eight hundred and sixty-seven one-thousandths acre, more or less, of land adjoining the northern boundary of Rock Creek Park, assessed as parcel 64-3, for a sum not to exceed $400, chargeable to said appropriation," so as to make the clause read:

For care and improvement of Rock Creek Park, and of the Piney Branch parkway entrance to said park from Sixteenth street extended, exclusive of building for superintendent's residence, to be expended under the direction of the board of control of said park, $20,000; and the said board of control is hereby authorized to purchase eight hundred and sixty-seven one-thousandths acre, more or less, of land adjoining the northern boundary of Rock Creek Park, assessed as parcel 64-3, for a sum not to exceed $400, chargeable to said appropriation.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 48, line 25, after the word "dollars," to insert "chief clerk, who in the absence of the secretary, upon leave granted by the board of education, shall act as his deputy, $1,600;" on page 49, line 6, before the word "dollars," to strike out "seven hundred and twenty" and insert "nine hundred;" and in line 10, before the word "dollars," to strike out "fifty-two thousand five hundred and twenty," and insert "fifty-four thousand three hundred," so as to make the clause read:

For officers: For superintendent of public schools, $5,000; 2 assistant superintendents, at $3,000 each; director of intermediate instruction, 13 supervising principals, and supervisor of manual training, 15 in all, at a minimum salary of $2,200 each; secretary, $2,000; chief clerk, who in the absence of the secretary, upon leave granted by the board of education, shall act as his deputy, $1,600; clerk, $1,400; 2 clerks, at $1,000 each; clerk to carry out the provisions of the child-labor law, $900; 2 stenographers, at $840 each; 1 messenger, $720; in all, $54,300.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was greed to.

The next amendment was, on page 49, line 15, after the word "dollars," to insert "one attendance officer, $720;" and in line 17, before the word "dollars," to strike out "one hundred" and insert "eight hundred and twenty," so as to make the clause read:

Attendance officers; For two attendance officers, authorized by the act providing for compulsory education in the District of Columbia, approved June 8, 1906, at $600 each; one attendance officer, $900; one attendance officer, $720; in all, $2,820.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 49, after line 17, to insert: Child-labor inspectors: For two inspectors of child labor, at $1,200 each, $2,400.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let the amendment be disagreed to, as the provision has been inserted in a former part of the bill.

The amendment was rejected.

The reading of the bill was continued to the end of line 18 on page 50.

Mr. GALLINGER. I offer the amendment I send to the desk, to be inserted as a proviso.

The SECRETARY. After the word "each," in line 18, page 50, it is proposed to insert: Provided, That hereafter no teacher shall be eligible to group B, class 6, who has not attained the maximum of group A.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 50, line 20, before the word "in," to strike out "three" and insert "fifty-eight," so as to read:

For teachers in group A of class 6, 258 in all, at a minimum salary of $1,000 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 50, after the word "each," in line 21, to insert:

in line 21, to insert:

Provided, That all teachers of manual training, drawing, physical culture, music, domestic science, and domestic art in the normal, high, and manual training schools, and the assistants to the directors of primary instruction shall be placed in group A. class 6: Provided, That hereafter no teacher of these subjects shall be appointed without like or equivalent requirements as for academic or scientific subjects. And provided further, That all principals and teachers, including principals and teachers in normal, high, manual training, grade schools, and kindergartens, and teachers of special studies, now in the service of the public schools, may be placed by the board of education and receive their longevity increase according to their number of years of experience in teaching in accredited schools, and the amount of additional longevity pay for this purpose shall not exceed $20,000 in any one year.

Mr. GALLINGER. I move to amend the amendment by inserting before the word "teachers," in line 5, page 51, the words "directors and."

The Secretary. On page 51, before the word "teachers," in line 5, it is proposed to insert "directors and."

Mr. BURKETT. I want to make a point of order against the amendment

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Against the amendment just offered?

Mr. BURKETT. Against the whole amendment. Mr. GALLINGER. Will the Senator allow the amendment to be perfected?

Mr. BURKETT. I will be glad to.
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment to the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. After the word "now," in the same line, I move to insert "and hereafter.'

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BURKETT. Mr. President, I make the point of order against the amendment that it is general legislation.

The Chair is of the opinion that The VICE-PRESIDENT. the point of order is well taken.

Mr. GALLINGER. I should like to have the Senator state

Mr. GALLINGER. the ground upon which he makes the point of order.

Mr. BURKETT. I make the point of order that it is general

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair is of the opinion-Mr. GALLINGER. Let the rule be read, if you please. Will the clerk read Rule XVI, subdivision 3?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read subdivision 3 of Rule XVI, as follows:

3. No amendment which proposes general legislation shall be received to any general appropriation bill, nor shall any amendment not germane or relevant to the subject-matter contained in the bill be received; nor shall any amendment to any item or clause of such bill be received which does not directly relate thereto; and all questions of relevancy of amendments under this rule, when raised, shall be submitted to the Senate and be decided without debate; and any amendment to a general appropriation bill may be laid on the table without prejudice to the bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President-

Mr. GAILLANGER. All, President Mr. BURKETT. I ask the clerk to read the paragraph from the Record which I send up on this point.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

Mr. BURKETT. I will say that what I have asked to have read is a paragraph from the remarks of the Senator himself, made a year ago upon an amendment which I offered, somewhat changing the school law, on which occasion the presiding officer held the amendment out of order.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I think that is hardly necessary unless the Senator insists upon it, although I have no objection to anything I have ever said being read.

Mr. BURKETT. I want it read for information.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am not going to resist the point of order. I think it will lie against the amendment. I am sorry it has been made, I will say, because I think the amendment would do simple justice to a very worthy class of teachers who are now discriminated against in our school law. The Chair has ruled correctly, as the Chair always does.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair sustains the point of

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 51, line 12, to reduce the number of teachers in class 5 at a minimum salary of $950 each, from 154 to 113.

Mr. CULBERSON. I do not understand the amendment. I understand that the teaching force in class 5 is to be reduced?

Mr. GALLINGER. I will say to the Senator that these amendments which were reported will all have to be disagreed to. The first is in line 20, on page 50. It will have to be restored so as to read "two hundred and three" in place of "two hundred and fifty-eight," and likewise on the succeeding page.

Mr. CULBERSON. On page 51, line 11—

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator will permit me, on page

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will again be

The Secretary. On page 50, line 20, it is proposed to strike out "three" and insert "fifty-eight," so as to read:

For teachers in group A of class 6, 258 in all, at a minimum salary of $1,000 each.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be regarded as open.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let it be disagreed to.

The amendment was rejected.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment in line 11, on page 51, which has heretofore been

The amendment was rejected.

The next amendment was on page 51, line 14, to reduce the number of teachers in class 4, at a minimum salary of $800 each, from 425 to 411.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let the amendment likewise be disagreed The changes were made, I will say to the Senator from Texas, in view of the amendment that had been placed in the bill, which has been ruled out on a point of order. So we will now return to the provisions of the House bill.

Mr. CULBERSON. It occurred to me as an extraordinary reduction-from 154 to 113-in the teaching force of this class, and I wanted an explanation of it. Mr. GALLINGER. It was. We had placed the difference in numbers in the amendment at the bottom of page 50.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. GALLINGER. It is all right now.

The next amendment was, on page 52, line 8, to increase the total appropriation for salaries of teachers from $1,313,050 to $1,317,900.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let 'the proposed amendment be disagreed to.

The amendment was rejected.

The next amendment was, on page 53, line 10, to increase the appropriation for longevity pay from $210,000 to $230,000.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let the amendment be disagreed to.

The amendment was rejected.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 54, to insert the following further proviso:

Provided further, That hereafter officers, teachers, and janitors may employ substitutes for such periods at such rates of pay and from such eligible lists as may be prescribed by the board of education: Provided further, That in case of death or other emergency the board of education may temporarily appoint substitute officers, teachers, and janitors to fill any vacancy which may occur in the public school system, provided that substitutes appointed by the board of education be paid the salary of the position or class in which the service is performed.

Mr. BURKETT. Mr. President, I desire to make a point of order on the amendment, or to reserve it at least, until I can ask the Senator in charge of the bill the necessity for it and what it is intended to accomplish, if anything more than we can read in the wording of it. In my opinion, after investigating somewhat, as I have had to do, the whole school system, if there is one abuse here which is annoying to those in charge of the schools, it is the habit which it seems has grown up and become a practice, of having substitutes. It is very bad for the students and it is very bad for the organization of the

It occurs to me that this will have a tendency by legislation to extend that bad practice. It does not protect, as the Senator will observe, the substitute who is hired by the teacher so much as the substitute hired by the board. The board is limited in paying salaries to what the position pays. The individual janifor, if the board will permit it. In short, it seems to me that this cultivates that practice and extends it, which I say from some investigation is rather abused now.

I do not want to raise a point of order if the matter has been well considered and if it is necessary for the board of education. but I have not had my attention called to it. However, I will say what information I have from superintendents and principals is that the practice of substitutes coming in all the time is already too general, and is detrimental.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator will readily agree with me that it is absolutely necessary in the public schools of Washington to appoint substitutes to a greater or less extent.

Mr. BURKETT. Yes; they do now.

Mr. GALLINGER. If a teacher is sick, of course the place must be filled. The board of education submitted this proposed amendment to the committee, and the committee thought it was a very proper amendment. As I understand the matter, the present rule is that where a substitute is employed the substitute is paid one-half the salary. Where the other half goes I do not know—whether it goes to the sick teacher or the absent teacher, or whether it goes into the Treasury—and I apprehend the board of education had in view the correction of that as much as anything else in providing that the full salary should be paid to the substitute. It may be that the substitute is not so good a teacher as the one absent, but if he fills the place it does seem to me the same salary should be paid to the substitute who is there for a few days.

We can not get rid of the appointment of substitutes. That will go on, whether we legislate or not. I can not for the life of me see that there is any provision in this amendment which can by any possible means prove detrimental to the schools. Possibly the Senator does see some objection that does not occur to me.

Mr. BURKETT. The Senator raises the exact point that I wanted to bring out. I was not certain of it, although I had that impression. There is an evil here, which has grown up, as I have been informed by those in the schools, of too much substitution, and the board has had some difficulty in handling it. I realize that. I did not know before, however, that they had been hiring substitutes for half their own pay. That would have a tendency to cultivate the practice. That answers the question I asked with reference to the first three lines. Why. should not the same provision be placed in the amendment with reference to a teacher hiring her own substitute as is put upon the board in hiring a substitute; in short, that the teacher must pay full salary to the substitute? It seems to me it would take away some of the inducements to substituting.

Mr. GALLINGER. There is much force in that suggestion, and if it is agreeable to the Senator from Nebraska the paragraph may be passed for the present, and the Senator can prepare an amendment.

Mr. BURKETT. Then I will withdraw the point of order and let the amendment be acted upon directly if the Senator will consider it in the conference committee. It will have to go into conference anyway. I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. GALLINGER. I guarantee the Senator that will be done.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The point of order is withdrawn.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Health Department," on page 76, line 3, before the word "dollars," to strike out "three thousand five hundred" and insert "four thousand;" and in the same line, after the word "dollars," to thousand;" and in the same line, after the word "dollars," to insert "assistant health officer, who shall be a physician, and during the absence or disability of the health officer shall act as health officer and discharge the duties incident to that position, $2,500;" in line 8, before the word "dollars," to strike out "two hundred" and insert "five hundred;" in line 9, before the word "clerks," to strike out "four" and insert "five;" in line 11, before the word "clerks," to strike out "two" and insert "three;" in line 12, before the word "dollars," to strike out "six hundred" and insert "seven hundred and twenty;" in line 15, after the word "each," to strike out "1 inspector, $1,000," and insert "2 inspectors, at $1,000 each;" in line 18, before the word "sanitary," to strike out "1 inspector, $900," and insert "2 inspectors, at $900 each;" on page 77, line 5, before the word "dollars," to strike out "forty" and insert "fifty;" in line 6, before the word "hundred," to strike out "two thousand four" and insert "three thousand six," so as to read:

For health officer, $4,000; assistant health officer, who shall be a physician, and during the absence or disability of the health officer shall act as health officer and discharge the duties incident to that position, $2,500; chief clerk and deputy health officer, $2,500; clerk, $1,400; 5 clerks, 2 of whom may act as sanitary and food inspectors, at $1,200 each; 2 inspector, who shall be a veterinary surgeon, at $1,000 each; and 5 sanitary and food inspectors, at $900 each, to assist in the enforcement of the milk and pure-food laws and the regulations relating thereto; sanitary and food inspector, who shall also inspect dairy products and shall be a practical chemist, $1,800; messenger and janitor, $600; driver, $540; pound master, $1,500; and for laborers, at not exceeding $50 per month, $3,600.

Mr. GALLINGER. On page 76, line 13, after the word "dollars," I move to amend by inserting, "One assistant chief inspector, $1,600."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.
Mr. GALLINGER. The word "fifteen" should be stricken out, at the end of the line, and "fourteen" inserted.
The Secretary. In line 13, after the word "dollars," strike out "fifteen," the last word in the line, and insert "fourteen," so as to read:

Fourteen sanitary and food inspectors.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 77, line 7, to increase the total appropriation for the force of the health department from $53,740 to $62,460.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let the total be changed to $62,800.

The Secretary. On page 77, line 7, change the total to read " $62,800."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 77, line 17, after the date to insert "and an act to provide for registration of all cases of tuberculosis in the District of Columbia, for free examination of sputum in suspected cases, and for preventing the spread of tuberculosis in said District, approved May 13, 1908;" and on page 78, line 5, before the word "thousand," to strike out "twenty-six" and insert "thirty," so as to make the clause read:

For the enforcement of the provisions of an act to prevent the spread of contagious diseases in the District of Columbia, approved March 3, 1897, and an act for the prevention of scarlet fever, diphtheria, measles, whooping cough, chicken pox, epidemic cerebro-spinal meningitis, and typhoid fever in the District of Columbia, approved February 9, 1907, and an act to provide for registration of all cases of tuberculosis in the District of Columbia, for free examination of sputum in suspected cases, and for preventing the spread of tuberculosis in said District, approved May 13, 1908, under the direction of the health officer of said District, including salaries or compensation for personal services when ordered in writing by the commissioners and necessary for the enforcement and execution of said acts, purchase and maintenance of necessary horses, wagons, and harness, rent of stables, purchase of reference books and medical journals, and maintenance of quarantine station and smallpox hospital, $30,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the item for miscellaneous items for health department, on page 78, line 18, to increase the appropriation for the enforcement of the provisions of an act to provide for the drainage of lots in the District of Columbia, approved May 19, 1896, etc., from $3,000 to $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 79, after line 5, to strike out: "For the necessary traveling expenses of sanitary and food inspectors while traveling outside of the District of Columbia for the purpose of inspecting dairy farms, milk, and other dairy products, $3,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary," and

For allotments to the health officer, and assistant health officer, medical inspector in charge of contagious-disease service, and inspectors assigned to the inspection of dairy farms, for the maintenance of horse and vehicle, or motor vehicle, for use in the discharge of his official duties, not to exceed $365 per annum, and for necessary traveling expenses, including horse hire, incident to the inspection of dairy farms, $6,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

Mr. JOHNSTON. I should like to ask the Senator in charge of the bill what the word "allotments" means in line 11

Mr. GALLINGER. I suppose it means that the $6,000 will be allotted to these different officials when they incur expense in traveling, in the inspection of dairy farms, the investigation of contagious diseases, and so forth. We make the appropriation a lump sum, and put it in the hands of the officials to allot that amount under conditions that may arise.

Mr. JOHNSTON. The Senator will observe that line 16

And for necessary traveling expenses, including horse hire, incident to the inspection of dairy farms.

That would seem to be included above.

Mr. GALLINGER. My attention had not been called to that before. It is an amendment that was put in at the instance of the commissioners, and it seemed proper that they should have this amount, but the phraseology of the amendment I did not examine with care, I will say to the Senator. I think his crit-icism is well grounded. Let the amendment be passed over for the present, and we will look it over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be passed over.

Mr. CULBERSON. Before it is passed over I should like to ask the Senator in charge of the bill if it is really intended to appropriate $6,000 a year for necessary traveling expenses, including horse hire, incident to the inspection of dairy farms for the District of Columbia. Is that really the purpose?

Mr. GALLINGER. That is the purpose beyond a doubt. The House allowed $3,000, and it was represented to the committee that it was wholly inadequate for them to make these necessary inspections with that amount of money. I think they had a deficiency last year. So we increased it. Perhaps we have made it too large, but that was the amount suggested.

Mr. CULBERSON. The House provision which is stricken out reads:

For the necessary traveling expenses of sanitary and food inspectors while traveling outside of the District of Columbia for the purpose of inspecting dairy farms, milk, and other dairy products, $3,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

The amendment to which the Senator from Alabama called attention reads:

For allotments to the health officer, and assistant health officer, medical inspector in charge of contagious disease service, and inspectors assigned to the inspection of dairy farms, for the maintenance of horse and vehicle, or motor vehicle, for use in the discharge of his official duties, not to exceed $365 per annum, and for necessary traveling expenses, including horse hire, incident to the inspection of dairy farms, $6,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

Is that applied for the inspection of dairy farms in the District of Columbia, or is this large amount of money given to enable these people to travel about over the country and inspect dairy farms wherever they see proper?

Mr. GALLINGER. They inspect dairy farms, not only in the District of Columbia, but in the States of Virginia, Maryland, and New York, in all cases where milk and cream are sent into the District of Columbia. These inspectors go at certain times to see what dairy farms are kept in proper condition. There is a note here of the health officer, which I will read in this connection:

this connection:

Note (by health officer).—The health officer now receives an allowance of $365 for the maintenance of horse and vehicle for his official use, payable from the contingent fund. The inspector in charge of contagious disease service receives a like allowance for enabling him to provide such transportation as is necessary to the discharge of his official duties. He provides therewith an automobile. Each of the inspectors of dairy farms now in the service receives an allowance of $365 per annum, payable in three instances from the appropriation for necessary traveling expenses of inspectors outside of the District of Columbia, and in three other instances $255.50 from appropriation for traveling expenses, and $109.50 from the contingent fund. The allowance from the contingent fund is believed to be an equitable charge, representing the cost of transportation within the District for the inspection of dairy farms.

In view of the fact that question has been raised as to the propriety of making such allowances with express authority, the matter is submitted in its present form. The difference between the amount expended by way of allowance, covered by the preceding paragraph, and the total amount of the appropriation is needed for the inspection of the dairy farms that are not within driving distance of any base of operations that may be established by the health department for any of its inspectors. This difference would be expended for railroad fare, board bills, and horse hire when the horses and vehicles were needed to convey inspectors from the railroad station to the dairy farms.

This appropriation has been limited heretofore to the cost of traveling outside the District of Columbia, the traveling expenses of the three inspectors who work partly within the District being paid in part from this appropriation and in part by the allotment for the contingent expenses of the health office. Nothing is gained by the division of the cost of this service between two funds, and the method herein proposed represents, it is believed, the best administration.

Mr. JOHNSTON. I want to say to the Senator that under

Mr. JOHNSTON. I want to say to the Senator that under my construction of this paragraph the result would be that the health officer, the assistant health officer, the medical inspector in charge of the contagious-disease service, and inspectors assigned to the inspection of dairy farms would each get $365 additional compensation. Then the clause goes on to provide:

And for necessary traveling expenses, including horse hire, incident to the inspection of dairy farms, $6,000, or so much thereof as may be

Being so framed, this provision would give each of these officials $365 in addition to the salaries provided in this bill, and the balance of $6,000 would be for horse hire.

Mr. GALLINGER. I find in the Book of Estimates a different paragraph. I had an impression that the paragraph that is inserted came in a letter from the commissioners later than the estimate. I think the item in the Book of Estimates is a general item. I will read it, if the Senator will give me his attention. It is as follows:

For allotments to the health officer, and assistant health officer, medical inspector in charge of contagious-disease service, and each of 10 inspectors assigned to the inspection of dairy farms, for the maintenance of horse and vehicle, or motor vehicle, for use in the discharge of his official duties, not to exceed $365 per annum, and for necessary traveling expenses, including horse hire, incident to the inspection of

Mr. JOHNSTON. That is the exact language of the amendment.

Mr. GALLINGER. Is it? I thought it was different.
Mr. JOHNSTON. I think it is word for word the same.
Mr. GALLINGER. What suggestion does the Senator desire to make? If it is allowed to remain in the bill, it will go to conference, and it can easily be adjusted there.

Mr. JOHNSTON. I suggest that we adopt the language used by the House and increase the appropriation, if that is desired.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator will recall that heretofore the allowance has been made from two funds. There has been some question about it, and I have an impression that the House language ought to be changed, to some extent, at least. I feel sure that the conferees can readily adjust it if the language now in the bill is allowed to remain, but still, if the Senator has an amendment to offer, I shall not resist it.

Mr. JOHNSTON. I ask that it be passed over for the present.

will prepare an amendment.

VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be passed over.

Mr. CULBERSON. I move to amend the amendment by striking out "six" and inserting "three," so as to correspond to the amount as passed by the House.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Alabama withdraw his request that the amendment be passed over?

Mr. JOHNSTON. Yes; certainly. Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, of course the Senator from Texas need not move that amendment. The question will be upon agreeing to the amendment the Senate has put in, and, if that is rejected, of course the House provision will stand.

Mr. CULBERSON. No; the House provision is entirely different from the Senate provision. It includes different purposes. I want to have the "six" changed to "three" in the Senate, even if the amendment should prevail.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Texas will be stated.

The Secretary. On page 79, line 18, it is proposed to amend the amendment of the committee by striking out "six" and inserting "three," so as to make the amendment read:

For allotments to the health officer, and assistant health officer, medical inspector in charge of contagious disease service, and inspectors assigned to the inspection of dairy farms, for the maintenance of horse and vehicle, or motor vehicle, for use in the discharge of his official duties, not to exceed $365 per annum, and for necessary traveling expenses, including horse hire, incident to the inspection of dairy farms, $3,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSTON. I now ask that the paragraph be passed

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Alabama asks that the amendment as amended be passed over. Is objection? The Chair hears none, and that order is made.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 79, after line 19, to insert:

For the maintenance of an additional pound wagon, including compensation for personal services when ordered in writing by the commissioners and necessary for the maintenance of said wagon, and all other extra expenses whatsoever connected therewith, $5,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I move to amend the amendment by striking out "five," in line 24, and inserting "one," so that it will read "$1,000."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The Secretary, On page 79, line 24, after the word "therewith," it is proposed to amend the amendment of the committee by striking out "five" and inserting "one," so as to make the amendment read:

For the maintenance of an additional pound wagon, including compensation for personal services when ordered in writing by the commissioners and necessary for the maintenance of said wagon, and all other extra expenses whatsoever connected therewith, $1,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the head of "Courts," on page 80, line 18, after the word "officer," to insert "who is hereby authorized to act as clerk in the absence of that officer;" in line 22, after the word "dollars," to insert "deputy marshal, $1,000;" and in line 23, before the word "thousand," to strike out "nine" and insert "ten," so as to make the clause read:

Juvenile court: For judge, $3,000; clerk, $2,000; chief probation officer, who is hereby authorized to act as clerk in the absence of that officer, $1,500; probation officer, $1,200; probation officer, $1,000; deputy marshal, $1,000; janitor, $540; in all, $10,240.

Mr. GALLINGER. In line 18, after the word "dollars," I move to insert "deputy clerk, $1,200."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire will be stated.

The Secretary. On page 80, line 18, after the word "dollars," it is proposed to insert "deputy clerk, $1,200."

Mr. CULBERSON. I do not see any use for that if the other provisions of the clause remain in the bill, because it is provided that the chief probation officer is authorized to act as clerk in the absence of that officer.

Mr. GALLINGER. I rose to move to strike out the words in italics-" who is hereby authorized to act as clerk in the absence of that officer;" and I move that amendment now.

Mr. CULBERSON. What necessity is there for having an additional officer?

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator knew the pressure there is to have additional help in the juvenile court, he would understand that we have done remarkably well in making the few changes that we have. If the Senator will look on line 22, he will observe that a deputy marshal is provided for at $1,000. I will say to the Senator that I propose moving to strike that out, so that it will simply give a clerk instead of a deputy marshal.

Mr. CULBERSON. I wanted to know the reason which actuated the committee in moving this amendment, Mr. President.

Mr. GALLINGER. It is simply upon the urgent representa-tions of the judge that he needs another clerk. He said he would dispense with the deputy marshal provided for in line 22 if he could get a clerk; that he needed a clerk very much

Mr. CULBERSON. Then the provision in regard to the deputy marshal will be stricken out?

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes; that will be stricken out.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. Gallinger], in line 18, to insert "deputy clerk, $1,200."

The amendment was agreed to.
The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question now is on the amendment reported by the committee, which will be stated.

The Secretary. On page 80, line 18, after the word "officer," is proposed to insert "who is hereby authorized to act as clerk in the absence of that officer.'

The amendment was rejected.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment reported by the committee, in line 22, which will be stated.

The Secretary. On page 80, line 22, after the word "dollars," it is proposed to insert "deputy marshal, $1,000."

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. GALLINGER. Now, I move that the words "who is hereby authorized to act as clerk in the absence of that officer," be inserted after the words "deputy clerk, $1,200," which were inserted on my motion.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The Secretary. On page 80, line 18, after the amendment inserting the words "deputy clerk, $1,200," it is proposed to insert "who is hereby authorized to act as clerk in the absence of that officer.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. The total should be changed on lines 23 and 24, page 80, so as to read "$10,440."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That change will be made in the absence of objection.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, we have been in session a good while, and, if it be agreeable to other Senators, I suggest that we discontinue the further consideration of the bill for the day. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, February 5, 1909, at 12 o'clock meridian.

BRIDGES ACROSS ROCK RIVER, ILLINOIS.

Mr. PRINCE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 26482) to authorize the construction of two bridges across Rock River, State of Illinois. The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Rock River Traction Company, a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Illinois, its successors and assigns, be, and they are hereby, authorized to construct two bridges across Rock River; the first bridge at a point between the west line of section 30 and the west line of section 14 in township 20 north, range 5 east, in the State of Illinois; the second bridge at a point between the east line of section 30 and the west line of section 23 in township 21 north, range 7 east, in the State of Illinois. Said bridges to be built across Rock River, in accordance with the provisions of an act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is expressly reserved.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

ADVANCE IN FREIGHT RATES.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD the report of the Interstate Commerce Commission in reply to a resolution asking for information as to the advance of freight rates throughout the country. I understand the report is on the Speaker's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent for printing in the RECORD the report from the Interstate Commerce Commission in relation to an inquiry for information as to the advanced freight rates throughout the United States. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman desire this to dispose of the matter, or will he ask to have it sent to a committee?

Mr. MADDEN. I understand it will be printed as a public document. I want it printed in the RECORD for the information of the House.

Mr. MANN. I have no objection to its being printed in the RECORD, and that was the reason of my inquiry whether, after being printed in the RECORD, it would be referred to the committee-naturally to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, I assume.

The SPEAKER. It would be referred and printed as a public document (H. Doc. No. 1412), and the gentleman's request is that it be printed in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After pause.] The Chair hears none.

The report is as follows:

INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION, Washington, February 4, 1909.

To the House of Representatives:

On January 15 the House of Representatives adopted the following

On January 15 the House of Representatives adopted the following resolution:

"Resolved, That the Interstate Commerce Commission be required to inform the House, as soon as may be, what advances have occurred in freight rates in different parts of the United States since the passage of the Hepburn amendment, June 29, 1906; whether such advances have been occasioned by an advance in the tariff rate or by a change in classification or by charging for some privilege which was formerly accorded free."

In response thereto the Interstate Commerce Commission has the boner to report:

In response thereto the Interstate Commerce Commission has the honor to report:

Between July 1, 1906, and January 15, 1909, nearly 600,000 schedules of rates and classifications and supplements thereto, varying in size from 1 page to 700 pages, were filed with this commission. No record has been kept of the number of pages contained in schedules as they were filed. Such record has now been kept for one week, and it is found that the schedules and supplements average 5 pages each. This is believed to be a fair average for the period above mentioned, and, based thereon, it is seen that the schedules filed within that period contained approximately 3,000,000 pages. The number of rate ftems is conservatively estimated to be about 50 per page, and in order to determine accurately what advances have been effected by such schedules it would be necessary to examine and compare 150,000,000 rate items, with a like number of items filed previous to July 1, 1906.

This estimate does not take into account changes which have been effected in the absence of through joint rates by changes in proportional rates, basing rates, or local rates which are used in the absence of joint through rates. For example, a single-page schedule naming proportional rates from New York and other Atlantic seaboard cities to Chicago, Peoria, East St. Louis, and other Mississippi River crossings and applicable to traffic destined to points west of the Mississippi River, if changed, would affect through rates to thousands of destinations west of the Mississippi River. In instances of this kind—and they are numerous—the present rates would have to be determined by combining the proportional rates east of the base points with the local rates west thereof, and before comparison could be made, former rates would have to be made up in like manner.

A schedule of 90 pages recently filed contains specific rates on 3,800 separate articles. There are two ratings, one applicable to carload quantities and one to less than carload quantities, for most of these articles. The rates apply from ten groups of origin, embracing a large number of the States east of the Mississippi River. This schedule contains approximately 60,000 separate specific rates, and in order to determine what changes are effected thereby comparison would have to be made with a like number of items published in previous schedules. This schedule was not of exceptional size, as many schedules contain between 200 and 700 pages.

On a previous occasion the schedules filed upon a single day were examined and compared with corresponding rates previously on file. Eight rate clerks were engaged upon this work for a period of seven days and were unable within that time to complete the check of the single day's filing. The number of schedules filed on that day was considerably below the average daily filing. The number of it would not accurately represent conditions at the time of its completion.

Many important advances in rates have been made since the passage of the Hepburn amendment. We have not been able to keep a record of the advances, but, in a general way, the following are noted:

The different freight association territories hereinafter referred to are, in a general way, defined as follows:

Central Freight Association territory is that territory lying west of Buffalo and Pittsburg, north of the Ohio River, and east of Chicago and St. Louis.

Southeastern Freight Association territory is that territory lying south of the Ohio and east of the Mississippl rivers.

Trunk Line territory is that territory lying north of the Ohio River, east of Buffalo and Pittsburg, and west of the Hudson River.

Transcontinental rates apply between points on the Pacific coast and points east of the Missouri and Mississippl rivers. Under these rates it is common to blanket a large territory on the east. For example, many of these rates apply alike from or to all points east of Chicago and north of the Ohio River.

Official classification territory includes all the territory south and east of the Ohio and Mississippi rivers.

Western classification territory includes all the territory west of the official and southern classification territory includes all the territory west of the official and southern classification territory includes all the territory west of the official and southern classification territory includes all the territory west of the official and southern classification territory includes all the territory west of the official and southern classification territory includes all the territory west of the official and southern classification territory includes all the territory west of the official and southern classification territory includes all the territory west of the official and southern classification territory includes all the territory west of the official and southern classification territory includes all the territ

COAL.

Rates have been advanced 5 cents per ton from the Pennsylvania, Maryland, and West Virginia fields to Central Freight Association territory and from the Kentucky, Tennessee, and Alabama fields to points in Southeastern Freight Association territory.

PIG IRON.

Rates have been advanced 25 cents per ton from furnace points in Southeastern Freight Association territory to points in Central Freight Association and trunk-line territories.

CAST-IRON PIPE.

Rates have been advanced 25 cents per ton from foundry points in Southeastern Freight Association territory to points in Central Freight Association and trunk-line territories.

IRON AND STEEL ARTICLES.

Rates subject to official classification have been generally advanced by the withdrawal of commodity rates and the application in lieu there-of of higher class rates. These advances are not uniform to all points

LUMBER.

Rates from Chicago and points basing thereon to trunk-line territory have been generally advanced by withdrawal of commodity rates and the application in lieu thereof of higher class rates. This advance was not uniform as to all points affected.

Rates from producing points in the Pacific Northwest to all destinations were advanced on November 1, 1907. After full hearing on complaint, this commission condemned the advance made from the producing points to points lying west of a line drawn from Pemblina, N. Dak., through Omaha and Kansas City to Port Arthur, Tex. An increase of 5 cents per 100 pounds was permitted to points lying east of that line.

GRAIN AND GRAIN PRODUCTS.

Rates have been advanced 2 cents per 100 pounds from Ohio and Mississippi River crossings to Southeastern Freight Association territory. Rates from northern and western producing points are based upon the Ohio and Mississippi River crossing rates, and therefore this advance resulted in an advance from all that territory.

Rates were advanced 2 cents per 100 pounds from Chicago to New York in May, 1907. The proportional rate applicable from Chicago on shipments from points west of the Mississippi River was reduced 1½ cents per 100 pounds on wheat and corn, and one-half cent per 100 pounds on rye, oats, and barley in May, 1908.

Rates from the Missouri River to the Mississippi River crossings and to Chicago were increased 1½ cents per 100 pounds in July, 1907.

PACKING-HOUSE PRODUCTS.

Rates have been advanced 3 cents per 100 pounds from Ohio and Mississippi River crossings to Southeastern Freight Association territory. Rates from northern and western producing points are based upon the Ohio and Mississippi River rates, and therefore corresponding advances result in rates from those producing points.

SUGAR.

Rates have been advanced 2 cents per 100 pounds from New York and New Orleans and from points in trunk-line territory, rates from which are made with relation to the New York rates, to points in Central Freight Association territory and to Chicago and to St. Paul and to points in the Northwest, the rates to which are made with relation to the Chicago or St. Paul rates.

TO TEXAS POINTS.

Rates have been advanced from Kansas City and St. Louis and points basing thereon, which embraces the entire territory east of the Mississippi River and a large number of points west thereof, to Texas points in sums ranging from 4 cents per 100 pounds on one class or article to 10 cents per 100 pounds on another class or article.

TRANSCONTINENTAL RATES.

TRANSCONTINENTAL BATES.

These rates have been advanced both eastbound and westbound between points in the Atlantic seaboard territory and States east of the Mississippi River on the one hand, and terminal points on the Pacific coast and intermediate points, the rates to which are made with relation thereto on the other hand, in sums ranging from 3 per cent on one article to 60 per cent on another article. The heaviest advance was in eastbound rates.

CLASSIFICATIONS.

Many advances in rates have been effected by changes in classifica-tion ratings and without changes in the specific scale of rates. Many changes in required carload minimum weights have been made. These do not necessarily increase the rates upon the commodities to which they apply unless the minimum weight has been fixed so high as to make it impossible to load it into the car.

OTHER CHANGES.

The tariffs of to-day contain many listed charges for services which would not be found in the tariffs in effect immediately prior to the Hepburn amendment. They, however, can not be said to be additional or increased charges, because now the tariffs contain lawful authority and provision for many services and charges which formerly were rendered without specific tariff authority therefor. The tariffs now contain many provisions for assessment and absorption of switching charges, which simply continue former practices for which provision was not made in the tariffs. The same is no doubt true as to many transit privileges.

EXPRESS RATES.

Express companies were first brought under the act to regulate commerce by the Hepburn amendment, and this necessitated an entire reconstruction of their rate schedules. None were on file with the commission prior to that time. No general advances in the charges of express companies have been noted except between various points in New England territory, where advances have been made ranging from 10 cents to 25 cents per 100 pounds.

PASSENGER FARES.

There have been no general increases in passenger fares; the tendency has been in the opposite direction. Reductions in state fares have resulted in a general lowering of interstate passenger fares.

The general increases in rates to Southeastern Freight Association territory and the increase in the rates to southwestern territory have been made the subject of complaint to this commission, and these complaints are in course of investigation, several hearings on same having been had.

As steed in our course, been had.

As stated in our annual report recently submitted to the Congress, the commission, on April 15, 1908, promulgated a ruling that tariffs applying on traffic exported to or imported from foreign countries not adjacent to the United States must, in accordance with the requirements of the law, show the rates, fares, and charges of the inland carriers, subject to the act for the transportation in the United States to the port and from the port.

Bether than to conform to this requirement, the rail carriers in the

and from the port.

Rather than to conform to this requirement, the rail carriers in the United States ordinarily known as "the transcontinental lines," withdrew, effective November 1, 1908, all their through import and export rates via the Pacific ports, leaving their domestic rates to and from the ports to apply to the inland carriage of such export and import traffic. Presumably this resulted in increased rates upon such traffic as has been subsequently imported or exported through those ports, but we have no means of measuring the advance, as the tariffs did not disclose, and we were not informed how the former rates were divided between the rail carriers in this country and the ocean steamship lines, and we have no means of knowing now what are the charges of the steamship lines.

Very respectfully,

MARTIN A. KNAPP, Chairman.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the agricultural appropriation bill (H. R. 27053).

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. Foster of Vermont in the chair.

The Clerk read as follows:

For rent of offices and repairs to buildings now completed and located outside of the District of Columbia and care and preservation of grounds, including construction of sidewalks and curbing on public streets abutting Weather Bureau grounds, $80,000.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order. I notice this item carried in the appropriation-for the construction of sidewalks and curbing on public streets abutting the Weather Bureau grounds.

It has not been the custom of the General Government to pay for curbing in front of public grounds, as I have found to my bitter regret on various occasions, and I would like to inquire of the gentleman what this is for. I may personally have no objection to it.

Mr. SCOTT. We asked the Chief of the Weather Bureau why he included the language in the estimate, and he stated, as I recall it, that the sidewalks and curbing around the Weather Bureau building in Washington are getting out of repair.

Mr. MANN. Is this for the city of Washington? Mr. SCOTT. For the city of Washington.

Mr. MANN. The item covers buildings outside. Is this construction of sidewalk and curbing on public streets only for the Weather Bureau grounds in Washington?

Mr. SCOTT. It is only for Washington, according to my recollection.

Mr. MANN. No; it says:

Buildings now completed and located outside of the District of Columbia, and care and preservation of grounds.

Mr. SCOTT. The impression I gained from the statement made before the committee by the chief of the bureau was that he had no expectation of using any of the money outside of the city of Washington for this purpose.

Mr. MANN. I do not see how he could use it inside the District of Columbia. It says:

For rent of offices and repairs to buildings now completed and located outside of the District of Columbia, and care and preservation of grounds, including construction of sidewalks and curbing on public streets abutting Weather Bureau grounds.

I think that would only apply to buildings outside of the District of Columbia.

Mr. SCOTT. The language undoubtedly bears that construction. I was quoting my recollection of what the Chief of the Weather Bureau said he wanted the money for.

Mr. MANN. Very likely that is what he desired it for.
Mr. SCOTT. But even if it was wanted for Weather Bureau stations outside of the District of Columbia, I do not see why it ought not to be given. The custom in all the cities I know of is for property owners to keep the sidewalks in repair.

Mr. MANN. I think they ought to build the sidewalks.

Mr. SCOTT. In the city where I live we have to keep

Mr. SCOTT. In the city where I live we have to keep the curbing in repair. I do not know whether that is the custom in other places or not.

Mr. MANN. The curbing is usually a part of the pavement.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I want to call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that the word "bureau" in this paragraph is singular.

Mr. MANN. The words "Weather Bureau grounds" would include grounds anywhere in the United States.

Mr. SCOTT. In looking over the language I think it would apply to bureau grounds not in the city. I think the plural goes to the word "grounds."

Mr. MANN. Would the gentleman consent to strike out the word "curbing?" In other words, I do not undertake to say what the policy of the Government should be, but it ought to be the same policy in regard to the Weather Bureau as to other public buildings.

Mr. SCOTT. I would consent to an amendment striking out the words "and curbing," if the gentleman desires to offer it. Mr. MANN. Then, I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to reserve the point

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] withdraws the point of order and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Madden] renews it.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I do so for the purpose of getting the gentleman in charge of the bill to agree to an amendment striking out any language of this appropriation that may apply to the District of Columbia.

Mr. MANN. It does not apply to the District of Columbia.
Mr. SCOTT. I do not believe, on reconsideration, that any of it would apply to the District.

Mr. MANN. It expressly provides for outside of the District of Columbia.

Mr. MADDEN. That is all right.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a vote on the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN. The point of order is withdrawn and I offer an amendment to strike out in line 22, the words "and curbing."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 6, line 22, strike out the words "and curbing."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For official traveling expenses, $22,000.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Will the gentleman inform us how this money for traveling expenses is expended and if there is any limitation upon the per diem traveling expenses?

Mr. SCOTT. There is no limitation except the money shall be paid upon sworn vouchers, which are handed in by the agents of the bureau who do the traveling.

Mr. MANN. It is only the actual expenses? Mr. SCOTT. It is only the actual expenses.

The CHAIRMAN. Unless objection is heard, the pro forma amendment will be considered as withdrawn.

Mr. EDWARDS of Georgia. Who audits the accounts?

Mr. SCOTT. They are audited first by the accountant of the Weather Bureau, and from him they go to the accountant in the department, and from him they go to the Auditor for the State and other Departments.

Mr. MADDEN. Actual expenses mean what?

Mr. SCOTT. It means actual expenses. Mr. MADDEN. Is there any limit placed on the person expending the money as to what the actual expenses are to be?

Mr. SCOTT. I do not think there is any limit in the law, but I wish to assure the gentleman from Illinois that in my judgment there is no department of the Government where a closer accounting is kept than in this department and where those who travel at the expense of the Government are more carefully required to keep their expenses within reasonable limits.

Mr. MADDEN. Does not the gentleman think there ought to be a limit placed as a maximum?

Mr. SCOTT. Is there a limit placed in any other department, does the gentleman know?

Mr. MADDEN. Oh, yes; I think there is—
Mr. MANN. This does not cover per diem at all.
Mr. SCOTT. There is no per diem in this. The man who travels is obliged to keep an account, just as a commercial man keeps an account with his house, and to swear to it when he hands in his account at the end of the month.

Mr. MADDEN. Most of the business houses when they send a man out on the road limit the amount he can expend in any one day.

Mr. SCOTT. I think it is very clearly understood in a general way among the employees of the department how much they shall expend, and I do not believe they offend against economy in that particular.

Mr. MADDEN. Would it not be a good plan to limit them as to how far they could go?

Mr. SCOTT. I doubt whether that would be advisable, for the reason that some of the employees of the bureau may require a greater allowance for traveling expenses than others.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it. Mr. HEPBURN. I desire to know what is now before the

The CHAIRMAN. A motion to strike out the last word.

Mr. HEPBURN. I noticed a triangular contest between those gentlemen over there in whispers, and I thought perhaps the committee ought to be in secret session.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will be in order, and gentlemen desiring to converse will retire to the cloakrooms.

Mr. MADDEN. Then it is understood in this bureau there are several degrees of expenses that may be incurred—that a man who has a higher classification in the service could incur higher expenses. Is that it?

Mr. SCOTT. For example, the chief of a bureau in traveling throughout the country would be expected to stop at higher-class hotels than some minor employee who might have occasion to go from one part of the country to the other.

Mr. MADDEN. Then what might be considered reasonable expenses for one person might be considered extravagant in the other, according to the view of the gentleman in charge of this bill.

Mr. SCOTT. That is the view I take of it.

Mr. MADDEN. It seems to me that any person who might be sent as a messenger for the Government in connection with the work of this department would be considered equally qualified to perform the duties of any other man who might be sent on a similar message; and that being the case they each would have similar rights of expenditure, and there ought not to be a minimum for the one and a maximum for the other.

Mr. SCOTT. Well, I have examined the accounting system in this department with a great deal of care. I have gone over a good many of these expense vouchers, and have investigated the matter closely. I have not yet seen any occasion for adopting either a maximum or minimum limit of expenditure.

Mr. MADDEN. The gentleman having taken the pains to make a personal investigation into the accounting of the items which would naturally be vouchered under this appropriation, will he be good enough to say to the committee what the average expenditure per person is each day while traveling in his official capacity?

Mr. SCOTT. Well, they usually figure that from $3 to $5 a day, probably nearer $5 than $3, is the average traveling expense-not only in this bureau but in other bureaus of the

Mr. EDWARDS of Georgia and Mr. GAINES of West Virginia

The CHAIRMAN. To whom does the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. Scorr] yield?

Mr. SCOTT. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. EDWARDS of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. Will the gentleman in charge of the bill consent to this amendment, namely, to insert on line 24, after the word "for," the words "actual and necessary," so that the sentence will read—

For actual and necessary official traveling expenses, $22,000.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I prefer not to accept that amendment, for the reason that throughout this bill we have used the term "official traveling expenses." That is the term which has been construed by the accounting officers of the Government to mean exactly what the gentleman says, namely, actual and necessary official traveling expenses. The words which he offers to insert as an amendment are not necessary under the construction that has been placed on the present language by the accounting officers.

Mr. EDWARDS of Georgia. I respectfully submit that there could be official traveling expenses without being actual and necessary, and I think the amendment ought to be made, and I

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. ED-WARDS] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Line 24, on page 6, before the word "official," insert "actual and

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I hope that amendment will not prevail. The committee has made an honest effort to word this bill in the simplest possible language so that it may be clear and easily understood. We considered carefully the matter of the phraseology which should be used in covering the subject of traveling expenses, and were told by the accounting officer of the bureau, who is one of the most careful and efficient men in that capacity in the Government employ, I think, that the phrase "official traveling expenses" had been construed by the auditing officers of the Treasury Department as meaning only actual and necessary expenses. This being true, the amendment offered by the gentleman simply cumbers the bill with unnecessary phraseology, and I hope it will be voted down.

Mr. STAFFORD. If the phrase as now carried in the bill is construed in the language of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Edwards], what objection can there be to inserting it? I wish to say, in addition, that the language as suggested in the amendment is the same phraseology as that carried in other appropriation bills.

Mr. SCOTT. The objection to inserting it is, first, that it is unnecessary; second, that we ought to keep the language of the bill harmonious and not be compelled to insert the words everywhere else where the term "official expenses" is used; and, third, that it adds words without adding meaning. I ask for a vote on the amendment.

Mr. GAINES of West Virginia. May I ask the gentleman a question bearing on this part of the bill? Do the words "official traveling expenses" include subsistence while traveling? I take it, from what has been said, that they do.

Mr. SCOTT. They do. Mr. GAINES of West Virginia. I remember when I was connected at one time with the Department of Justice that the allowance for subsistence when traveling was limited. not know whether it is the law now in the Department of Justice or not, but some years ago the subsistence expenses were limited to $4 a day. What is the reason that the limitation upon the traveling expenses has been taken out of the language of the agricultural appropriation bill when appropriating for limit on the traveling expenses on the appropriation bills that come from that committee. I ask the gentleman in charge of this bill why such language is not included in the language of the agricultural appropriation bill?

Mr. LIVINGSTON. The Committee on Appropriations always put a limit on the expenses for travel in the bills they report from that committee.

Mr. SCOTT. Such a limitation never was included in the language of the agricultural appropriation bill; and I presume it was omitted because it was thought that the expense account was sufficiently guarded when the men paying it out were required to present itemized sworn vouchers.

Mr. STAFFORD. Would not the effect of putting a limitation, as is sometimes provided in other appropriation bills, result in the accounts for subsistence inclining toward the maximum rate rather than the actual amount?

Mr. GAINES of West Virginia. I can not see that it would so result. On a sworn statement of actual expenses all people do not put in the maximum amount. All gentlemen are supposed to be honest, and they would not put in the maximum.

Mr. STAFFORD. In many instances it has been shown that where a limit has been placed, many department officials consider that is what they are entitled to, and they enter their expenses at the maximum amount.

Mr. GAINES of West Virginia. But that is a distinctly wrong impression. It is not considered that the maximum amount is allowed.

Mr. SCOTT. I would like to call the attention of the gentle-man from West Virginia to a comparatively recent impeachment trial in the Senate of the United States, where a certain federal judge was impeached; and, among other things, the charge was made that he had put in an expense account at the maximum amount, whereas his actual expenses were less than that amount. His defense was that the limitation in the appropriation bill fixed the amount for subsistence at such a figure, and he deemed that he was warranted in charging that amount whether his actual expenses were that much or not.

Mr. GAINES of West Virginia. But, Mr. Chairman, in the case of Judge Swayne, there were two considerations, which will be remembered. In the first place, his practice was deemed a very bad one; and in the second place, there was a considerable amount of difference of opinion as to whether the appropriation relating to the subsistence of federal judges was not intended by the Appropriations Committee and by Congress that they were to be allowed to charge that amount for their ex-

I insist again that it is not the practice to charge the maximum amount for subsistence if the actual amount be less than that; and where any officer does put in a sworn account to the maximum amount when the actual expense was less than that he is liable to prosecution.

Mr. SCOTT. My judgment is, Mr. Chairman, that it would not be in the interest of economy to adopt this amendment, and I trust, therefore, that it will be voted down.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected. Mr. GAINES of West Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend, in line 24, by inserting "for actual official traveling expenses and subsistence not exceeding the sum of $4 per day."

Mr. MANN. They could not travel far on that.

Mr. GAINES of West Virginia. That does not cover the traveling.

Mr. SCOTT. I would like to have the amendment read from

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 6, line 24, before the word "official," insert "actual," and amend so it will read "actual official traveling expenses and subsistence, not exceeding the sum of $4 per day."

Mr. SCOTT. I wish to reserve the point of order against the amendment; in the first place, because I believe it is legislation; and I reserve that point and speak to the merits of the amendment.

I wish to say that in my judgment this amendment would make it impossible for the Chief of the Weather Bureau to travel at all and have his expenses paid. The chief of a great government bureau as conspicuous as the Weather Bureau ought when he travels to travel as any Member of this House would travel. He ought to stop at good hotels, and in other ways maintain the position of dignity which should be held by any gentleman representing this Government in a high official capacity. That can not be done, as I think we can all testify, on $4 a day. I do not believe, either, that the adoption of this amendment would tend to economy, because, in spite of what the gentleman from West Virginia says, it is my information that it is the universal practice, when such a limitation is Mr. GAINES of West Virginia. The gentleman from Georgia placed upon traveling expenses, to construe the amount named states that the Committee on Appropriations always puts in a sa a minimum. I am assured that in a great deal of the traveling done by the minor officials of the Weather Bureau the expenses amount to less than $4 a day.

It seems to me, therefore, that this amendment would result in increasing rather than in diminishing this traveling-expense account, and I trust therefore, if it be held in order, that it will be voted down.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SCOTT. Yes. Mr. HULL of Iowa. Is this $4 limitation intended to apply to transportation as well as subsistence?

Mr. SCOTT. The gentleman from West Virginia must answer

Mr. GAINES of West Virginia. No; the language is not open to that interpretation. The limitation is plainly upon subsistence, and not traveling expenses, of course. It is actual traveling expenses, and subsistence not exceeding $4 a day. I should be willing to increase the amount to $6 a day, if the gentleman thinks so, but there ought to be a limitation.

Mr. SCOTT. I would ask for a ruling on the point of order. The CHAIRMAN (Mr. OLMSTED). The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. SCOTT. That the proposition to amend this bill by fixing a maximum of subsistence is legislation, and therefore contrary to the rule

Mr. GAINES of West Virginia. The remarks of the gentleman from Kansas show that this would result in a reduction of expenditure, and the language itself shows it to be a limitation, and therefore it is not obnoxious to the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would ask the gentleman from Kansas whether there is any authority of law for the payment of the traveling expenses provided in the bill?

Mr. SCOTT. Oh, undoubtedly there is the general authority of law to cover that point, but I do not believe there is any authority to fix a certain amount as subsistence in addition to traveling expenses.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will ask the gentleman from West Virginia whether the limitation in the amendment, the words "not exceeding the sum of $4 per day," is intended to apply only to subsistence or to qualify also the word "expenses?"

Mr. GAINES of West Virginia. Clearly, it does not, Mr. Chairman. It is intimated by gentlemen around me that I do not understand the Chairman's question, and I admit I did not hear it very well. There is a great deal of conversation going

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will ask the gentleman from West Virginia whether this limitation of $4 a day is intended to apply to the two items?

Mr. GAINES of West Virginia. It does not. It applies only to subsistence, and not, of course, to the traveling expenses.

That would appear very clearly.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of opinion that unless there is some authority shown for the appropriation for subsistence the amendment in the present form is open to the point of order. If it were merely a limitation upon the appropriation for traveling expenses to a certain amount, the Chair would think it a limitation within the rule, as frequently construed; but it seems to separate the two items, and applies the limitation only to the matter of subsistence, for which latter item no authority of law has been shown. The Chair therefore sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

For telephone rentals and for telegraphing, telephoning, and cabling reports and messages, rates to be fixed by the Secretary of Agriculture by agreements with the companies performing the service, $260,000.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I should like to ask the chairman of the committee what rates are fixed for telephoning and telegraphing as between the Secretary and the company?

Mr. SCOTT. I do not recall at this moment what the rates are. That question did not come up in the hearings this year, because we had discussed it in previous years and had obtained the information. Just at this moment I can not recall.

Mr. MORSE. Are any reductions made to the Government? Mr. SCOTT. Oh, the reductions are very great indeed. And I will say further, that the cost of telegraphing to this bureau is very much reduced by a code which is used, by means of which a message which ordinarily would require 20 or 30 words can be transmitted by the use of 3 or 4 words.

Mr. MORSE. Is there any law of the United States which prevents the Government securing special privileges from the telephone and telegraph companies?

Mr. SCOTT. I do not know of any, and I think there can be none, because undoubtedly the Government does get better rates from the telegraph and telephone companies than any individual or organization that I know of is able to get.

Mr. MORSE. Is this sent out for a less sum than the Government rates, a cent a word?

Mr. SCOTT. I think it is for considerably less than the usual Government rates and less than the press rates.
Mr. EDWARDS of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. I want to ask the gentleman from Kansas what the objection is in leaving the fixing of the rates to the chief of the bureau instead of to the Secretary of Agriculture?

Mr. SCOTT. The Secretary of Agriculture has supervision over the bureau. It is simply a branch of his department, and there does not seem to be any reason why that authority should not be invested in him.

Mr. EDWARDS of Georgia. Yes; he has supervision, but the chief of the bureau has direct charge of it and is closely in touch with it.

Mr. SCOTT. The gentleman will find, if he follows the bill through, that the Secretary of Agriculture is always named when some important executive act is to be performed.

Mr. EDWARDS of Georgia. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the maintenance and repair of Weather Bureau telegraph, telephone, and cable lines, $4,200.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I want to ask the gentleman from Kansas whether the Government owns any telegraph, telephone, or cable lines outside of the city of Washington?

Mr. SCOTT. Yes; the Government owns such lines at several points, chiefly along the edge of the continent, if I might use that expression. For instance, we have weather bureau stations on islands adjacent to the coast, and we have some in the Great Lakes, and cables have been laid from the mainland to those islands.

cation except by these special telegraph and cable lines? Mr. SCOTT. No.

Mr. DRISCOLL. And this is for the maintenance and repair of those lines?

And there are no other means of communi-

Mr. DRISCOLL.

Mr. SCOTT. Yes.
Mr. MANN. I may say to the gentleman that these lines do some outside business, but the receipts are all turned into the Treasury

Mr. DRISCOLL. Turned into this fund?
Mr. MANN. No; into the Treasury, into the miscellaneous receipts.

Mr. DRISCOLL. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the maintenance of a printing office in the city of Washington, including the purchase of necessary supplies and materials for printing weather maps, bulletins, circulars, forms, and other publications, and for pay of additional assistant foremen, proof readers, compositors, pressmen, lithographers, and folders and feeders, when necessary, $45,000.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I wish to ask the chairman of the committee a question. They have a regular printing office in the Weather Bureau?

We have a printing office there.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Have you a scale of prices so that we can get at the cost of printing and compare it with the cost of printing in the Public Printing Office?

Mr. SCOTT. I'doubt very much whether the work of the Weather Bureau printing office would afford data for such a comparison as the gentleman wishes.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Do you have any printing for that bureau done at the Public Printing Office?

Mr. SCOTT. I think the reports of the chief and the bulle-tins, when a large number are required, are printed in the general printing office. The work that is done in the bureau printing office is chiefly that of the printing of maps, the monthly and weekly Weather Bureau reports, and the necessary blanks used by the bureau.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. And the committee did not look into the cost of that printing?

Mr. SCOTT. No; we did not have any occasion to do that, because we make an appropriation for the maintenance of the office in a lump sum, and it has not changed for many years until this year, when we allowed an increase of $15,000 because it was the intention of the chief to print in the bureau here at Washington publications which heretofore have been printed in the offices throughout the country. The chief recommended that the publications heretofore printed in the outside offices be discontinued, and we believe it is in the interest of economy to have the change made.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Do I understand you to say that there has been an increase in the price of the work?

Mr. SCOTT. No; not in the price of the work, but an increase of $15,000 in the appropriation.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. If the gentleman listened to the discussion a few days ago on the floor in regard to the Interior Department and the Treasury Department, he will remember that the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations stated that there has been an increase of 55 per cent in the cost of printing. The gentleman has not discovered that in this bureau?

Mr. SCOTT. There is no occasion for any report of that kind coming from the printing office of the Weather Bureau, for the reason that it does not do any work for any other outside bureau, and therefore has no occasion to make any itemized statement showing the cost of its work.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I want the gentleman to understand that it is just as necessary for the Government to have cheap printing done as it is for an outsider.

Mr. SCOTT. I quite agree with the gentleman.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order, that the gentlemen carrying on the colloquy are out of order. I submit that whatever there is in the way of address on this floor is to the Chairman of this committee, and that a Member has no right to address another Member on the floor, and carry on in this way a private conversation. I have been listening and attempting to hear what the two gentlemen have said, and not a word have I been able to hear.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. That is not our fault.

Mr. HEPBURN. The gentlemen are violating the rules. It is the duty of each gentleman to address the Chair if he desires to ask a question; and if he desires to answer a question, he must do it through the Chair. That is the parliamentary usage, and any other method is a violation of the law.

The Clerk read as follows:

BUREAU OF ANIMAL INDUSTRY.

BUREAU OF ANIMAL INDUSTRY.

Salaries, Bareau of Animal Industry: One chief of bureau, $5,000; 1 chief clerk, $2,000; 1 editor and compiler, $2,000; 4 clerks, class 4; 5 clerks, class 3; 15 clerks, class 2; 1 clerk, $1,300; 14 clerks, class 1; 14 clerks, at $1,000 each; 5 clerks, at $900 each; 3 clerks, at $840 each; 5 clerks, at $720 each; 1 mechanic, $1,200; 1 messenger and custodian, $1,000; 1 carpenter, $1,100; 3 carpenters, at $900 each; 1 painter, $900; 3 messengers, at $340 each; 4 messengers, at $720 each; 2 messenger boys, at $480 each; 1 skilled laborer, $840; 2 skilled laborer, at $720 each; 3 skilled laborers, at $600 each; 1 skilled laborer, $660; 1 illustrator, $1,400; 4 laborers, at $600 each; 1 laborer, $480; 1 charwoman, $540; 6 charwomen, at $480 each; 2 charwomen, at $240 each; in all, $114,100.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on

Mr. DRISCOLL. Mr. Chairman, I wish to ask if any employees from any other part of this bureau have been transferred to the salary list which is set out in this paragraph.

Mr. SCOTT. Yes; there are a number of employees who have heretofore been paid under the lump-fund appropriations that are now carried to this salary statutory roll.

Mr. DRISCOLL. That is the way the gentleman accounts for the large increase in the total for the salary list?

Mr. SCOTT. That explains it. I will say for the information of the gentleman from New York that the only new places on this roll are 3 clerks, at $1,000 each. There have been transferred from this bureau to the Secretary's roll 1 clerk of class 2; 1 clerk, at $840; 2 messengers, at $720; and 1 skilled laborer, at $720; and all the transfers to the roll except the 3 clerks which I mentioned have come from the lump-fund appropriation.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Were they employed heretofore in the same work, but paid out of a lump sum?

Mr. SCOTT. They are employed now in the bureau, and there is no change in their official duty. The transfer is made in accordance with the practice of the committee, which, it believes, is in the interest of good legislation, to bring under the statutory roll employees who are regularly engaged in the bureau and are to remain there permanently, so far as we can see.

Mr. DRISCOLL. I withdraw the pro forma amendment. Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois insist on the point of order?

Mr. MADDEN. I reserve the point of order.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I notice in this paragraph a number of increases of items, such as laborers, painters, carpenters, and so forth, which, I assume, are perfectly proper; and I would like to ask the gentleman whether the occasion for employing them now and heretofore, which has only been a recent employment, is because of the additional expense of taking care of the new Agricultural building?

Mr. SCOTT. That accounts for a good many of these places. There are 64 rooms in the new Agricultural building which are used by the Bureau of Animal Industry. A good deal of work is necessary to get those rooms properly fitted up, and therefore the chief of the bureau asks for these increases in his force.

Mr. MANN. I can see the reason for that. May I ask the gentleman a further question? I notice that in the bill the gentleman carries items of carpenters under the Bureau of Animal Industry, carpenters under the Bureau of Plant Industry, and carpenters under the bureau of something else, all located in the new building. Has the gentleman's committee considered the question of whether it is desirable to have these carpenters scattered under different bureaus instead of being all under one head?

Mr. SCOTT. In reply to the gentleman's question I wish to say that the committee has considered that very carefully. Under the appropriation carried in the last year's bill, new shops have been constructed on the department grounds, as the gentleman doubtless knows. When the estimates came before us this year, the committee inquired whether it would not be in the interest of economy to have the mechanics now allotted to the various bureaus all gathered together in these shops under one foreman, so that when the Bureau of Animal Industry needs the services of a carpenter, for example, it could notify that foreman and he could detail a man to do that particular work, and so all the way around the other bureaus. The Secretary, to whom this matter was referred, after consultation doubtless with his chiefs, gave it as his opinion that in another year that could be properly done, but at present, when things are more or less in chaos, owing to the fact that the bureaus have not yet settled down into their new quarters, it seemed more desirable to have the present arrangement continue.

Mr. MANN. Then, it is not intended to continue this as a permanent policy?

Mr. SCOTT. Not if the committee can control it.

Mr. MANN. Probably not. May I ask the gentleman one more question? Are these persons now covered into the regular salaried list people who have been appointed in the classified service through the Civil Service Commission, or are they there by being covered into the classified service?

Mr. SCOTT. They were originally appointed in the classified service, and I will say to the gentleman that they can not get a charwoman in the Department of Agriculture except through the civil service. They can not, even, appoint a laborer on the temporary rolls, so they tell me.

Mr. MANN. I understand that, as far as I am concerned, but that is not true in every case. Now, a charwoman is not in the classified service, and there is a very different roll from which they take the charwomen and from which they take the skilled laborer. What I desired to learn was whether these people who now go into the classified service were originally appointed from the same rolls from which appointments to the classified service are made, or whether they are appointed on the roll from which mere laborers are appointed?

Mr. SCOTT. They were appointed from the rolls from which the classified service is appointed, and it is my information that the only appointments which can be made in the Department of Agriculture outside the civil service are for "experts." think it is claimed that there is a provision of the civil-service rules under which the Secretary can appoint an expert without calling upon the civil service. Mr. DRISCOLL. Let me ask a question in connection with a remark the gentleman made. Is it not possible to transfer from other departments to the Agricultural Department persons who have been gotten into those departments without the civil-service examination?

Mr. SCOTT. It is governed by the civil-service regulations; there are such regulations.

Mr. MADDEN. I wish to inquire why the committee thought it necessary to increase the number of clerks provided in lines 9, 11, and 14—3 new clerks, at $1,000 each?
Mr. SCOTT. That increase is a very small part of the increases asked for by the chief of the bureau in the estimates, and the committee believes that the increase of the work of the bureau justifies this addition to his office force.

Mr. MADDEN. Does the committee think there is an increased work in the Department of Agriculture, as a matter of fact?

Mr. SCOTT. There does not seem to be any doubt about that.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, does the gentleman give it as his opinion that the addition of these three clerks, at $1,000 each, is a prime necessity for the proper conduct of the work of the department?

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, it was the opinion of your committee that it is a prime necessity; otherwise it would not have been recommended.

Mr. MADDEN. Then I withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois withdraws the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Cooperative experiments in animal feeding and breeding: For experiments in animal feeding and breeding, in cooperation with the state agricultural experiment stations, including the repairs and additions to and erection of buildings absolutely necessary to carry on the experiments, including rent, and the employment of labor in the city of Washington and elsewhere, and all other necessary expenses, $50,000.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order and I would like to know what authority of law there is other than in the appropriation bills for several years carrying that provision?

Mr. SCOTT. The gentleman refers to the paragraph for cooperative experiments in animal feeding and breeding

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Yes; page 12, lines 12 to 19.

Mr. SCOTT. Aside from the authority of several preceding appropriation acts-

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Which is no authority at all.
Mr. SCOTT (continuing). It seems to me that under the general authority of the law creating the Department of Agriculture the work may well be justified. The first section of that law provides that-

It shall be the duty of such department to acquire and diffuse among the people of the United States useful knowledge on subjects connected with agriculture in the most general and comprehensive sense of that

It seems to me that the investigations provided for in this paragraph may well lead to knowledge relating to the breeding and feeding of domestic animals which will be of very great use to the agricultural interests of the United States.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Now, with the construction which the gentleman puts on the act creating this department, is there anything you can not do in this bill except increase salaries which are fixed by law?

Mr. SCOTT. Well, in my judgment, there are very few things which relate to the fundamental industry of our country which you could not do under the authority of this act.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. I confess that the construction of the rule put upon it by the gentleman from Kansas would permit the House to embrace anything in this appropriation bill. As he seems to think that this is a very useful appropriation and of great service to the agricultural interests, will not make the point of order, although I do not want to be understood as concurring in the proposition that there is no limit on the Committee on Agriculture or on the House when considering this bill as to what new law they shall enact in it. While I think many of the purposes of this and other provisions in this bill are very laudable, I think we have already stretched the authority of Congress to the point of breaking.

Mr. SCOTT. I thoroughly appreciate the gentleman's posi-

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. I will not make the point of order. [Applause.] The purpose of reserving the point of order was to ascertain if this appropriation is made for the purpose of increasing the quality and character of the live stock.

Mr. SCOTT. That is the purpose of this investigation.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Georgia

[Mr. BARTLETT] has expired. Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. I am very much in favor of that, and I will not make the point of order. [Applause.]

that, and I will not make the point of order. [Applause.]

Mr. COX of Indiana. Can the gentleman inform the committee how much money the Government spends annually in cooperative work in the various institutions of the States?

Mr. SCOTT. I have never had a statement prepared showing all of the money that is expended in cooperation with the various States, and I am unable to give the gentleman a categorical

Mr. COX of Indiana. I think it is a splendid work that the Government is doing. If the gentleman could approximate the amount, I would like to know.

Mr. SCOTT. I wish to say that it is the disposition of the committee, wherever it can be justly done, to require the States to cooperate in the event that the General Government spends any money within their borders for a specific purpose.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Can the gentleman answer this ques tion, How many States are now cooperating with the General Government along this line?

Mr. SCOTT. There is hardly a State in the Union that is not cooperating in some way with the General Government.

Mr. COX of Indiana. They have practically all taken advantage of it?

Mr. SCOTT. Nearly all of them have done so; and I may add that the cooperation of the States in the matter of the enforcement of the pure-food law is referred to especially by the Chief of the Bureau of Chemistry as being helpful and in the interest of economy.

The Clerk read as follows:

Total for Bureau of Animal Industry, $1,402,860.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I wish to ask the chairman of this committee whether it is expected that this bureau will take on any new and additional lines or kinds of work other than have been conducted or carried on in the past?

Mr. SCOTT. There is not any intention, as far as I know, of taking on any new projects this year.

Mr. DRISCOLL. I observe the amount appropriated for this bureau for the next year is $322,000 more than that for the current year, and more than 30 per cent additional. That is a pretty large increase for the work carried on in this bureau.

Mr. SCOTT. The gentleman must be mistaken in his figures. The estimates ask for an increase in this bureau of $96,560. The committee has allowed a total increase of $72,000 only.

Mr. DRISCOLL. The present law carries a total of $1,080,860, and this carries a total of $1,402,860, which, as I have figured out, is an increase of $322,000 in this bureau. That is a pretty large increase for the ordinary growth of the bureau and for doing the ordinary work

Mr. COCKS of New York. They have put in something for this foot-and-mouth disease. I do not know how much. Mr. DRISCOLL (continuing). Especially when our deficit is growing all the time and was about $15,000,000 during the last month.

Mr. SCOTT. The total appropriation for the Bureau of Animal Industry for 1909 was $1,330,860.

Mr. DRISCOLL. There must have been some shifting of it somewhere. I want to know whether it is proposed to take on any new work during the next year not included in the Bureau of Animal Industry during the last year.

Mr. SCOTT. The explanation probably is in the fact that last year there was carried as a separate appropriation $250,000 for the eradication of the cattle tick, and that is included in the general expense account here this year instead of being carried as an emergency measure.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Is that carried here in the appropriation for the Bureau of Animal Industry?

Mr. SCOTT. In last year's bill the appropriation for the eradication of the cattle tick, $250,000, was carried as an emergency appropriation and was not included in the total as shown in the last of the Bureau of Animal Industry. in the law for the Bureau of Animal Industry. This year that $250,000 is included. The amount is the same, and the work is not changed.

Mr. DRISCOLL. I withdraw the motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

BUREAU OF PLANT INDUSTRY.

BUREAU OF PLANT INDUSTRY.

Salaries, Bureau of Plant Industry: One plant physiologist and pathologist, who shall be chief of bureau, $5,000; 1 chief clerk, $2,250; 1 editor, $2,000; 1 superintendent of gardens and grounds, $1,800; 1 officer in charge of records, $2,000; 3 executive clerks, at $1,980 each; 4 clerks, class 4; 8 clerks, class 3; 1 clerk, $1,500; 13 clerks, class 2; 31 clerks, class 1; 1 seed clerk and superintendent, $1,200; 1 clerk, $1,080; 19 clerks, at $1,000 each; 15 clerks, at $1,000; at clerks, at $400 each; 16 clerks, at $400 each; 16 clerks, at $400 each; 17 clerk, $800; 13 clerks, at $720 each; 8 clerks, messengers, or laborers, at $660 each; 15 clerks, messengers, or laborers, at $660 each; 16 clerks, at $1,000 each; 6 gardeners, at $900 each; 2 gardeners or assistants, at $1,000 each; 6 gardeners, at $900 each; 2 gardeners, at $840 each; 4 gardeners, at $780 each; 5 gardeners, at $720 each; 3 gardeners, at $600; 1 painter, $840; 2 plumbers, at $840 each; 8 skilled laborers, at $720 each; 4 skilled laborers, at $840 each; 14 skilled laborers, messengers, or messenger boys, at $840 each; 14 messenger boys, at $840 each; 16 all, $210,510.

Mr. EDWARDS of Georgia. I move to strike out the last

Mr. EDWARDS of Georgia. I move to strike out the last

Mr. DRISCOLL. I will make or reserve a point of order on the three executive clerks.

Mr. EDWARDS of Georgia. I wish to offer an amendment, move to strike out of page 12, line 25—
The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will first dispose of the point

Mr. DRISCOLL. I make the point of order against the words "three executive clerks," in line 4, page 13, as creating new offices, not authorized by law.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, two of these clerks are new to this bill. One was provided in the last bill. So that the total number is now three clerks, with only two of them new. It seems to me that the point of order against them is not well taken, because the Secretary of Agriculture is certainly authorized by law to employ all the clerks, assistants, and other persons he may need to perform the duty imposed upon him. I ask for a ruling upon the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York make the point of order?

Mr. DRISCOLL. I reserved it; I wanted to know if the gentleman had shifted either of these clerks from some other line of service and whether they were paid from some other appropriation; if so, I would not have minded. But now, since the gentleman wants a ruling, I want to see any authority for two of these places at $1,980 each.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, this matter was considered, and very carefully, by the committee, and it was the judgment of the committee that the bureau chiefs made a good case in asking for this increase. The Bureau of Plant industry is managed with very great discretion and good judgment, and it is the opinion of your committee that these two places are needed in order to carry out the work of the bureau. It seems to me clear that the point of order can not lie against them, and I will ask a ruling of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York make the point of order?

Mr. DRISCOLL. Well, yes; I make it now. The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Kansas inform the Chair as to the statute which gives to the Secretary of Agriculture the authority he referred to a moment ago?

Mr. SCOTT. The organic act establishing the department authorizes the Secretary of Agriculture to employ such "clerks, assistants, and other persons" as he may need to carry into effect the provisions of the act. I quote from memory, but I am quite sure I am not mistaken about it.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Mr. Chairman, in order to save time, I withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is withdrawn.

Mr. EDWARDS of Georgia. I move to amend, page 12, line 25, by striking out at the end of the line the word "two" and inserting the word "five," and in line 1, page 13, strike out the words "and fifty."

Mr. MACON. I reserve a point of order on the amendment. The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

Mr. EDWARDS of Georgia. I expected that of the gentle-

Mr. MACON. Whenever the gentleman undertakes to violate the rules of this House he may expect it.

Mr. EDWARDS of Georgia. I am aware of the fact that the gentleman is always on the lookout.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will please repeat his amendment, in order that the Clerk may get it.

Mr. EDWARDS of Georgia. Line 25, page 12, strike out the word "two," at the end of the line, and insert "five;" and in line 1, page 13, strike out the words "and fifty."

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 12, line 25, strike out the word "two," at the end of the line, and insert "five;" and in line 1, page 13, strike out the words "and fifty," so as to read "$2,500."

Mr. SCOTT. I make the point of order against that. Mr. MACON. I will say to the gentleman from Kansas, it is already made.

I was waiting until the amendment could be Mr. SCOTT. reported at the Clerk's desk.

Mr. EDWARDS of Georgia. I withdraw the amendment. The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be withdrawn. Mr. MACON. I object to the withdrawal of the amendment.

I would like to have the Chair rule on the point of order. The CHAIRMAN. Objection is heard. The point of order

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Chairman, I rise with some hesitation to move to strike out the last word, in order to ask for some information. I see in this bill, on this page, there are provisions for as many as 30 gardeners and assistant gardeners. What I want to know is where this gardening of the department is done, and what is the necessity for so many gardeners. The information I am anxious to secure, and what I want to understand, is what the department is doing that requires the employment of this many laborers in that line.

Mr. SCOTT. If the gentleman has visited the grounds around the Agricultural Department, he will have noticed there are extensive greenhouses, which are used in plant breeding and propagation and other plant-cultural work. The men who take care of these greenhouses are carried on the roll as gardeners. They are all kept busy, and their number is not greater than the work requires. Mr. HARDY. Is most of that within the city limits and close to the department buildings?

Mr. SCOTT. It is all within the city of Washington, with the exception of some men who are employed on the Arlington experiment farm across the river.

Mr. HARDY. How large is that Arlington experiment farm? Mr. SCOTT. My recollection is that there are about 200 acres in the Arlington experiment farm.

Mr. HARDY. That is taken charge of by these men? Mr. SCOTT. Yes.
Mr. HARDY. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the investigation and improvement of grains and methods of grain production, $63,910.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. should like to inquire of the Chair whether the lines now being read are considered as a part of one and the same paragraph, beginning at line 11, page 14, or whether each paragraph is considered as an independent paragraph? You will notice that at the end of line 23 there is a colon, and all these subsequent paragraphs end with semicolons.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Wisconsin that each one of these seems to be a separate paragraph.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I have been waiting for what I supposed to be the end of the paragraph. Under the ruling of the Chair I ask unanimous consent to return to the bottom of page 15.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to return to the paragraph at the bottom of page 15. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I move to amend that paragraph by adding after the word "cotton," in line 23, the words "and wool," so that it will read:

For investigating the handling, grading, and baling of cotton and wool, and the establishment of standards for the different grades thereof.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I shall be obliged to reserve a point of order against that amendment.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Anticipating the point of order, I wish to call the matter to the attention of the committee when this bill is considered another year. It is of great importance to the growers of wool in my State and in other States that this matter of the grading of wool, equally with the grading of cotton, may receive governmental supervision and attention. I have found by reading on the subject and otherwise that the grading of wool in Australia has made a wonderful difference and been of very great value to the woolgrowers of that country; and I am sure that the artificial methods by which wool is now graded in the Boston and other markets could be greatly improved by governmental supervision. If it be held, as I apprehend it will be, that this amendment is subject to the point of order, I hope that the committee will bear it in mind at their hearings another year. I should like to ask the chairman of the committee what, if any, attention the committee have given to the matter of the grading of wool?

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, the committee considered the proposition of including an investigation along this line, with a view of improving the standards of the grades of wool, but decided not to recommend it in this bill, because the work of standardization of cotton has not yet been finished, and we thought it was better to finish one investigation before taking up another.

Mr. DOUGLAS. If I may be pardoned for interrupting, is not that investigation substantially finished?

Mr. SCOTT. It could hardly be said to be finished. It has come to the stage where we will determine pretty soon whether the work which has been done is of any value. A very impor-tant part of the work still remains to be done. I appreciate the importance of the suggestion of the gentleman, and can assure him that the committee will consider it at another time, but I shall be obliged at this time to insist upon my point of order.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I concede the point of order to be well taken.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the investigation and improvement of methods of growing, producing, and handling tobacco, $30,530.

Mr. COLE. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, after the word "dollars," in line 23:

For experiments in the manufacture of paper from cornstalks, $20,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

Page 16, line 23, insert the following:
"For experiments in the manufacture of paper from cornstalks, $20,000."

Mr. SCOTT. I reserve the point of order.

Mr. COLE. Mr. Chairman, I realize the appropriation called for by this amendment is subject to a point of order, but the subject-matter is of sufficient importance to receive congressional recognition. During the past year the Department of Agriculture has been making some experiments in the manufacture of paper from cornstalks and other fibrous plants in one of its chemical laboratories. The results obtained have been very gratifying. The finest quality of paper has been manufactured from cornstalks. It is a demonstrated fact that all grades of paper can be successfully made. Now, Mr. Chairman, this is an age of conservation. We recognized the necessity of practicing economy in the use of our natural resources. The whole question of conservation revolves around the preservation of our forests and our supply of timber. Government authorities assure us that at the present rate of consumption our present supply will be exhausted within a period of thirty years. Anything that tends to conserve that supply is worthy of consideration. The manufacture of pulp and paper is one of the greatest demands upon our forests at the present time. When a pulp factory is established in any timber land, as a rule it usually denudes that section. It uses all timber from 2 inches in diameter to the largest tree of the forest. As a result of the great consumption of wood the price of paper has greatly increased. Every newspaper in the country will testify to that fact.

Many papers have been compelled to cut down the size of their issues because of this increased cost. Therefore, any product that can be used in the manufacture of paper ought to It would only cost about $20,000, according to the estimate of the department, to equip a factory in the great corngrowing belt for the purpose of making this experiment. It would be a source of increased income to the farmers. Doctor Galloway, of the Bureau of Plant Industry, estimates that $5 a ton can be paid for cornstalks and the manufacturer realize a reasonable profit on his investment. An acre of ordinary corn land in the United States produces from 3 to 5 tons. This excludes the husks and blades, which can be used for provender. From this statement it is evident that from fifteen to twenty dollars can be realized from this by-product that now is practically worthless. One ton of cornstalks will produce about as much paper as 1 ton of wood. Of course it is of much greater bulk than wood and would cost more for transportation. But if the factories were established in the corn-growing regions that element of cost could be greatly reduced. It occurs to me that an enterprise which would lessen the cost of print paper and bring millions of dollars into the pockets of the American farmers from a source that is now almost useless should receive encouragement at the hands of this Congress. [Applause.]

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the gentleman from Ohio if he would have any objections to including the words "flax straw" in his amendment?

Mr. COLE. I have not any objection to including anything that can be used for the manufacture of paper that will lessen the tax on our forest reserve, so rapidly being exhausted in the making of pulp and paper. At this time, when we are expending so much of the public funds in the discovery of methods of increased production, it is certainly proper and expedient to devote a small appropriation to the utilization of the by-products of the farm. Here is a great product that is almost worthless to-day, great quantities of it unused and burned up in the springtime. Let us give the department authority and sufficient appropriation to perform this experiment and ascertain if this waste can not be made a source of profit to the farmer.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objec-

There was no objection.

Mr. GRONNA. Unless the gentleman insists on the point of Mr. SCOTT. I insist on the point of order, but I thought the gentleman from Ohio had withdrawn the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be withdrawn.

There was no objection.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last I hoped that the gentleman from Ohio would not withdraw the amendment, and also I was in hopes that the gentleman from Kansas would not make an objection to an amendment of this kind. I am heartily in favor of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio, especially because he was willing to include flax straw. We raise in the western country, in our State alone, more than 3,000,000 tons of flax straw that is burned up every year. We burn up more flax straw than would be required for the manufacture of white paper to supply the United States. I believe now is the time to make a small appropriation for this purpose.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. GRONNA. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. Is the gentleman aware that flax straw is used for commercial manufactured paper now?

Mr. GRONNA. I am aware of that, but I am also aware that it is not used to any great extent. Mr. MANN. It is as far as it is profitable to use it. It does not require any experimentation.

Mr. GRONNA. It does require an experimentation. believe it is profitable as an article for the manufacture of paper. It requires two and a half tons of flax straw to make a ton of white paper.

Mr. MANN. It requires a great deal more than that.

Mr. GRONNA. You can pay $5 to $7 a ton for flax straw, and yet it would be cheaper than the price we are paying for wood. I am heartily in favor of such an amendment to this bill as is proposed by the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. DRISCOLL. I would like to ask the gentleman if the question of transportation would not be an important factor? You might have straw enough, but not be able to get it to the

Mr. GRONNA. I will say in reply to the gentleman from New York that it is possible to establish these factories right in the center of where the flax straw is grown. The gentleman from Ohio well says that this is the time when we want to conserve our forests, and this is an annual recurring crop. It takes from 80 to 120 years to grow a saw log, and it takes only a year to grow a crop of flax or cornstalks, and I hope the gentleman from Kansas will not make the point of order against the amendment.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, nobody on the floor of this House is more anxious to promote the manufacture of paper from cornstalks and flax and other by-products of the farm than am I. However, I shall feel obliged to make the point of order against this proposed amendment, for the reason that it is not necessary, in my judgment, at this time. This bill carries a paragraph "to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to test such plants as may require tests, to ascertain if they be suitable for making paper, $10,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary." Under that appropriation, which is carried in the current act, investigations have been made in which it has been fully demonstrated that paper can be made from cornstalks, and I have before me here a book of samples of paper ranging all the way from rough wrapping paper to a very high grade of writing paper manufactured from that material. The laboratory tests are complete, and it has been demonstrated beyond question that paper ranging all through the qualities I have named can be manufactured from cornstalks.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Where was that made? Mr. SCOTT. The samples were made, as I understand it, in the laboratories at Washington. The bureau having charge of this work has now arranged for a commercial test with one of the New England mills, and until that test has been made it seems to me unnecessary to carry an appropriation for any further investigation into the subject. It certainly is being looked after with all possible diligence, and I do not think any good would be gained by inserting the amendment proposed at this

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I will ask the gentleman if there is a patent on that?

Mr. SCOTT. There are no patents, I think. Perhaps there may be a patent on some of these processes, but things which are developed through the investigation of the Government, of course, are protected by the bureau making the discovery.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Is the gentleman certain about that?

Mr. SCOTT. I understand the practice of the Department of Agriculture to be, whenever it develops a machine, a device, or any sort of a method of any kind which is patentable, to patent it for the benefit of the people, and thus protect it from private monopoly.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that the amendment having been withdrawn, we are proceeding by unanimous con-

int. There is nothing pending.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I move to strike out the last word, and I may want to move to strike out the word "two" and insert the word "one," making it $10,000 instead of $20,000, and I offer that amendment now.

Mr. SCOTT. May I suggest to the gentleman from Tennessee that a discussion of the question of manufacturing paper might more properly come when we reach the paragraph especially providing for that investigation?

Mr. MANN. I may say to the gentleman also that I propose to offer an amendment on this subject, following line 3, page 17, where a discussion will be appropriate.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. At that time I want to discuss this patent matter also.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For general plant breeding and cooperative plant-breeding demonstrations, $14,840.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 17, after line 3, insert: "For the testing of such plants as may require tests to ascertain if they be suitable for making paper, $10,000."

Mr. SCOTT. I reserve the point of order as against that.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I think it is not subject to a point of order. It is in the language of the item in the bill, which item I offered last year in Committee of the Whole and which ran the gantlet of the point of order, and the point of order was overruled.

Mr. SCOTT. My point of order would be that it would be a duplication of language that may be in the bill.

Mr. MANN. If the point of order be that it is duplication of language in the bill, then it is for the committee to determine where in the bill the language shall occur and under what

Mr. COLE. Wherein does that amendment differ from the amendment which I offered?

Mr. MANN. If I get a chance to, I will explain it. It is the point of order now that I would like to have disposed of.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands the point of order to be that the language of the amendment duplicates something already in the bill. The Chair thinks it is entirely proper for the Committee to duplicate language if it desires to do so. The point of order is therefore overruled.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment at this place so that it may be under the Bureau of Plant Industry. The item in the bill is now under the head of "Miscellaneous," simply authorizing the Secretary of Agriculture to make these experiments. My object in offering the amendment is to have the investigation carried on by the Bureau of Plant Industry, for the purpose of testing, as far as may be tested, annual plants or other plants, annual or perennial, herbaceous or otherwise, which may be used in the manufacture of paper. In this connection I want to say just a word or two in regard to the cornstalk experiment. The experiment so far carried on in reference to the manufacture of paper from cornstalks would indicate that the idea is purely chimerical. While paper can be manufactured from cornstalks, it is also true that paper can be manufactured from expensive orchids, but it is not a commercial probability that it ever will be done. I do not intend to detain the committee this morning, because I hope in a few days to have time in general debate to give some time to this subject of the methods of manufacturing paper. It takes one cord of spruce wood to make a ton of ground wood, all of which is used in the production of paper. It takes about nine cords of cornstalks to produce one ton of fiber, and most of this fiber is not fit for paper making, so far as has yet been demonstrated. A ton of cornstalks will produce about 250 pounds of good fiber, which can be used in the manufacture of paper. It will produce in addition about 550 pounds of pith pulp, the pulp that comes from the pith in the cornstalks, which it may be possible to utilize in the future, but for the use of which no one yet has discovered any purpose. From this ton of cornstalks you produce in addition about 300 pounds of what is called "stock food," and the chemist

Mr. DRISCOLL. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. MANN. In just a moment—and the gentleman who made the experiment informed our committee that out of this 300 pounds of so-called "stock food" there would be chemically contained from 40 to 44 per cent of saccharine matter, but when it was analyzed by the Bureau of Chemistry instead of being 40 to 44 per cent it was less than 4 per cent, and some of it less than 2 per cent of saccharine matter, making a very great difference in the value of it as a by-product. I yield now to the gentleman from New York for a relevant question. [Laughter.]

Mr. DRISCOLL. Just a question. The gentleman said it would take 9 tons of cornstalks to make 1 ton of fiber. Were these stalks dry or green when weighed?

Mr. MANN. Did I say 9 tons? I said 9 cords.

Mr. DRISCOLL. What is a cord of cornstalks?

Mr. MANN. I knew the gentleman would not ask a relevant

Mr. DRISCOLL. It strikes me that is a relevant question; what is a cord of cornstalks? When you transport any article by freight the space it occupies is a very important question. You can transport a cord of spruce wood to the mill and it will make a ton of paper. It will take 9 cords, 9 times the space in a freight car, to transport the same amount of cornstalks to produce the paper. Now, if it were practical to grind up cornstalks and bale them, that could be done, but the moment cornstalks are ground up they commence to heat and the moment you commence to bale them they commence to heat and they are of no value at all. The great difficulty with farmers in the country when they make corn stover is to keep it from spoiling by heating and molding.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time may be extended five minutes for the purpose of addressing himself, if he will, to the question of why that amendment should be carried under this item in the bill rather than under the general miscellaneous item.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Illinois shall proceed for five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] hears none.

Mr. MANN. Now, Mr. Chairman, I hope no gentleman will divert me from the course of my remarks by another irrelevant question, although it may be a very pertinent question. not criticise the gentleman for asking the question. It is highly desirable that the department should make investigations of these annual plants for possibilities of paper making in the future. Reference has been made here, for instance, to the fact that paper has been made from cornstalks. I have in my possession a statement from the company which has done all of this work, so far as the paper making is concerned, and who have been carrying on these experiments for years, and they say frankly that they do not consider that the manufacture of paper from annual plants is to-day a commercial possibility, but that as the price of pulp material increases in the future it will become desirable to be able to obtain something besides wood to make this cheaper paper, and that they hope to be able through experiments to develop something which in the future may be of service. Take cornstalks, for instance. The manufacture of paper from cornstalks as a by-product of the farm is, in my opinion, out of the question, but by proper plant breeding it may be possible and practicable to produce a cornstalk rich in fiber, cultivated not for the purpose of producing the corn itself, but for the purpose of producing the fiber, which can be raised for the purpose of making paper, not merely as a by-product, but as the very object of the raising.

The same is true of various other annual plants. The Bureau of Plant Industry has connections throughout the world with large numbers of plants. It has been proposed for us to experiment with bamboo, as Japan is now experimenting, and for us to experiment with other annual or perennial plants which we may obtain; and for that reason this money ought to be under the control of the Bureau of Plant Industry. $10,000 which was appropriated last year has been practically wasted, not but that they may have learned something through the testing plant put up here, but all the information which has been learned so far was already known in the paper world.

I do not wish to be understood as criticising the department.

They had to learn the subject themselves, as they knew very little about it; but there is now in the department Doctor Cobb, connected with the Bureau of Plant Industry, and probably the best-informed man in the world on the subject of the fiber in plants, and I believe that if under that bureau they were given the appropriation and permitted to experiment, not with paper making, but with the testing of plants and the fiber in plants, and producing plants full of fiber which may be used, they would be able to be of great service to the country. The testing as to paper making will be readily done by many of the paper manufacturers in their laboratories and in their plants, where it is impossible for them now to obtain plants themselves with which to make the tests, both for lack of opportunity to obtain the plants and lack of knowledge in regard to the fiber in plants.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentleman yield to a question? I wish to ask in reference to cotton fiber. gentleman know whether or not that has been sufficiently tested for paper? I have seen a statement to the effect that they have been successful.

Mr. MANN. A test of the cotton fiber is now being carried on. So far as it has been used it has not been a success, although you will find highly colored descriptions of stock for sale in companies who would lead you to believe it was a great The test of okra has not been fairly made, and I do not say that the test of cotton stalk has not been fairly made, but I am satisfied that the people who have made the tests have absolutely no confidence in the future use of cotton fiber or cornstalks to any extent for paper making unless by breeding you produce a different plant.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, Doctor Galloway, Chief of the Bureau of Plant Industry, when before the committee, was questioned on this subject and said:

The paper work has been carried on in cooperation with the Forest Service. The Forest Service has a laboratory in Washington that is available for certain phases of the work, and by an arrangement with the experts in that service they have carried on the tests with plants that have been brought here for the purpose.

Mr. Pinchot, the Chief of the Forest Service, when before the committee, was asked whether he had anything to report as to the paper investigation. He said:

Yes; we have quite a good deal. We have established the practicability of making merchantable pulp from a considerable number of woods, about a dozen, other than the ones that have been used hitherto. We have a laboratory here in Washington in which we try various species from all over the country, and we find that good wood pulp can be made from a large number of trees that have never been used for that numbers.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman will permit, I may say that those experiments have not been made under this appropriation at all—that is, those experiments as to woods.

Mr. SCOTT. Whether they are made under this appropriation or not, the extracts from the hearings which I have read make it clear that there is a perfectly harmonious cooperation between the Bureau of Plant Industry and the Forest Service in this investigation. And that being true, I confess I can not see any point to be gained by transferring the investigation so that it will be exclusively under the jurisdiction of the Plant Industry Bureau. As the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] has said, the work is now in charge of Doctor Cobb, to whom he pays a deserved tribute, and all of the operations are being carried on under his direction, subject, of course, to the general oversight of the chief of the bureau and of the Secretary of Agriculture. As the language reads in the current law and in the pending bill, the whole matter rests with the Secretary of Agriculture, and if he believes that better results can be obtained by having the investigations conducted exclusively by the Bureau of Plant Industry, he is not prohibited from making such direction.

It certainly seems to me that we ought not to put anything in this bill which possibly might be construed as taking away from the Forest Service a continuation of any investigation which it has made. It must be of great utility to discover that wood pulp can be made from varieties of timber which up to this time have not been available. Undoubtedly such discoveries have been made as the result of the investigations already concluded, and I can see no object to be attained in the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois. I trust therefore it will be voted down, so that the bill may remain as it is now.

Mr. GRONNA. I move to strike out the last word. Chairman, I want to ask the gentleman from Illinois a question. I know he is very well posted on this particular question, the same as he is on all others on which he has made a study. I want to find out if the committee of which the gentleman is a member has made an investigation as to whether any tests have been made as to the manufacture of paper from flax straw.

Mr. MANN. There have been no tests made by the Govern-

Mr. GRONNA. I want to state that I understand that there has been some paper made from flax straw, but there is a patent on the process of bleaching.

Mr. MANN. I think the gentleman is mistaken about there being a patent on the process of bleaching.

Mr. GRONNA. I so understood. Mr. MANN. The retting of flax straw for linen is one thing that would not be required in making it ready for use in making paper. They are using a flax straw in Minneapolis and up in that country for a character of paper.

Mr. GRONNA. I want to say to the gentleman that in a letter from Doctor Drewson, of New York, a noted chemist, he states that it takes just 2½ tons of flax straw to make a ton of paper, or 40 per cent of paper can be made from flax straw; and I understand there is a patent, or at least a patent pending, on the bleaching process of this particular paper.

Mr. MANN. Well, the bleaching process is a simple thing.

You can bleach anything in the way of a fiber to-day by putting a little chlorine in it. Flax straw is no different from other things. All really white paper is bleached, taking the same process practically for one as for the other. The patented process which has been experimented with by the Agricultural Department is probably the one to which the gentleman from Tennessee refers as the process by which the fiber is separated from the pith. All annual plants contain a considerable amount of pith; cornstalks contain notably a large amount of pith. You can not manufacture paper to advantage without separating the fiber from the pith, and there is a patented process which has been used by the department here, and they are the ones largely interested in pushing the cornstalk proposition, by which they successfully separate the pith from the real cellulose fiber.

Mr. GRONNA. I thank the gentleman for the information. Mr. COOPER of Pennsylvania. I would like to ask the gentleman from Illinois, In what branch of the Agricultural Department is being conducted the experiment of making paper?

Mr. MANN. In the Bureau of Plant Industry and Bureau of

Mr. POLLARD. Mr. Chairman, I want to read from the present bill, on page 46, beginning with line 16, where I think this same matter is incorporated in the bill, for it reads as

To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to test such plants as may require tests to ascertain if they be suitable for making paper.

Now, the only difference between this provision that is now in the bill and the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois is, that he desires to limit the work and desires to take it out of the hands of the Secretary of Agriculture, the head of that great department, and place it under the direction of the Chief of the Bureau of Plant Industry. That, it seems to me, ought not to be done. It seems to me this matter, as well as all other matters relating to investigations in that department, ought to be left under the direction of the head of the whole department. As he has the general supervision over all the work, if he desires to have that work done, and if in his judgment it can be done better by the Bureau of Plant Industry, he can have it done there. On the other hand, if he thinks it can be best accomplished by a system of cooperation between the Bureau of Plant Industry and the Bureau of Forestry, he can direct to have it done in that way. It seems to me it ought to be left in his hands.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is a member of the committee reporting the bill. Can he find any other item in the bill which is not put under the head of one of the particular bureaus? He thinks they ought all to be under the Secretary; can he find another item in the bill that is not under one of the bureaus?

Mr. POLLARD. As a matter of fact, as the gentleman's provision now is, it only makes a limitation and puts it into the hands of the Chief of the Bureau of Plant Industry.

Mr. MANN. I offer this amendment, which will put it in the same class, the same as any other item. The same relating to paper. If the gentleman thinks this amendment is unreasonable, he thereby condemns every other item in the bill.

Mr. POLLARD. Mr. Chairman, I do not agree with the gentleman.

Mr. MANN. Of course the gentleman does not.

Mr. POLLARD. Every appropriation in this bill, from one end of it to the other, is under the direction of the Secretary of Agriculture. The provision in the bill as it now stands authorizes the Secretary, as I have said, to carry on this investigation, and I see no object to be gained in taking it out of his hands.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I should like to have the attention of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann]. I should like to know where his amendment comes in; the page and line?

Mr. MANN. I offered the amendment to follow the paragraph concerning plant breeding, after line 3, on page 17.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I should like to have the amendment reported again.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the Clerk will again report the amendment.

The amendment was again read. Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I should like to ask the chairman of the committee reporting the bill what is his exact objection to this? Does he object to the proposition entirely, or does he object to the place at which it is offered in the bill?

Mr. SCOTT. My objection to the amendment is that it seems to restrict the investigations wholly to the Bureau of Plant Industry; whereas I believe that to a considerable extent they may be carried on under the Bureau of Forestry. I think, in other words, that the language of the present bill, which authorizes free cooperation, may well be allowed to remain.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Are not all the departments of the forestry and plant departments under the Secretary of Agri-

Mr. SCOTT. Undoubtedly.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Then that is rather a technical objection, is it not?

Mr. SCOTT. It is rather technical, and yet after the provision has been carried apart from any bureau, as a paragraph by itself, and Congress then particularly and specifically picks it out and puts it under a given bureau, it seems to me that the Secretary might well construe it as being the intent of Congress to limit the investigations to that bureau.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I understand the gentleman from Illinois disclaims that intention. Mr. Chairman, whether the amendment comes in here or not, I do hope some such amendment as this will be made to the bill somewhere. Exactly where it ought to be, I am not familiar enough with the bill to say.

Mr. POLLARD. The gentleman says he hopes the item will be inserted in the bill. If he will turn to page 46, beginning with line 16, he will find the identical amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois, except that it is not limited.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I have that before me. Now, I want to ask the gentleman from Illinois why he puts this amendment in here?

Mr. MANN. This is where it belongs, under the Bureau of Plant Industry. Like all the other items that relate to the handling of annual plants, this item ought to be under the Bureau of Plant Industry, where the money will be profitably expended. We have examined before the special Pulp and Paper Committee all of the people who have had to do with the experiments of the last year, and I want to say that, in my judgment, so far as value to the country is concerned, they have wasted the money undoubtedly. They have helped to give themselves necessary education. They were like the rest of us; they did not know very much about it.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. If the amendment is adopted where you propose it, it will still be in the Agricultural Department and under the direction of the Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. MANN. Oh, certainly.
Mr. DOUGLAS. The gentleman of course contemplates striking out the provision on page 46?

Mr. MARTIN. I should like to inquire of the gentleman from Illinois, in case this amendment carries, whether experimenta-tion could be made in this Bureau of Plant Industry on any plants except annual plants? Could they be made upon wood generally?

Mr. MANN. They could be made, of course, upon anything; but I may say to the gentleman, so far as the question of wood is concerned, they have learned nothing new, either in the Bureau of Forestry or anywhere else, in regard to the use of wood. Practically all kinds of wood are now used for paper making, so far as they are commercially profitable.

Mr. MARTIN. Is it the gentleman's judgment that the effect of the transfer of this item would be to limit the experiments to annual plants only?

Mr. MANN. My own judgment is that if they use the money profitably they will use it in connection with the development of annual and perennial plants-probably largely in perennial plants, which grow from the roots and are cut down each year.

Mr. MARTIN. Would it not have the effect to abandon the experiment in miscellaneous wood fiber?

Mr. MANN. Not at all. The Forestry Service is conducting experiments in regard to the use of wood, but not a single one has been made out of this fund, and not one of them has been made since this money was appropriated. We had the Bureau of Forestry before us, and they testified as to their experiments. We had this testimony before this was law at all.

Mr. MARTIN. What experiments have been carried on under

Mr. MANN. They have experimented in Washington on cornstalks, with a grass that grows in California, with rice straw, and have collected together some cotton stalks. They have experimented mainly for the purpose of showing whether a certain patented process could be profitably used by the Government. That is what the main experiment has been for. I do not like to say that, but that is the fact, and I do not think it is a proper expenditure of money.

Mr. MARTIN. Under what burea

Under what bureau has the experimentation been carried on?

Mr. MANN. Under the direction of the Forestry Service, which I do not wish to criticise in this direction. They did not know anything about the making of paper, or paper material, contemplated by the bill. They had to learn. I have been on the Paper and Pulp Committee for a year, and we have learned a good deal and do not know much now. But in every step we have taken if we had known then what we know now, before we took a step, we might have taken a better step or not taken it at all.

Mr. MARTIN. Does not the gentleman think it likely that if we take advantage of what little has been learned and keep on in that direction we might make some progress?

Mr. MANN. We have not learned anything except as to whether a certain patented process could be profitably used to separate fiber from the pith. The Warren mills made paper out of cornstalks years and years and years ago. That is where this paper that we have here is made, not by the Government, but in the Warren mills. I have a letter from Mr. Warren, in which he says that they have been experimenting on this subject for years, but never yet have they reached the point where it was commercially profitable, or where it looked as though it would be in the near future.

Mr. MARTIN. Under the terms of the bill, the Secretary could direct the experiments to be had in the Bureau of Plant

Industry

Mr. MANN. The Secretary of Agriculture is not posted on this subject. I make no reflection upon him when I say that he does not know anything about paper making, and that what he does not know would fill quite a volume.

Mr. EDWARDS of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. MANN. I have not the floor; but I will answer the gentleman.

Mr. EDWARDS of Georgia. What experiments have been made with cotton stalks and marsh grasses, if the gentleman knows?

Mr. MANN. There has been considerable experimentation made with cotton stalks, but cotton stalks are very bulky when you come to gather them, more so than cornstalks; and while you can make good paper or good fiber, it is not the opinion of those who have investigated the subject that it will ever be profitable to make paper out of cotton stalks as cotton stalks are now raised.

Mr. EDWARDS of Georgia. How about the marsh grass?

Mr. MANN. There have been experiments made on various marsh grasses. If the gentleman will read the bulletin issued by the Pulp and Paper Committee, he will find a letter from abroad on that subject which is very interesting. When they undertake to collect the grass which grows in the marshes of the South for paper making, the cost of collection up to the present time has been prohibitive as to cheap paper, and as to the more expensive paper, it does not compete with rag paper.

Mr. EDWARDS of Georgia. It fails in quality. Now, does not the gentleman think that this amount ought to be increased to $20,000 instead of $10,000?

Mr. MANN. I think $10,000 is all they want. I have discussed this matter with Doctor Galloway, Chief of the Bureau of Plant Industry, along the line of making an investigation of these plants. While I do not undertake to quote him at all, or express his opinion, still I think I know what he wants.

Mr. EDWARDS of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I am in accord with the gentleman's amendment.

Mr. SCOTT. I move that all debate on this paragraph and amendments thereto close in five minutes.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to. Mr. DAVIS. Mr. Chairman, I am heartily in accord with what the gentleman from Illinois has said and with the particular object and purpose of his amendment, but I am inclined to believe that there is a mistaken idea among some of the members of the committee. I understood that the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois was directed chiefly to the breeding of fibrous plants that might be tested and successfully used in the manufacture of paper. I ascertained more recently, however, that there was a dispute, if I may use that word, as to which bureau or department of the Government should particularly have charge of testing material for the making of Mr. MANN. I hope the gentleman from Minnesota will not use that word; I never have heard the term used, or any question of dispute, and I do not think there is anything in it.

Mr. DAVIS. Then I withdraw the word "dispute."

it gingerly to ascertain the nature-

Mr. MANN. I do not think there is any dispute between the departments about it at all.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. Chairman, I would suggest the following amendment as a substitute for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. DAVIS. It may not be in proper language, and I would like to read it from my place on the floor. After the word "dollars," in line 3, on page 17, insert the following:

For breeding of fibrous plants which may be used for paper making, $10,000.

The paragraph under discussion is for general plant breeding and cooperative plant breeding demonstrations, $14,840. That is not directed at any specific proposition, and the object of the substitute amendment which I propose is particularly to call the attention of the Bureau of Plant Industry to this proposition, that $10,000 shall be used for the purpose of demonstration. strating by plant breeding any fibrous plants that in their judgment might be used for paper making.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DAVIS. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. I would have no objection to the amendment of the gentleman, which would be subject to the point of order if the point of order were made. I think myself that the gentleman's amendment is better than mine, although I offered one not subject to the point of order.

Mr. DAVIS. Well, will the gentleman accept this as a substitute providing the Chairman does not rule it is subject to the point of order?

Mr. MANN. It would be perfectly agreeable if no point of order is made.

Mr. DAVIS. I think, Mr. Chairman, this would solve the problem, and it would fit in very admirably with the provisions of the bill on page 46, under the item of "Miscellaneous," which reads as follows:

Paper tests: To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to test such plants as may require tests to ascertain if they be suitable for making

Now, that would be all right. The $10,000 there could be properly used for the purpose for which it is specified by the Secretary of Agriculture; but if the Bureau of Plant Industry could breed a plant or plants and thus improve the fibrous quality thereof for paper making that this amendment of mine seeks to have them do, it certainly would not conflict in any way with the appropriation of $10,000 on page 46.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minne-

Mr. MANN. The amendment has not been reported yet, Mr.

Mr. DAVIS. I have offered this amendment verbally from my place.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Substitute for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois the following:
"For breeding hibrous plants which may be used for paper making, $10,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amend-

The question was taken, and the Chair announced the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I believe I will ask for a division on that question.

The committee divided; and there were-ayes 41, noes 23. So the amendment was agreed to.
The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois, as amended by the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I understood the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota is in the nature of a substitute to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair stated the question correctly, that the amendment was offered in the nature of a substitute.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, may we have the amendment and substitute reported?

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will again report the amendment and substitute amendment.

The amendment and the substitute amendment were again reported.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, as I understood that amendment, it was not for the purpose of making paper, but for growing plants out of which we are to make paper. Mr. DAVIS.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. If it is in order, I would like to offer an amendment on that patent question to this effect:

Provided, That all discoveries in making paper by the Department of Agriculture shall be patented in the name of the Secretary of Agriculture for the use and benefit of the United States and the people thereof.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk reported the amendment.

Mr. SCOTT. I will reserve the point of order on that, Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw that amendment for the present, and I will offer it later.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment may be withdrawn.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the study and demonstration of the best methods of meeting the ravages of the cotton boll wevil, $146,470.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. This is a matter of very great, in fact of vital, importance to a number of us here. ask the chairman of the committee something about it. recommendation of the official under whom this appropriation will be administered was for an increase of $150,000. The increase carried in this bill is a little less than $50,000. ask the chairman of the committee if he does not believe it would be the part of wisdom for the House to grant a larger appropriation than that carried in this bill?

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, the committee considered this matter very carefully, having the advantage of the advice of the gentleman from Mississippi and others on this floor, who appeared before the committee to represent the interests in their localities, and the committee, as a result of its deliberations, has recommended the amount that appears in the bill.

I should like to call the attention of the gentleman from Mississippi to the fact that while only $146,470 is carried in this particular paragraph for this work, there is carried under the Bureau of Entomology $42,000; so that the total amount available for work in combating the boll weevil is about $190,000. In addition to this amount, as the gentleman well knows, there is a considerable sum available through the National Educational Board, which is used in cooperation with the officials of the Bureau of Plant Industry in carrying on the work which they are doing for the purpose of combating the boll weevil; and, still further, considerable sums are contributed by the localities, not as great as ought to be, in my judgment, yet enough to very largely increase the total amount. It is the opinion of your committee that we ought to give for this purpose a little less than is actually needed, rather than quite as much or a little more, because if we give not quite so much it certainly has a tendency to stimulate local contributions; and in work of this character, which is not investigational so much as it is demonstrational, it is the judgment of the committee that localities immediately benefited ought to contribute at least a reasonable portion of the expense.

Mr. DOUGLAS. If the gentleman from Mississippi will yield for a moment while I ask a question I desire to ask of the gentleman in charge of the bill, I will be much obliged.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. I yield. Mr. DOUGLAS. I have a memorandum here to ask the wellinformed chairman of the committee why it is that an appropriation of $150,000 is carried in one bureau and $42,000 in another bureau for identically the same purpose?

Mr. SCOTT. Because the work is carried forward along two entirely separate lines. The work of the Bureau of Plant Industry is to demonstrate by cultural methods, the selection of seed, and in other similar ways how cotton may be grown in spite of the boll weevil. The work of the Bureau of Entomology is to follow the life history of the weevil and attempt to get at the problem from that point of view, to ascertain what method may be best used to assist in its extermination. And they are having very gratifying success along that line, I may say, particularly in the direction of the introduction of parasites from other countries.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the chairman of the committee about that appropriation for the Bureau of Entomology. We have not yet reached it, but he has suggested it. The conditions of life, it is thought by the Chief of the Bureau of Entomology, in the delta sections of Mississippi and Louisiana are very different from the conditions of life under which the boll weevil has heretofore existed, and in the opinion of that bureau it is worth while to make a particular study of the weevil in those localities, and he is anxious to have a sufficient fund to establish an entomological laboratory there. I will ask the chairman now if the increase carried in the paragraph appropriating $42,000 for the Bureau of Entomology, to which he has referred, is intended by the committee to be applied by the chief of that bureau for that purpose?

Mr. SCOTT. I would prefer to discuss the Bureau of Entomology when we get to it, but since the gentleman has asked the question I will answer it by saying that it is the expectation that with the increased appropriation it will be possible to establish the laboratory to which he refers.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. And that is the intention?

The increase was made with that expectation. Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I have a good many figures and statements from those who are in position to understand this question of the boll weevil thoroughly, the extent of its ravages, and so forth, that are very interest-ing to those parts of the country that are now affected, and I will ask, for that reason, permission to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The gentleman from Kansas is mistaken, I think, when he says that the general education board is contributing to this fund. Their allotments go exclusively to States unaffected by the weevil, the effort being to notify the farmers of the approaching danger, and by introducing these new processes to prepare them for the wrath to come. I am not complaining, however, about the appropriation which is carried in this bill. It is an increase of some $50,000 over the amount provided in the last bill, and I suppose I can say without violating any confidences that it is not only the expectation but the inten-tion that an equal additional increase will be put on in the Senate. In the light of our past experiences, I believe I can say that this will be seed sown upon fertile soil and will return to us an hundredfold.

In discussing the question of cotton production in the Southern States, it is difficult for anyone not conversant with conditions there to understand its vital relation to our people and that in most of the South it is the principal cash crop, and in a large portion of the South the sole cash crop; and, consequently, financial conditions are very sensitive to the question of cotton-crop production.

I believe that it is of the highest importance to maintain this crop and that we can not readily change to a diversified agriculture that shall omit cotton; and, in my opinion, it would not be wise to do so, because cotton is one of the great staples of the world. The boll weevil from Mexico has invaded the cotton territory and proven an enemy of no insignificant force in this question of production; but the damage due to actual destruction of cotton in sections where the boll weevil has first appeared has been grossly exaggerated, and it is evident from investigations that I have made that a successful crop of cotton can be grown in spite of the boll weevil if the right methods are followed. There may be some years when it will be less and some years when it will be more, but a good average can be produced even with the boll weevil at its worst. Study of the effect of the weevil on the Texas crop before and since it has covered the entire cotton-producing portions of that State has given me greater confidence in the future of the cotton industry than I had before.

There is always a class of people who take the pessimistic side of every question and seem to glory in alarming somebody, or, if there be any alarm, in intensifying its effect. There are or, if there be any alarm, in intensifying its effect. There are two elements of disaster which attend the invasion of the boll weevil, one results from the actual destruction of cotton and the other from the condition of panic which takes possession of every community upon the arrival of the pest, and I am not sure which is the greater. Sane men, cool men, men who are conservative in all the affairs of life are startled to such alarm as has not been witnessed since General Grant landed his army Bankers decline to extend further credit to at Bruinsburg. merchants upon whom the farmer must rely for the assistance necessary to make a crop, and the tennant thus deserted must seek other fields of endeavor. Plantations are either deserted or sowed to some other crop, and when as a necessary result of such conditions the cotton yield of that particular section falls off materially from the average yield, that fact is heralded on the wings of the morning to strike further terror to the territory yet to be invaded. The alarm caused by the approach of no invading army in the history of the world ever bore such abnormal relation to actual devastation in its rear as the terror which the threatened attack of the boll weevil bears to the actual work which he does. In front of him men are fleeing the cotton field and in some instances sacrificing their property, while behind him the fields are still white in waving beauty and real estate higher than ever before.

I would not be understood as minimizing the seriousness of the situation which confronts us, nor of underestimating the damage which we are sure to suffer; but I do believe that the disaster which must befall every community, if all credit is withheld by the banks, can be largely averted if we can get not only the truth, but the whole truth, before those whose judgment must direct the conduct of the banks.

The problem which confronts the planter in the Mississippi Delta is twofold. He must allay the panic which is liable to take possession of his tenant and his banker, not one or the other, but both, and to do this he must answer the question, Can cotton be profitably grown in spite of the boll weevil? In order to answer this let us inquire, Has it been done elsewhere? Can it be done in this delta? and first, Has it been done elsewhere?

The Department of Agriculture has answered this question most emphatically. The Bureau of Entomology, under the efficient direction of its chief, Doctor Howard, and the division of farm demonstration work, under Doctor Knapp, have rendered invaluable service to the cotton planters and to the country by their ceaseless labors, and I wish now to make my bow to them both. I shall have more to say about the work of the Bureau of Entomology when we reach that paragraph in the bill; but as we are now considering the item which carries the appropriation for the farm demonstration work, I will refer more particularly to it. As the weevil has been in Texas for a number of years and we are able to study the statistics for this longer period, it will be interesting to know just what the facts there are.

The figures for a single plantation or a single county can not always be relied upon as furnishing an accurate index for general conclusions, but where the same cultural methods are introduced in a great number of different localities with practically unvarying results, we may safely base conclusions on these results. I shall print in the Record, as an appendix to my remarks (Appendix A), a list of farmers who have made experiments under the supervision of this division, planting 1 or 2 acres in their fields for that purpose, using the seed furnished and observing faithfully the cultural methods prescribed. There are 112 in all, taken from widely different communities, but all telling the same story of success. Nothing unreasonable is required of these farmers. There is not a more practical man in the United States than Doctor Knapp. He has simply adopted a system of cultivation that any farmer can readily follow with the implements he now uses on his farm. These farmers pro-duced—in the very worst of the boll-weevil territory, mind you—from three-fourths to a bale and a half per acre. His agents visit the farmers and agree with them to furnish the seed for the experiment and to supervise the working of the crop, in this way carrying the practical lesson to the very men who need it most. In order to carry this work on successfully. it is necessary to have an agent for each county.

I agree with the chairman of the committee that it is not desirable that we pay all the expense of maintaining these experts. I believe a part of that burden should be borne by the counties or States, and in the district which I have the honor to represent we are doing our part. Some of the counties in Mississippi are paying half the expense of the expert and some even more than that. I have a most interesting and instructive statement, prepared by a number of prominent cotton growers in Harrison County, Tex., which I shall print as an appendix to my remarks (Appendix B), and which will be all the more interesting when we recall that Harrison County was one of the worst infested counties in the State; that the ribbell there is about 50 inches per annum; and that, according to a statement from the department, "nearly every farm is surrounded by

Here is the statement at length: timber."

Harrison County, Tex., bordering on Louisiana, has a rainfall of about 50 inches per annum. Nearly every farm is surrounded by timber. During the general alarm caused by the advent of the weevil, many farms were abandoned in 1907, and others diversified so that there was an enormous reduction in the crop, due in part to the weevil, but, as many believe, to a great extent to the reduction in acreage caused by the spring of 1907 the formers' constitution.

In the spring of 1907 the farmers' cooperative demonstration work was introduced, but so late as not to have its full effect. Several hundred sample plats were distributed through the county. The effect of the work has been to restore confidence and, in a large measure, cotton production. The following letters from prominent citizens of that county will explain the situation.

The letters referred to are the ones I will append to my remarks when this speech appears in the RECORD. This letter is so pertinent that I will insert it right here in the body of my speech. Mr. Twyman is a merchant of Marshall, Tex., and knows whereof he speaks: MARSHALL, TEX., January 26, 1909.

Dr. S. A. KNAPP, Washington, D. C.

Washington, D. C.

Dear Sie: The people of Harrison County are very grateful for the work done by you during the last two years, for they feel it was indeed timely and saved many from bankruptcy. Many deserted their crops during 1907, but the presence of yourself, Mr. Proctor, and Mr. Plunkett kept up the courage of many, who, by their devotion to their crops during the boll-weevil scare, demonstrated to the rest of their countrymen that a crop could be made, even with the weevil present.

We believe that your work here prevented the depreciation of our lands in value and also kept our farmers from scattering over the world.

Yours, respectfully,

I have a very interesting statement compiled from the figures of the Census Office showing the yield per annum from 1903 to 1908 of the entire State of Texas, from which it appears that the total crop has not been seriously diminished. Various reasons have been assigned for this which I will discuss briefly, but one fact does unquestionably stand out quite prominently and that is that cotton can be produced and produced at a profit even with the boll weevil present and at work. Just how much cotton Texas would be producing if the weevil were not there is another question. I have heard the statement that you can prove anything by the census figures. Be that as it may, I have a table here showing the production in Louisiana and Texas for some years past, and I shall print that, too, as a part of my speech (Appendix C). The point I wish to emphasize is simply this, not that the boll weevil is not a most destructive pest, because it would be very stupid to say any such thing, but that it is not an accurate treatment of the figures to charge every slump in the yearly crop—as, for instance, in the crops of 1905 and 1907—to the ravages of the boll weevil. These same slumps came before the weevil invaded the United States. For in-

This table was prepared for me by the Department of Agriculture, with this explanatory note:

The foregoing table snows the great fluctuation in cotton production from one year to another, regardless of the presence of the boll weevil. Taking the years 1904 and 1905, the first was a good crop year in the State of Texas, Louisiana, Arkansas, and Mississippi, and the second was a poor crop year. The weevil had but just entered the border of Louisiana, but owing to conditions in the fall of 1904 and the winter of 1904 the effect of the weevil was scarcely to be taken into account in Louisiana in the periods mentioned.

The above table shows that the percentage of loss from the first to the second period in Texas, with the boll weevil over considerable of the State, was 20 per cent. In Louisiana, with the boll weevil over only a few counties and in those not disastrous at all, the loss was 52 per cent. In Arkansas, with no boll weevil, the loss was 32 per cent; and in Mississippi, with no boll weevil, the loss was 33 per cent.

I have another table to the same effect, which was also pre-

All of these figures are intended to show and only to show that it is not an accurate, but, on the contrary, a very erroneous conclusion to draw that the weevil is responsible for all the short crops.

The statement is made by some that in the eastern and central portions of Texas the cotton production has greatly declined, and that the reason the State has maintained its general average is due to extension of the industry into the western or drier portions of the State and into portions where the boll weevil has not yet appeared. This will not bear investigation. This table will prove interesting in this connection:

^a Estimated at 10 per cent above the census ginners' report of December 13, 1908, and leaving out 30,397 bales reported as scattering.

The official who prepared this table for me said in explana-

I took a map of Texas and ran a line from north to south, covering the wooded portion and the portion of greatest rainfall in Texas, averaging from 40 to 50 inches per annum. I then drew a line west of the great central portion, or black prairie region, which has produced frequently more than one-half of the cotton crop of Texas. This also extends from north to south and has an average annual rainfall of from 30 to 40 inches. In the division west of this I included the counties that had produced no crop of any great extent, and this division covered such territory as has a range of about from 18 to 30 inches of rain per annum. All the territory west of this, with a rainfall of from 18 inches down to 10 inches, was included in the fourth section, which produced in 1903, 68,317 bales of cotton.

In general terms it may be stated that the wooded portions.

In general terms it may be stated that the wooded portions, nominally called "eastern Texas," generally produced about one-fourth of the cotton crop, the central portion about one-half, the semiwest, or sometimes called "semiarid," about one-fourth, and the western portion but a small per cent of the production. These figures show that in the last five years, during which period the weevil extended over the entire area, there has been an increase of actual production in the central and eastern divisions amounting to several hundred thousand bales.

They show, further, that the cotton crop of 1906 is over 900,000 bales more than the crop of 1904, though much greater territory was covered by the weevil in 1906. This great increase is due mainly to greater production in the central and eastern portions of the State; and in the great increase of cotton in 1908 over 1907, amounting to over a million and a half bales, over a million are to be credited to the central and eastern portions.

Another very interesting fact appears from the figures which the department has furnished, and that is that the yield per acre has been greater during the last five years—that is, 1903 to 1908—than in the preceding five-year period, 1898 to 1903, the exact increase being an average of 7.4 pounds. From this it seems clear that the new territory planted in cotton beyond the area of boll-weevil infection is not responsible for the fact that the total yield of the State is about normal. Another interesting fact which throws much light on this phase of the situation is that the center of production for the State has not moved 10 miles in the last four years.

To summarize, we have reports from 112 individual farmers in Kaufman County, Tex., Webster and De Soto counties, in Louisiana (Appendix A), showing that good crops have been made in spite of the weevil.

The report of the committee of farmers of Harrison County, Tex. (Appendix B), giving successful results from 300 demonstration crops, certified to and indorsed by the county judge.

Report of the special agent of the Department of Agriculture at Marshall, Tex. (Appendix C.) Census figures, which show the total crop in the boll-weevil sections of Texas to be as large as ever and the yield per acre to be equally as great.

In view of these facts, I feel warranted in giving an affirma-tive answer to the question, "Has cotton been successfully grown elsewhere under boll-weevil conditions?"

I will now direct my remarks to a discussion of the other inquiry, "Can this be done in the Yazoo Delta?"

We have all grown familiar with the prophecy that the weevil will find conditions just suited to his hand in the wet timbered delta, where all vegetation is so luxuriant in weed and foliage. The prophet of evil has pitched upon this much-favored section as the bright particular object of his maledictions. Not maliciously, of course, but none the less persistent, until even now, before the weevil has actually begun his work of destruction, panic stands upon the borders of the delta, threatening to invade us with results equally if not more calamitous than the ravages of the weevil have ever been.

If any prophecy can be indulged with assurance from the facts now known, it is quite certain that the weevil in a comparatively few years will have spread over the entire cotton producing area of the United States. How vain, then, and senseless any exodus from one section of the cotton belt to another in an effort to get away from the weevil. True, this has not hurt the delta so far, but if the planters there are to hold the labor, which they now have in some plenty, it will be necessary to convince the banker that these prophecies of evil are not well founded. If the planter can get no advances he can not supply his tenants, and if the tenant is thrown upon his own resources for the bread that is to keep body and soul together he must of necessity leave the farm and seek another field for his activities. All this can be prevented if we can reassure the timid, and the way to do that is to satisfy them that cotton can be grown in the delta at a profit after the weevil comes. To this end every county should at once join hands with Doctor Knapp and employ an expert to establish and superintend these demonstration farms just as has been done in Texas and Louisiana. His cultural methods are radically different from those now in vogue on most of the delta plantations, but they are simple, and experience has demonstrated their value. The sooner this is done the better, and I am glad to be able to say that a number of the counties are doing it now.

It would be money well spent if there was no such thing as the boll weevil. I shall print (Appendix D) a letter from a man who terms himself a "single-handed" farmer, which shows not only the character of the work that is being carried on by the department, but the good effect produced where it is most needed. This man will not be panic-stricken when the weevil reaches him.

Washington County has an expert who will give his entire time to that county, and now Coahoma has done likewise. Each county pays $1,200 toward the salary of its expert and the department here pays the balance. But to return to the question, Can cotton be successfully grown in the Yazoo Delta after the boll weevil comes? Until we have been through the fire we can not, of course, answer this question, as Texas has done, by pointing to the record of the thing actually done, but it is entirely competent to ask, If Texas has done it, why can not we? The first answer we always have to this inquiry is that, being a heavily timbered section, where the annual rainfall is very heavy, our situation discourages us to hope for success. That the delta is a heavily timbered section and that our rainfall is quite heavy can not be denied, but both of these untoward circumstances will bear investigation and analysis.

I have taken this excerpt from a statement furnished me in response to my request by the Department of Agriculture:

It is claimed by all experienced in handling the boil-weevil problems that an important factor is to have sunshine so as to destroy the larvæ in the squares. The question of the ultimate rainfall in the course of the year is not so much a problem in cotton production as when that rainfall comes. It might come in the winter and make no particular difference, or if it comes in the summer the number of clear or sunshine days has a most important bearing. A light rainfall accompanied by clouded weather would be practically as bad as a heavy rainfall followed by clear weather.

Accepting this statement as authoritative, and we must so accept it considering its source, it will be interesting to examine the reports of the Weather Bureau as shown in the following tables:

From this table it will be observed that while the annual rainfall in the delta towns (which the department says "is not so much a problem") is heavier than Shreveport or Dallas, the number of sunshine days during the growing season (which the department says "is an important factor") is much larger.

Taking Dallas, Sulphur Springs, Paris, Rockland, Waco, and

Taking Dallas, Sulphur Springs, Paris, Rockland, Waco, and Wills Point as representing fairly the cotton area of Texas; Shreveport, Monroe, Simmsport, Alexandria, and Baton Rouge as representing fairly the cotton area of Louisiana; and taking Yazoo City, Greenville, and Greenwood for the Yazoo Delta, we find that the number of sunshine days during the crop-growing months of the past four years averages, for Texas 58.67, for Louisiana 76, and for the Yazoo Delta 80.08.

The rainfall is heavier to be sure, but the department says in the extract just referred to, "The question of the ultimate rainfall in the course of the year is not so much a problem in cotton production as when that rainfall comes." The number of sunshine days in the delta during the crop-growing months, as seen, is larger in the delta than in Texas or in Louisiana, and in the light of this fact it is pertinent to read again the statement of the department:

It is claimed by all experienced in handling the boll-weevil problems that an important factor is to have sunshine so as to destroy the larvæ in the squares.

And now as to the other element of disadvantage which handicaps the delta planter—the fact that the delta is a heavily timbered section. By referring again to the table showing the crop of Texas by subdivisions for the past six years, we may be able to get some further light on this phase of the question. Bear in mind that the eastern division is the timbered section, where the rainfall is heaviest, averaging from 40 to 50 inches per annum. The central division is the black prairie region, with a yearly rainfall of from 30 to 40 inches. The semiwest (sometimes called the "semiarid") embraces those counties west of the great central belt, where the rainfall is from 18 to 30 inches; and the fourth division comprises all the State still farther west, the rainfall there being from 10 to 18 inches.

^a Estimated at 10 per cent above the census ginners' report of December 13, 1908, and leaving out 30,397 bales reported as scattering.

A careful reading of these figures discloses the fact that, while there has been a very great fluctuation in the total crop from year to year, the variation in the timber section is no greater than in the prairie section. For instance, the decline in cotton production from 1906 to 1907 in the several sections enumerated was 47 per cent in the eastern division, 44 per cent in the central, 55 per cent in the semiwest, and there was a small increase in the west or arid, so that the entire decline was in the older portions of the cotton-producing counties, and the largest per cent decline was in the drier portion of the State. If the year 1907, which was a year of poor production and poor climatic conditions, be compared with 1905, another year of poor production, it will be noted that, while the total crop of 1907 was about 230,000 bales less than that of 1905, the eastern or timber division, the wetter portion of the State, shows a gain of over 13,000 bales, while in the semiarid portion there was a loss of over 100,000 bales, and in the prairie section the loss was more than 200,000 bales.

It may be considered very little consolation that the wet-land or timber-land farmer fares no worse than his neighbor in the prairie, since the figures show the falling off in one section of 44 per cent and in the other 47 per cent, which means practical ruin in either event. This is a very serious phase of the whole boll-weevil situation, because these figures are constantly paraded to show that all cotton planters are doomed to the demnition bow wows, whether the highland or the lowland goes But what about the crop in those States where there is no boll weevil? Take the counties in the Yazoo Delta, where there was no weevil, and we find that the crop in 1905 fell off from the crop of 1904 in Washington County 35 per cent; in Sunflower County, 40 per cent; in Quitman County, 43 per cent; and in the whole delta, 38 per cent; and in eastern division of Texas, 48 per cent. In other words, the falling off in the wet and timbered section of Texas, overrun by the weevil, was only 10 per cent greater than the falling off in the wet and timbered delta of Mississippi, without the weevil.

The following year, 1906, being a favorable crop season, both sections—that is, the timbered district of Texas and the delta counties of Mississippi—returned to their normal yield. Taking 1904, the high-water mark in cotton production, as a basis for comparison, we find that the weevil-infected district of Texas produced 9,521 bales more than 1904, while the delta counties of Mississippi made 38,295 bales less than 1904.

	1904.	1905.	1906.
East Texas division (timbered and wet)Yazoo Delta		460,100 255,819

In view of all these facts, which are beyond any question or refutation, I believe it is unreasonable and unwarranted to predict or believe that cotton can not be produced in the delta counties simply because they are in a heavily timbered region and the annual rainfall is heavy, or to expect the damage from the ravages of the weevil to be any greater there than elsewhere or to any extent more prolonged.

Convincing as these figures are to me that cotton can be produced at a profit in spite of the weevil, I would not accept them if their lesson had not been confirmed by statements from gentlemen whose experience in the very territory affected enables them to speak with knowledge. I began by saying that I was not certain which was the element of greatest disaster, the destruction of cotton or the panic which the weevil produces when he first enters a community. I believe I would be warranted in saying that the panic has done more than the bug. I have a communication from a gentleman who has had a number of years' experience in different sections of Louisiana and Texas which have been overrun by the weevil, and I quote from it to show that my opinion is shared by others who are in a position to know whereof they speak:

The greatest disaster that seems to come to a section is the fright. Our people make their cotton largely by means of advances from merchants and bankers. All the advances are withdrawn upon the advent of the weevil; consequently the farmer is obliged to discharge his employees and cut down his acreage enormously. In addition to this, many small farmers that receive advances abandon their farms and remove to other territory or go into other business. The large farmers diversify extensively—that is, put in other crops—because they have not the means to pay for cultivating such large areas in cotton. This immediately reduces the crop, and then the alarmist cries "Look and see what an immense decline has occurred, due to the weevil." When the labor has gone and the small farmers have abandoned their farms and the larger farmers have commenced to diversify, it takes some time to get back to a normal condition, and the surprise is that the State of Texas should show such a record of recovery. We think it is largely due to the government work that has been put in, because we concede that the boll weevil is a bad pest, and we admit that certain things must be done.

A different kind of cotton must be planted, a cotton of earlier maturity, different habits of growth and fruit production, in some cases different bolls. Then the method of cultivation must be changed, all of which requires time and requires that some one give it attention to prevent great disaster coming to the people. It is my opinion that the Department of Agriculture has the problem well in hand, and will be able to handle it provided we furnish the means sufficient to send men into the field and do the following things:

First. Stop the alarm and show the people that a crop can be made, regardless of the presence of the weevil.

Second. Point out the kind of cotton that should be raised under boll-weevil conditions and how to cultivate it so as to secure a crop.

I have another letter which I shall print in full. It is from

I have another letter which I shall print in full. It is from the gentleman who has charge of this farm demonstration work, and who has had much experience in the campaign which has been waged against the boll weevil. I do not believe there is a man in the United States who is better qualified by training and experience to speak advisedly, and I commend his letter to the consideration of everyone who is earnestly seeking light on this most important subject. The letter is as follows:

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
BUREAU OF PLANT INDUSTRY,
Washington, D. C., February 1, 1909.

Hon. B. G. Humphreys, M. C., Washington, D. C.

Washington, D. C.

Dear Sir: You have frequently asked me in regard to the ravages of the boll weevil.

I have been raising cotton in Louisiana on a more or less extensive scale for twenty-two years, and have been familiar with the history of cotton in the Southern States during that period. In January, 1904, I opened an office in Houston and commenced the demonstration work on a large scale. The greatest obstacles that I had to overcome in this effort to make a cotton crop were the following:

1. The general impression that under certain conditions the people could not make a crop.

2. The withdrawal of advances by bankers and merchants, causing disaster.

1. The general impression that under certain conditions the people could not make a crop.

2. The withdrawal of advances by bankers and merchants, causing disaster.

3. The people were obliged to change their general methods; that is, change their variety of cotton planted and produce their own food supplies upon their own fathers. The requires time.

The requires pecially to blame for not being able to put in as much cotton as they would under other circumstances. I feel confident that, with proper attention, your people in Mississippi need not fear the advent of the weevil.

Respectfully, yours,

S. A. KNAPP, Special Agent in Charge.

Dr. S. A. KNAPP,
Farmers' Cooperative Demonstration Work,
Lake Charles, La.

Dear Sir: We, the undersigned committee for Harrison County, Tex., make the following preliminary report on the farmers' cooperative demonstration work done the past season in this county.
On account of the ravages of the boil weevil, Harrison County, Tex., was threatened with a disaster in the loss of the cotton crop that would affect every material interest in the county. The loss of money was not the sole consideration; our tenants and farm laborers would, to a large degree, leave the county, and would thus permanently injure our Commonwealth. In this emergency we appealed to the United States Department of Agriculture through you for advice and aid;
you came to our county and organized the work in February, 1907, under an arrangement by which the Department of Agriculture would furnish the superintendents and the people of this county would raise enough funds to buy improved seed for the demonstration farms.
The citizens of the county promptly raised and deposited in bank
$1,000 and later contributed $700 more, making a total of $1,700 invested in better seed. All agreements between the Department of Agriculture and the people were promptly and satisfactorily carried out.
Almost without exception this was the worst season this section has ever known for producing cotton, but, without reservation, we wish to make the following statements:

First. The results of the demonstration work have been in the highest degree satisfactory to our people, and they regard this movement as one of the greatest ever made for the upbuilding of our section.

Second. Our people are unanimous in asking for its continuance, and would regard the discontinuance of the work as an untold disaster.

Third. Among the many good things accomplished, we enumerate the following:

(a) It established over 300 demonstration farms, scattered over the entire county.

(b) It taught better culture and introduced better seed. These two items alone were wort

Dr. S. A. KNAPP, Washington, D. C.

Dr. S. A. Knapp, Washington, D. C.

Dear Sir: The year 1907 was a great factor for the cooperative demonstration work, for the fact that it demonstrated beyond a doubt that cotton could be made in a district where boli weevils were as bad as they were ever known anywhere. Our people became easy in their minds about the boll weevil, and there was not a farmer in Harrison County afraid to plant cotton in 1908. The year 1908 was one of unprecedented rainfalls and great floods, which ruined many fields of corn and cotton, and boll weevils were almost as numerous as they were in 1907. With an increased acreage of probably one-third over 1907, more than 17,000 bales of cotton of the 1908 crop have been produced according to the last ginner's report. It is estimated that the yield of cotton in Harrison County for 1908 will reach 20,000 bales.

In 1907 R. Scott, of Scottsville, a large planter who furnished his tenants, did not believe we could make cotton and fight the boll weevil. He called in all the men he could from his farms and had them cut cross-ties to pay for the provisions already furnished. The same thing was done by J. M. Furrh, at Elysian Fields, who is about the largest planter in Harrison County. These men and others who took the same course are working with us now, and they never mention the boll weevil with any fear.

The price of lands in Harrison County in the spring of 1907 was at the lowest ebb, ranging from $4 to $20 per acre. Since the successful fight against the boll weevil and the general advancement in agricultural work, lands have advanced from 100 to 500 per cent.
